Concerning suggestions for exploitation, what better than to use every available means for notifying folks that Harold is once more at your theatre. You might try the Lloyd street ballyhoo of a young man, by the proper aid of make-up and the famous shell-rims, simulating the celebrated comedian. Have him give out cards, denoting the name and the location of our theatre. You might, too, with distinct profit, put up a lobby sign in the shape of huge spectacle frames, which would undoubtedly convey the fact that a Lloyd picture is in the offing, something to which few picturegoers are immune.

'SPEEJACKS' SCENIC A WONDER Globe Encircling Cruise of Motor Boat Beautifully Photographed in Feature Film

and Mrs. A. Y. Gowen in Their 98 Foot Motor Boat.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

HERE is something really striking in the feature line—a scenic of such gorgeous proportions and enthralling interest that it provides wonderful entertainment, quite apart from its undoubted educational values, for adults and young ones alike. At full length, it is worthy of a place on any program, but should an exhibitor so desire, he can show the picture in two reel installments and rest assured that even in series form it will add materially to his box office receipts.

When Commodore Albert Y. Gowen, of the Cleveland Yacht Club, and his wife and crew steamed out of New York Harbor on August 21, 1921, in the little Speejacks, a voyage around the globe commenced which has no precedent in maritime history. With them went Ira J. Ingraham, former Burton Holmes cameraman, to whose skill is due the presentation of these views of strange people, stranger customs and nooks and corners of foreign lands hitherto unknown to the screen.

It was a honeymoon trip and probably the oddest ever taken by a pair of newly weds. Commodore Gowen is quoted as stating that he wouldn't risk it again for all the wealth in Uncle Sam's treasury, and after seeing some of the shots of the gallant little craft battling with wind and wave, to say nothing of the privations encountered by the party, we think he has the correct idea.

Sixteen months elapsed and 39,000 miles were covered before the Speejacks returned to her home port. As recorded in the log the route was as follows: New York, Panama, Tahiti, Samoa, Fiji Islands, New Caledonia, Sydney, Australia, New Guinea, Celebes Islands, Java, Singapore, Sumatra, Ceylon, India, Egypt, Crete, Greece, Sicily, Naples, Marseilles, Barcelona, Gibraltar, Cape Verde Islands, Porto Rico, Miami, Norfolk and back to New York.

Now while there is no attempt made at telling a story in this picture, it is packed so full of adventurous stuff and genuine thrills that the observer naturally reflects that a canny scenario writer could obtain material from it which could be utilized as basis for half a dozen screen melodramas. And considered from an artistic standpoint, there is little use in trying to describe the beautiful photography and natural settings. Mere printed words won't avail to convey an accurate impression of this film.

Evidently "nothing got by" Mr. Ingraham once he unlimbered his faithful camera. There are colorful shots of every port where the Speejacks stuck in her undaunted nose. India, land of mystery, contributes some wondrous Oriental bits, the ocean views are nothing short of amazing, in Bequa we gaze wide-eyed at the antics of the Fiji Islanders walking unconcernedly with bare feet on red-hot stones, previously subjected to the action of fire for twenty-four hours.

The girls of Java disport themselves in hula hula dances which are the real thing and guaranteed to make many a Broadway showman turn green with envy; and particularly gawky, yet fascinating, is the sight of the crawling savages of New Guinea, with their polka-dot faces," caused by an especially weird process of tattooing.

Space does not permit of further detail, but enough has been said to give the exhibitor an idea of what this feature has to offer his patrons. Tie-ups with schools and educational organizations are naturally suggested in exploiting it. Sporting goods stores, motor boat enthusiasts and publications, travel magazines, etc., can be utilized in spreading the tidings of what the little Speejacks and her daring crew accomplished.

'Mrs. Dane's Confession' Made Abroad, Carries Slender Appeal for Critical Audiences

MRS. DANE'S CONFESSION. F. B. O. Photoplay. Author Not Credited. Director, Michael Fertes. Length 4,800 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dorothy Robey Lucy Doraine
Her Husband William Farleigh
The Count ..Count Ludwig Salm Von Hoogstraten

Dorothy Robey, engaged to William Farleigh, jilts him in favor of a Count, who marries her, spends her fortune and murders her father, without being called to account for the crime. She obtains a divorce and weds Farleigh and a baby is born. The Count reappears, attempts to blackmail her and threatens to take away her child. In desperation she kills him. Arrested, she tells her story in full and is acquitted by the jury. The action develops in Paris.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THE best that can be said for this picture is that it may get by in the cheaper houses, or where a frequent change of bill occurs. It will not appeal favorably to critical audiences or meet the entertainment demands of high-class theatres.

The film was made abroad, and although only recently released, over two years have elapsed since the date of its production. Why "Mrs. Dane Confession" was kept securely canned for such a lengthy period is best known to those concerned in its marketing, but having finally emerged from seclusion it doesn't seem destined to achieve any great degree of popularity.

The story registers as pretty crude melodrama of the sort which a good many European directors are fond of playing horse with—dragging in a titled rake, an unhappy wife, a jilted lover, murder, blackmail following on a second marriage of the abused woman, the latter's acquittal by a sympathetic jury, after she squelches the villain for good.

There's a lot of sensational stuff smeared through the five reels, the action moves at a tolerably fast clip, but the whole thing is fearfully and wonderfully stagey, and none too well staged at that. For the feature never loses its artificial atmosphere, even in those situations where a thrill is worked up to. A palpable striving for effect on the part of the players destroys the illusion.

Poor direction has a great deal to answer for, no doubt, but the cause of the film's failure to entertain lies deeper than that. In the first place the narrative isn't suited to American tastes; not on account of moral shortcomings, for there's no sex suggestiveness in evidence, but because it is frankly disagreeable and not particularly convincing.

And candor compels the admission that not only Count Ludwig Salm Von Hoogstraeten, featured in the role of the wicked nobleman, but the other members of the cast belong distinctly in the "not so good" class.

The most important thing about the Count is his title, the weighty consciousness of which is probably responsible for the stilted Von Hoogstraeten walk and automatic movements, his general air being that of a singularly large and graceless puppet.

Lucy Doraine is a good-looking girl, who plays Dorothy Robey with rather too much vehemence and insufficient natural ease, while William Farleigh gives a colorless impersonation of the rejected but later successful suitor. The photography throughout is somewhat indistinct and suffers from bad lighting.

You can exploit this as a melodrama, of foreign construction, with sensational atmosphere, but don't go too far in praising the story, or your patrons may be disappointed.

None of the players are known to American fans, so their names cannot be said to possess advertising value.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Richard Morton George Larkin
Dolores Billie Dove
Pablo de Gardo Walter Long Rodolfo Emanon Earl Schenck
Estaban Manuel Camere
Theresa Ollie Kirby
Robert Morton Arthur Millett
President Dominguez J. L. Powell

Richard Morton rescues Dolores, a Spanish girl, from bandits who attack her in New Orleans. Learning that she has gone to Sevilla, Central America, he follows. A revolution is in progress. Richard heads the forces of President Dominguez and defeats the rebels. He saves Dominguez and Dolores from their enemy, Rodolfo Emanon. It transpires that she is the president's daughter. Richard wins her for his wife.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A GOOD program attraction! In localities where they want red-hot scraps and sizzling action all the way "Yankee Madness" ought to fill the bill to perfection. It bristles with improbabilities, but that sort of thing is to be expected in pictures of the straight hurricane melodrama type. The fact remains that lots of folks will enjoy this stormy riot of romance and revolution, and those who refuse to take it seriously will get a laugh.

Whenever a young American hero of film-land wanders into a Central or South American Republic it follows as a matter of course that he proceeds to boss the entire show, so to speak. So nobody will feel surprised when they see Richard Morton leading the Government forces to victory and injecting a touch of fancy pugilism into the game by walloping several adversaries in a bunch with fists that appear to pack a punch of dynamic violence.

If the action slacked up for a moment and gave the spectators time to think matters over, their interest in the whirlwind rush of events would lessen considerably. But director Charles Seeling keeps the tension tight by hurling one exciting situation upon the heels of another, there are no restful periods from the instant when gallant Dick first encounters Dolores and beats blazes out of three thugs attacking her, until a crashing finale is attained and the maiden becomes his exclusive property.

George Larkin is very much at home in roles of the Richard Morton kind. A splendid athlete, he needs no "double" in smashing melodramatic scenes where the average leading man would cut an uncommonly poor figure if called upon to perform certain physical feats which are merely child's play for the trained Larkin muscles. Also, he registers as an actor of no mean ability, and his performance as a whole deserves hearty commendation. He is well supported, Billie Dove playing the pretty senorita with alluring grace and Walter Long scoring a hit as the plotting revolutionary general.

The photography includes many fine tropical views, the army groups and engagements are exceedingly well filmed and clear lighting prevails.

You can exploit this as a lively melodrama with every foot of its five reels crammed with fast and exciting action. Play up George Larkin's work as the Yankee lover, he has a strong following among the fans, and mention Billie Dove, Walter Long and Earl Schenck, all good names with advertising value and exploitation possibilities.

Jim Jordan, ex-cowboy and service man, obtains a job on Anne Morse's ranch, where his buddy, Zack Williams, is working. Kincaid, owner of an adjoining quarry, plots to get possession of the Morse land, which contains valuable black marble deposits. Failing to foreclose an illegal mortgage, Kincaid attempts to take the land by force. Jordan and Williams fight off Kincaid's men with dynamite. Kincaid's schemes are defeated and Jordan weds Anne.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS latest Jack Hoxie feature ought to bring satisfactory box office returns in theatres where Western pictures are much in demand. There is the usual amount of melodramatic action, including some spectacular hand-to-hand fighting and riding stunts, well sustained love interest and a judicious sprinkling of comedy.

In one way the film may be said to diverge from the conventional line of average Western plots, as the story hinges upon the efforts of a chap who owns a black marble quarry to obtain possession of land belonging to the heroine, which he knows to be rich in that rare and salable article of commerce. This mercantile speculation leads up to a number of complications which result in a peculiarly effective and unusual scene, that in which Kincaid's attempt to seize the coveted property is foiled by the hero and his buddy, both ex-service men, who put their war knowledge to good use by scaring off the assailants with dynamite.

Jack Hoxie and his beautiful white horse are continually in evidence, the rider living up to the picture's title by doing some speed stuff which will win the admiration of adult patrons and appeal especially to the kids. His big scrap with the villain, which starts on a hill, includes a mad man-hunt through a tunnel and dive into a river, is as full of thrills and ginger as the most ardent lover of furious combat could desire.

A good deal of sympathy is aroused for the hero at the start, when he returns from France, to find himself out of a job and up against it generally. Although the "neglected ex-service" man is a pretty familiar sight on the screen nowadays, he usually finds favor with movie audiences, if the director is careful not to overdo the sentimental angle. In the present case, Robert Bradbury has handled his theme with good judgment, and Jim Jordan's predicament is stressed just sufficiently to earn him the liking of the spectators, without going to unnecessary lengths.

The love interest is well developed and excellent photography is ever in evidence.

Jack Hoxie plays the hero with his customary dash and energy, Margaret Morris is an alluring Anne Morse and vigorous support is given the principals by Robert McKim, Frank Rice, Julia Brown and other members of the cast.

Where Jack Hoxie is a strong favorite his name should be played up in the exploitation, Margaret Morris and Robert McKim are also worthy of mention. You can advertise this as a Western that hasn't a dull moment in it, with a story in which love, romance and thrills mingle in equal parts.

The Big Little Feature

WILL ROGERS TO BURLESQUE AMERICAN POLITICIANS

Hal Roach, the Pathe producer, appreciates that timeliness in a subject makes for additional box-office value from the exhibitor's angle. With the presidential year at hand and matter of political importance engaging the attention of the nation, Mr. Roach decided upon a series of three two-reel comedies, featuring Will Rogers in stories having a political background.

The first of these comedies has already been completed. The action is built around Rogers' election to Congress and is said to be an exceedingly clever bit of screen satire. The second, on which Rogers is now engaged under the direction of Rob Wagner, will show "Congressman" Rogers floundering helplessly but none the less manfully in the maze of Washington's social activities. In the third of the series, the Pathe star will be seen at the Court of St. James.

Advices from the Coast state that extreme precautions are being taken to avoid any suggestion of political partisanship or bias in the filming of these three pictures. The political atmosphere merely furnishes the setting for a profusion of scintillating comedy and gentle, inoffensive satire at which Rogers is so adept.

HARRY SWEET TURNS DIRECTOR

Harry Langdon, the Mack Sennett star who is appearing in a series of two-reel comedies started work last week on a new comedy special under the direction of Harry Sweet, who has heretofore been known on the screen as a featured comedian.

The transfer of Sweet's activities from the actors role to that of director is in consequence of a theory advanced by Richard Jones, supervising director for Mack Sennett. Mr. Jones is of the opinion that a man like Harry Sweet, who has himself been featured before the camera, can direct another star more efficiently than one who has never appeared before the camera. Mr. Jones is looking to Director Sweet to advance materially the difficult art of comedy direction.

In the new comedy subject, which Harry Langdon has started under Sweet's direction, Alice Day, Madeline Hurlock, and Andy Clyde are prominently cast in the support.

Good Opportunity is Muffed

NEELY EDWARDS and Bert Roach run the slap-stick route with the customary props and ideas that go to make up the average comedy. The story has possibilities, but they are lost in the maze of domestic wrangling. Edwards and Roach are good comedians but in this picture they have little to work with and the few laughs are won through great effort on the part of the team.

The story deals with what we may expect to see in 1964 when the fair sex has usurped all of man's privileges and forced him to accept the domestic duties. It shows women in politics and as leaders in business, and men as the object of chase.

Edwards takes the part of a demure husband and Bert Roach is the female ice dispenser who tries to win Neely's affection. Neely's wife discovers the affair and a battle ensues after which the husband promises to love, honor and obey.

The outstanding scene is that of a "flapperette" who vamps Neely while he is doing the family marketing. She inveigles him to ride in her limousine and when he objects to "petting" he is thrown from the machine and forced to make his way home on the hoof. He has evidently been in the same predicament before as he produces a pair of roller skates and makes the best of the situation.

As a whole, the picture is under the average, and although there is a large class of picture patrons who enjoy slap stick, they like to have originality injected into the action.

Pal Does His Bit

Universal 2 reels

Pal, the dog-star, goes through his paces in this picture. He is called upon to perform many feats that require exceptional training and it is too bad he is not utilized in making a picture of more value. This dog is one of the most intelligent animals on the screen and to use him in ordinary slap-stick is out of place. Slapstick and custard pie artists are as plentiful as dandelions in the spring so why waste the dog's talent in producing a mediocre picture?

Pal does his best to produce fun and whatever is amusing in "Checking Out" is due entirely to his efforts.

The picture centers around a hotel where Pal is assistant to the house detective. A band of robbers enter the hotel and as they are about to carry away the loot they are discovered. Pal holds the thieves at bay with revolvers until the police arrive. He takes several shots at the prisoners to demonstrate his marksmanship.

The picture will, no doubt, find favor with children and will perhaps appeal to dog lovers.

BOBBY VERNON TO MAKE SERIES FOR EDUCATIONAL

Announcement is made this week of the closing of contracts whereby Educational Film Exchanges will release a series of Bobby Vernon comedies beginning in the fall of this year, and adding another producing unit to the large program which E. W. Hammons president of Educational, is arranging for the season of 1924-25.

BARNEY OLDFIELD TO APPEAR IN PATHE COMEDY

Barney Oldfield, who has starred repeatedly on the auto racing course, is about to make his debut on the screen. Oldfield's initial appearance as a motion picture player will be made in a new Hal Roach comedy for Pathe, in which Charley Chase plays the featured role.

The fun film is built around Chase's exploits as a racing driver. Leo McCarey, the director, wanted to inject some genuine racing atmosphere into the picture; and with the assistance of H. M. Walker, title editor for Hal Roach and close friend of the racing celebrity, Mr. Oldfield was induced to appear in part of the action. Aside from his appearance in the news weeklies, his part in the Hal Roach comedy will mark the first time that Oldfield has taken his racing prestige to the screen.

MAY PRODUCE 'GULLIVER'

"Gulliver's Travels," Dean Swift's famous old story of the land of Lilliput, with its diminutive people, and Brobdignag, where men were giants, may soon live again in pictures. Plans are being discussed at Universal City for producing the famous old story, known to every child in the world, with a company of tiny actors and a giant or two, and a big all star cast.

Preliminary conferences were held during the week between William Koenig, general production manager, who has long talked of putting the noted tale into screen form, and James O'Neill, who visited Universal City with his entire troupe of Lilliputians—known in vaudeville as "Irving's Midgets," for the conference.

THE LINE IS BUSY

Work has begun on the eighth episode of F. B. O.'s new "Telephone Girl" series under the direction of Mal St. Clair. Alberta Vaughn is featured again as the switchboard queen, Gladys Murgatroyd, and the comics, Al Cooke, Kit Guard and Gertie Short remain in the cast. There will be twelve episodes in the series which is based on the Cosmopolitan Magazine stories.

He hobnobs with editors for Pathe and his pathos and sentiment never fails to obtain space for his "true" stories. He's a busy result getter.

'SAFE AND SANE' IS SAFE

Christie comedy 2 reels

Jimmie Adams shows his ability as a comedian in "Safe and Sane." The story is unusual and carries more of a plot than the average short subject. The cast is good and there is just enough slap stick to brighten it.

The story dwells with a safe opening contest in which Jimmy wins the prize. He was formerly granted a diploma in a first class burglar school where he graduated with high honors. He reformed and worked for a safe company and by chance knew the combination of the safe to be cracked in the contest. One of the provisions was that he must open a safe in the home of the safe merchant. He encounters competition and after many escapades manages to clean up on the real burglars and incidently win the hand of Vera Stedman, a female detective.

The unusual theme gives Adams an opportunity to display his wares and he takes advantage of it by putting over a clever laugh producer.

The outstanding scenes are the school room in the burglar university where the best crooks in the world are assembled. In a raid by the police Adams pretends to be a dummy and puts over a very clever stunt.

In trapping the burglars he is called upon for many tricks for his protection and he uses some unique methods to accomplish his task.

"Safe and Sane" is a good fast comedy and will fit well in any program.

A STAG AFFAIR

Pathe comedy 2 reels

Stan Laurel and Jim Finlayson are well cast in "Brothers Under the Chin." By a camera trick they are shown as a pair of infant twins sleeping in a clothes basket. The exaggerated basket and surrounding furniture give the desired effect.

The opening scene is an orphan asylum. Jim is adopted by a wealthy family but Stan exchanges places with him. Twenty years elapsed and Jim has become a rough sea captain and Stan is one of the idle rich. He is shanghaied and taken aboard his brothers ship where he suffers considerable rough treatment. The brothers finally discover the identity of each other by a birthmark on the chin of each. They celebrate in true brotherly style by ending in a riot.

Stan's escapades as assistant cook aboard the boat are funny. He creates many good laughs in his assumed innocent manner.

Jim is good as a tough seaman and he is aided and abetted by a worthy crew of cut-throats. The boat offers good opportunity for comedy and the swinging boom is used to good advantage.

This picture is out of the ordinary in that there is no heroine. It is strictly stag and with the exception of the first scene there are no women in sight.

"Brothers Under the Chin" is good clean comedy and will go over with any audience.

'OUR LITTLE NELL'

Dippy Doo Dads 1 Reel

This is an animal picture in which the monkeys, dogs and ducks perform in a miniature village. The monkeys in this comedy seem to possess almost human intelligence and they go through their acts in a way that almost makes one forget they are animals. They do everything in all seriousness and are very amusing.

The sets are well arranged. The village is complete in every detail with small trolley cars, trains, automobiles and "Main Street." It must require great patience and rehearsing to bring the animals to such a point of perfection. They are natural and not the least camera shy. They seem to enjoy their work and as they are natural comedians, the results are excellent.

Doo Dad comedies are becoming well known and this latest release is a little above the former ones which is saying something. It will appeal to anyone possessing a sense of humor.

'THE MEDICINE HAT'

Pathe 2 Reels

This is one of the Frontier Series in which Indian myths and legends form the basis for the picture. "The Medicine Hat" deals with the return of a chief from a Washington conference with the "Great White Father" in which he tells his experiences to members of his tribe. Among the possessions obtained in Washington is a large beaver hat, which he takes to be a mark of distinction and values it highly.

His daughter while practising with a bow and arrow shoots an arrow through the hat and in his anger the father gives the girl to a thieving Indian for marriage. She is rescued by her lover, who repairs the damage to the hat.

The picture while of some interest in showing the simplicity of the Indian is rather long drawn out and almost devoid of plot. It lacks the historical value of other pictures of the series and fails to hold the interest.

It may fit in with a comedy program but in itself contains little entertainment value.

'ON THE JOB'

Fox Comedy 1 reel

You will laugh at this picture. Three chimpanzees are the center of attraction and their antics would bring smiles to the Great Stone Face. The seriousness with which the animals enter into their work is in itself amusing. They are called upon to act many character roles and they plug along in their methodical way and they cannot fail to make a distinct hit.

Of course the picture has no plot but it is full of comedy and a little thing like plot is overlooked in an endeavor to get the best results with the animals.

They look as though they enjoy their work immensely and enter into the spirit of the picture with a vengeance. It is remarkable the number of tricks these monkeys can do. It is an interesting study to watch their antics and almost human grasp of situations.

This picture will fit in any program and will please everyone.

'IF NOAH LIVED TODAY'

Cartoon Comedy 1 Reel

Paul Terry creates a nice comedy with the flood theme. He shows the modern Noah calling together the animals with wireless and he takes them aboard the Ark, which happens to be an airship. The craft floats serenely above the raging waters until two skunks, that have been riding along in a trailer, decide to seek the companionship of the Ark occupants. Trouble starts, the race around the outside of the big balloon is funny. The airship takes nosedives and does many peculiar antics but finally peace reigns on the craft again.

It is up to the usual high standard of Terry's cartoons and will be sure to please everyone.

PATHE REVIEW NO. 15

Brief Subjects 1 Reel

This reel contains some interesting subjects. It shows the much maligned cactus being prepared for edible purposes. The heart is taken from the thorny shell and boiled in sugar cane to form a sweetmeat.

The paper zoo shows the manufacture of paper mache animals for display purposes. The animals are made to move in a lifelike manner that is amazing.

Color shots of Florida form one of the interesting scenes in the reel. It shows the Land Sunshine in all its glory and makes one want to crank up the flivver and migrate south.

SHOWMANSHIP

Bass Drum 'Bally' for Penny Piccolo Pictures

The Public, Which Supports You and Your Theatre, Will Stick With You As Long As You Are Right, and Will Leave You When You Are Wrong

SHADES of "showmanship"—what sins are committed in thy name! Could the astute showman of the past, the lamented P. T. Barnum, "fool 'em" again today? The advertising campaigns of some exhibitors, exploitation men and distributors, lead one to believe that Barnum still has many converts; hundreds of theatre managers, distributors and press agents still have their tails where their heads ought to be and their heads where their tails should dangle.

The weird music of the carnival lot has been supplanted by the Y. W. C. A. worker who chaperons her party through the animal tent or perhaps a ride on the merry-go-round. No longer is there room for the leather-lunged spieler who promises "the greatest show in all this wide world." The public is wise.

Webster fails to define the word "showmanship," and if Noah had no use for it, why not take a tip from him and substitute the word "merchant"—"one who buys and sells goods."

Paper and ink can describe anything; advertising can tell your story, can sell your goods. Shakespeare confessed that the name of a rose did not describe it; he was thinking of words. An exploitation man should be able to describe a "rose of a show" so that the public can smell it, and pay for its fragrance in dollars and cents at the theatre box office.

The average box office suffers from misrepresentation, false advertising and false prices. An exhibitor in one town charges fifty cents for a fifteen cent show, while a brother exhibitor in a nearby town charges fifteen cents for a fifty cent show. Every exhibitor should first properly label his "merchandise" at the real—not reel—value. The public "shops" for movies just like the housewife does a marathon to the downtown department store for a bargain in kitchen utensils. After establishing price, give away "service," that's the exhibitor's "coupons." Don't misrepresent—the public realize how many "Covered Wagons" are in "western trails."

The producer who exhibits a film in Pittsburgh for two dollars and in a nearby town for fifty cents, hurts not only all Pittsburgh exhibitors but the entire industry. Charge two dollars or charge fifty cents. The laughs are on the film fraternity—not the public. They can wait.

Exploitation and advertising "sold" the motion picture to the public, but for the past two years, these same agencies have slowly been unselling the public and the press. The caravan of exploiters sent forth put to shame the charge of The "Light" Brigade. A few brought home the bacon; the majority were as "light" as the Brigade. They tried to fool the editors with weird stories and exaggerated copy. They served themselves first and then their employers; they publicized "ME." The successful press agents realize that

Lobbyology

Barnum Was Wrong

The day of Barnum and his circus methods has passed forever. The people no longer enjoy being fooled. After all, the great Lincoln was the better showman. "You can't fool all the people all the time."

If you exploit every program as "the greatest show on earth, your patrons will soon lose confidence, then when you do offer them something exceptional, they will think you are just ballyhooing another one of "those things."

Every "western" is not a "Covered Wagon"—don't try to tell your good friends, the public, differently. Give them credit for human intelligence. All good businessmen are showmen; we want all showmen to be good businessmen.

the editors want their copy if it means circulation, news value or co-operation with the advertiser. Their copy lands.

The writer has never been an "Unsung Hero." My signature never has appeared on the register of any association of motion picture advertisers. I regret I cannot boast that I have ever "put over" a story.

LITTLE credit was due me for the columns of publicity I secured for the "Dime Battleship Movement" in New York City. It brought home the story of "preparedness"—that was news. Some have said that my advertising campaign on "Mickey" was phenomenal; to the contrary, I was selling graphophone records—that's salesmanship. When I piloted Theda Bara as she vamped her way to Heaven with Billy Sunday, I was selling Tulsa, Okla. When I escorted Clara Kimbell Young to the Houston Texas

Ship Channel, I was selling Houston, Texas. When I took a wooden whale to the top of Pike's Peak in a snowstorm, I was not selling W. W. Hodkinson, but the cool climate of Colorado compared with the sweltering heat of New York City. And now I am selling Rowland and Clark Theatres—that gives me a chance to say that "Pittsburgh is as big as New York to a Pittsburgher."

These incidents are not mentioned for self-praise, but rather in an effort to prove that publicity and advertising will be given to a theatre or a production if the newspapers can be convinced that they or their city will get an even break. What the motion picture industry needs is modern showmen and business men—men who will take an active part in the civic betterment of their community. Many exhibitors display their advertising, send their cashier into their box office and hide themselves away from their public. Can you blame their patrons if, perhaps, they speak adversely of the theatre managers?

INSTEAD of looking upon the theatre manager as a potent factor in their community filling the gap of providing amusement and furthering the cause of education, he is pictured parading about with a striped vest, a brilliant hued necktie, an African diamond, his pockets jammed with money. This false impression of the motion picture owner could be changed if he would permit his personality to enter into the active life of the community in which he operates his theatre.

The successful showmen are those whose theatres have a "soul," the atmosphere of which reflects the personality of their managers. There are many small town exhibitors who can successfully operate theatres on Broadway, but how many Broadway managers could successfully operate a theatre at Kankakee?

Great American exhibitors owe their success to the prominent part that they, as individuals, have played in the life of their respective communities.

I wish that I were able to whisper into the ear of every American showman, these words: "Join the Chamber of Commerce and the Civic Clubs of your city and the community will champion your cause."

According to David Harum's perversion of the Golden Rule, we should do others and do them "fust," but exhibitors had better not put too much confidence in David—he was a joker. To advertise on the square and run theatres in a business-like manner is an ethic which every successful theatre owner adopts.

P. T. Barnum, were he alive today, would have a hard task landing a job as an advance agent. Showmen of old meet the theatre businessmen of 1924!

This twenty-four sheet shown at the recent T. N. T. reveal formed the third episode of the comic version of "Romeo and Juliet" with Bebe Daniels as Juliet, Richard Dix as Romeo and Ernest Torrence as Friar Laurence. The poster advertised the show "As the Press Agent Saw It" but no one else did

METRO DOLL SERIES TAKES WITH SCREEN FANS

A whole series of movie celebrity dolls, one for each picture, is the latest exploitation novelty to be evolved by Metro Pictures Corporation. Since the bringing out of the Jackie doll some time ago, these novelties have become highly popular with the public and are distributed by theatres and stores all over the country. The new dolls are expected to be adopted in thousands of homes.

The first doll of the series already issued is a character replica of Laurette Taylor in "Happiness," a picturization of J. Hartley Manners' play. It was designed by Margaret Vale, a niece of President Wilson, and manufactured by the Jane Gray Company, which will put out the entire series. It is now on sale in the art, needlework and toy departments of Wanamaker's, Stern's, Macy's, Altman's, McCreery's and other leading stores throughout New York City and by department stores throughout the country.

Among the others will be "The Lady Known as Lou," after the character which Barbara La Marr portrays in the Sawyer-Lubin production, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," one of Lillian Gish in "The White Sister," a Viola Dana doll, one on Jean Tolley who appears in the J. E. Williamson-Ralph Ince production of "The Uninvited Guest," a doll depicting Mae Murray as "Mademoiselle Midnight," and a he-doll called "The Sheik," after the character that Ramon Novarro portrays in Rex Ingram's newest production, "The Arab."

POLAR FLIGHT POST CARDS ONE DOLLAR EACH

The undeniable value of the window tie-up was again pointed decisively by the crowds endeavoring to view Gimbel Brothers, New York, display in connection with the approaching trans-polar air flight. Ronald Amundsen, South Polar discoverer, Lieut. R. Davison, U. S. N., and Haakon H. Hammer, who has flown to within four hundred miles of the North Pole, will attempt to fly over the Stick stopping long enough to nail our flag on the top of the world. This will clinch America's discovery claim established by Admiral Peary. The plane will be equipped with two Rolls-Royce motors, and in addition to wings for the air will have pontoons for sea, wheels for land and skis for ice travel.

It is necessary to procure additional funds for equipment, and $200,000 will be raised by Gimbel Brothers through the sale of post-cards at one dollar per, the entire proceeds to further the purposes of the expedition. Cards specially printed with a map of the North Pole are addressed to the purchasers and sent to Christiania, Norway. Here the Norwegian government will affix a specially designed stamp to be used on this occasion. From Spitzbergen the cards will be carried by plane over the pole to Point Barrow, Alaska, mailed to Seattle, and thence back to the buyer.

If the expedition is lost, the cards may never come back. That is the chance one takes—small compared to the risks assumed by the Polar mail carriers.

WHAT ARE JOTS!

Under the caption "What is it?" Dick Nolen, of the No'en Theatre, Seymour, Ark., advertised "JOTS—not candy," "JOTS—cannot be eaten, but a delectable dish to serve up," "JOTS—will refresh tired business men," "JOTS will dispel blues." Then when the time came to show the picture, he announced "Judgment of the Storm."

REALISTIC CUT-OUT DISPLAY

The Family Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, created an attractive lobby display for its presentation of Pathe's picture version of Emerson Hough's novel

'BEAU BRUMMEL' WINS ON BROADWAY

Up in Warner Brothers' projection room we got a preview slant at John Barrymore's portrayal of "Beau Brummel." We gave it the double-o from an exploitation angle. From an artistic viewpoint it's a perfect cameo; for exploiting possibilities it's a wow.

Brummel window tie-ups on Broadway are like mushrooms. Go to lunch and before you get back there will be a couple of new ones. The Great Wet Way looks like an old home week for the Beau. In addition to the displays mentioned last week, Grey's Drug Store has a big window of make-up materials—rouges, powders, manicure implements. A Times Square jeweler displays the "original" snuff box used by the Beau over a hundred years ago. Beauty parlors and hair-dressers are all in line, and, in fact, every good store location from Columbus Circle to Herald Square carries its tribute to this latest "Classic of the Screen."

The Los Angeles "Times" devoted two solid pages to the picture in connection with the showing at the California Theatre. The caption reads: "Beau Brummel Points Way to Mens' Style Renaissance." Why not a "dress-up" week in your town when you show the picture? They'll all come in, for there is a logical tie-up with everything pertaining to self-adornment and personal elegance—even a different style in earrings and a fetching way for the flappers to fix their hair.

'ANNA CHRISTIE' PROLOGUE LAUDED IN LONDON

A feature of the recent London opening of Tom Ince's film version of Eugene O'Neill's soul-searching drama was the prologue staged by the Palace Theatre—and the competition to secure a girl to render it.

It was advertised that the winner would receive the British equivalent of an American five-spot for each minute she worked. Some three hundred girls from all walks of life responded to this lure, and after a day trying out contestants one girl was selected.

The prologue may be spoken in about three minutes. It is a realistic bit composed by Gilbert Frankau. The theme does not touch upon the film story, but purports to be a straight talk from a woman of "Anna Christie's" type to the audience on the life she leads.

The picture was held at the Palace for four weeks equalling the record of Norma Talmadge's "Smilin' Thru." The prologue is too lengthy to print, but if you want a copy to use at your showing of the film, write to the Exploitation Editor, EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, and he will forward one to you.

How National Publicity Campaigns are Planned and Executed

THE exploitation campaign on Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man," produced by Principal Pictures and released by First National is worthy of attention. It is interesting to know how these things are planned. An analytical publicity conference resolved that Wright is one of the most popular authors, his books having been read by some millions of people. Principal Pictures holds the screen rights to his stories. Hence, the first of these picturizations must be emphasized, and all advertising must center about the author. The secondary stress must be placed upon the particular story, its title, its theme, love-interest and self-sacrifice. In a word—its appeal.

The territory was then divided, different forces handling the publicity in the East and West. The three big openings were at the Cameo, New York, Loew's State, Los Angeles, and Loew's Warfield, San Francisco. All occurred about the same time and there was absolute uniformity of exploitation action. The opening shot of the campaign was a general nation-wide newspaper publicity smash, followed by 25,000 broadsides, in two colors telling the exhibitors all about it, then twenty-five test bookings were arranged in key cities and campaigns started ten days prior to the showings.

Before the Cameo opening, 120 stands, 400 six-sheet boards, 500 three-sheets and 1,200 one-sheets were put out. The twenty-fours were divided between colored sheets and blocks. Through the publishers of the photoplay edition of the novel, five hundred window tie-ups were effected. There were fifty independent displays of high character, newspaper contests as to when a man is a man and much publicity regarding the author. Four men, their bodies concealed in man-size reproductions of the book, paraded Broadway and Fifth Avenue. Sorcho's famous calliope toured about the city with signs announcing the show. The old adage that "it pays to advertise" isn't a bromide—it's an axiom. * * *

WINDOW TIE-UPS URGED BY PUBLISHERS

Grosset & Dunlap, publishers, who have gone extensively into the business of re-issuing novels in photoplay editions, have printed a booklet called "Getting the Movie Crowd Into Your Store." The front cover is illustrated with a photograph

AEROPLANES AND SKYROCKETS CREATE "GOING UP" ATMOSPHERE

When the Palace Theatre, El Paso, Texas, offered Associated Exhibitors' laugh-producing comedy, Manager Edgar Hart told patrons what was showing through this lobby display. Hart enjoyed an unusual "gate" and the fans enjoyed "Doug" MacLean's characterization of the aviator who had never flown of the crowd trying to enter the California Theatre, Los Angeles, for the opening of "Little Old New York." That picture gets additional publicity inside the covers, as do "In the Palace of the King," "Under the Red Robe," and other Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases based on popular fiction.

The publishers urge the value of book-seller-exhibitor tie-ups, when the screen version of a novel is shown as a means of "making book families of movie families." Incidents are cited where book-shops sold a hundred copies a day, and sometimes as high as twenty-five copies an hour for a hundred hours, of novels being pictured at local theatres. Special stress is laid on the efficacy of window tie-ups, and many illustrations on this point are contained in the booklet. One page is devoted to pictures of the window display material used in photoplay edition tie-ups. * * *

FREE POLA NEGRI CURL GETS MATINEE CROWD

Howard Waugh discovered a new wrinkle—or was it a new twist—for campaigning Pola Negri in "Shadows of Paris." A week before the picture opened, and during the run of the picture at his Palace Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., Waugh had an expert hair-dresser in the lobby giving any woman who wanted one a Pola Negri curl, free. It was really an expert job which would have cost $1.25 in a beauty shop. After the first few women timidly experimented with the new fashion, the rush of applicants required the hair-dresser to put in eight hours a day.

The stunt cost Waugh exactly thirty-seven dollars. It was a perfect tie-up with Bry's the largest department store in town. Waugh convinced the advertising manager that the advantages for the Beauty Shoppe of the store in having an exhibit in the Palace lobby would repay the effort. Waugh and the store split the cost of the operator, and of twenty-five thousand inserts, which went with every package from the store directly into the homes.

The store was more than pleased with the increased volume of business done by the Beauty department, as apparently a new style in coiffures has been established. Manager Waugh enjoyed exceptional publicity and the picture did business accordingly. He is one showman who is thoroughly sold on the idea that it pays to sit up late nights thinking.

ICE AND SNOW IN CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles saw a different sort of "climate" when this ballyhoo toured the palm-lined streets of the "City of Angels" creating atmosphere for Warner Brothers' absorbing picture of life in the land of perpetual winter

NEWS MERCHANTS TURN OUT FOR BALLY

Hot Cross Buns

Guy Kenimer tied-up with the Federal Baker shops in Jacksonville, on the "pass with a purchase" stunt. It was advertised that Kenimer would give one pass with every tenth purchase. We hope he didn't fool anybody and make it a baker's dozen. The pass was good for one admission, which is the ideal arrangement as every pass that comes back brings a paid admission with it.

More Windows

Getting a group of windows is one thing, but making every window an individual tie-up is a horse from another garage. Charles McFarland did it with fourteen windows in Houston for SCARAMOUCHE at the Queen Theatre.

A drugstore sign read "Follow beautiful Alice Terry, star of 'Scaramouche,' and keep that schoolgirl complexion by using Palm Olive products." A music store window was plastered with cover sheets of "Rose of Picardy," the song being featured at the Queen. In a millinery store there were fifteen stills from the picture some of them pasted on hat-box covers. A picture of Alice Terry in a hat of the 1794 vintage went with the line see our "1924 advance styles." And so on down the line. There was an ingenious little touch of personality in every window which made a real tie-up with the picture.

Gets Consul's O. K.

With the permission of the Italian vice-consul to mention the Consulate in a direct mail campaign, Howard Waugh prepared a good letter capitalizing the consular endorsement of THE ETERNAL CITY, by making a two fold appeal to the Italian and American residents. To the former the mention of the consul was like a command to see the picture at the Palace Theatre, and to the American residents it gave the picture official dignity. Waugh used the only Italian language paper in Memphis to reach the large mass of Italians outside of town. Here he stressed the fact that Mussolini appears in the picture.

Noah's Ark

Like the babbling brook, First National's CIRCUS DAYS seems to go on forever, revealing exploitation possibilities. The story from the Capitol Theatre, Reading, Pa., centers around a platform inanimate circus display built in the center of the lobby.

An artistic arrangement of the wooden animals and a novel sign card on the front of the platform drew such attention to this advance advertising stunt that it was retained during the week the picture played.

Rings the Bell

The twenty-four sheet gave W. F. Brock, Knoxville, Tenn., his inspiration for a unique lobby on CONDUCTOR 1492, at the Strand Theatre. This has a large reproduction of a trolley car with the heads of several men and women passengers in the windows. Brock cut off their heads, mounted them individually and then collectively on little rockers which were bolted to a motor. When the motor turned over the faces in the windows of the trolley car bobbed back and forward in a very realistic manner. It got a laugh.

Their First Picture

Somewhere in England a "cinema" manager dug up sixty people in his county who had never seen a motion picture. He got oodles of publicity by inviting them to his show. Also he carried some of them to the theatre in motor cars—a method of locomotion which they had never before experienced. The newspapers fell hard.

We wonder how many people there are on this side of the pond who have never witnessed a screening. Any over your way?

EXPLOITATION IDEAS

Bicycle Built for Two

The fact that First National's SECRETS shows Eugene O'Brien and Norma Talmadge eloping on one of the old fashioned, high bicycles suggests a ready tie-up for exhibitors on this picture with any automobile agency.

The thought is that the.....car will make elopement a much easier process for the present generation than it was for their grandparents.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

Did the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, hang out the S R O sign after pulling this stunt for First National's "Painted People?" We ask you

Local Talent Attracts

Isobel Beatley who is well known in Charlotte as an entertainer but has made only one public appearance, was secured by George E. Brown to do a solo dance in Russian costume for FASHION ROW at the Imperial, Charlotte, N. C. The point is that when local talent is used, it always attracts attention and additional patronage. Try it.

Two Birds—One Stone

Another theatre to use the special matinee stunt for THE ACQUITTAL with prizes for the ones who guessed who killed John Prentiss, was the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ga. But in awarding prizes, J. Wright Brown showed a flash of form by making the prizes photoplay editions of "The White Sister" which were rubber stamped with the information that the picture was coming.

Ushers in French Apache costumes for the engagement of SHADOWS OF PARIS at the Queen Theatre, Houston, gave the house atmosphere. The French national emblem was conspicuous on the side walls.

No Giants Allowed

Norman Kerry, who plays the male lead in MERRY-GO-ROUND is six feet one inch in height. Why not issue a single pass to every man in your town who proves he is just that tall by being measured in your lobby. Or give one free ticket for each additional inch of height. If there are a lot of eight-footers in your vicinity—lay off.

Marriage Tie-Up

The stage of the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., served as an altar when Lee Balsley arranged for a real wedding tie-up with THE MARRIAGE CIRCLE. The theatre presented the couple with a golden marriage circlet for the bride and fifty dollars in cash, which we hope was split 50-50.

'Driving' for Funds

The exchange couldn't supply the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama, with accessories for its engagement of "Judgment of the Storm." Did Manager T. G. Coleman "do the dutch?" No, sir. T. G. stepped right out and arranged a benefit ticket sale with the Axis Club, the leading women's club in town, and most of its six hundred members went out ticket selling.

Coleman sold them the tickets at box office prices, and the fair salesladies added a trifle to make some money for a new clubhouse. The tickets were specially printed. On one of the most important corners in the city, the ladies had a table where tickets were sold, and advertising cards for the picture were on display.

My Word! Fawncy That!

Smiling Harry Rowson, the London film magnate who bought Douglas MacLean's "Going Up" and "Yankee Consul" for Britain, believes English exhibitors display a more cunning sense of humor than their American brethren. He cites the following examples from London programs:

A Piccadilly manager announces:
"ONE WEEK OF LOVE"

For three nights only

A Strand Theatre program proclaims:
"The management reserves the right to exclude any lady they think proper."

A Marble Arch "cinema" advertises:
"THOSE WHOM THE GODS DESTROY"

With a cast of 8,000

We once put in four years abroad in the Consular Service. It was this "Yankee Consul" show which gave us the idea that "this is the life." You may judge we love a laugh. You're right. If you have any good ones send 'em in.

"Spring Has Come"

Once the surest harbingers of festive Springtime were the Bock beer signs and the swinging doors on the Volstead soda stores. Now these are "barred" like "Watery Will" Anderson, but Spring comes tripping along with her well known regularity.

Hail her, showmen! Dress up your lobby, and the theatre too, with fresh flowers and a few green things. Everything comes to life in the Springtime. Also don't overlook Easter. See that there are a few lilies about even though they be "Lilies of the Field."

Broadcasting 'Maytime'

"Maytime" is an adaptation of a very popular light opera. It's musical score is familiar to everyone, including "Radio Raymond" Thurston, manager of the Temple Theatre, Lockport, New York.

When the Preferred Picture was shown at the Temple, Thurston arranged to have the "Maytime" orchestra accompaniment broadcasted through Station WMAK at Lockport. The stunt built unusual business.

WEEKLY "Do You Remember?" contests are being staged with success in Seattle, through the co-operation of an evening paper and three leading exhibitors. The paper gives the publicity and prints the best reminiscences of the "good old days" of the movies, and for the three best letters submitted each week, the various managements contribute a pair of tickets apiece. Incidentally programs at these houses are getting nice publicity.

THREE competitors who won prizes in the amateur ad-writers contest which was held by The Citizen newspaper of Ottawa, wrote the copy for special advertisements of local houses, including Loew's, Franklin, and Regent Theatres. Contestants chose any firm or enterprise in the city on which to write advertisements and three of those which were selected as best among hundreds of offerings were for the theatres noted. The ads as written were used in the paper.

A CORONA typewriter was the special prize given to the Junior Reporter who wrote the best review of Mary Pickford's new photoplay, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," when it was showing at the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, Ky. Second, third and fourth prizes consisted of pencils.

The Corona was awarded through an exploitation tie-up arranged between the theatre management and the Louisville Courier-Journal. Junior reporters include all pupils of the sixth, seventh, eighth grades and first year high school classes of the Louisville public schools. A special Saturday morning screen was arranged and 1,400 tickets issued for Junior reporters. They all wrote 200 word reviews of the picture.

PERSONAL: "Don't Be 'The Meanest Man in the World.'" If you have any good ideas send them to the Exploitation Editor and let your brother exhibitors benefit.

THIS legal looking document summoned many to the box-office. The reverse side was a replica of a regular summons. Ralph Rossiter, of C. B. C., originated the idea

ADVERTISING AIDS

TAKING up the theme of the picture, a reputation shattered by scurrilous newspaper sensationalism, the Fox Theatre, Philadelphia, decided to show the public just what it would be like in the advertising of First National's "Her Reputation."

It played up a sensational headline under the caption: "Prominent Film Star Implicated in Mysterious Shooting." The plainly marked "Advertising" sign gave it away; but the idea was worked out realistically to show people just how damagingly an innocent person could be harmed by sensational news handling. It brought the punch of the idea home in advance and helped sell many patrons who were interested in the theme.

EVEN in far off Shanghai, China, teaser ads are in vogue. An English newspaper published there contains an advance ad for a showing of "Enemies of Women." No theatre was named, nor was it divulged that a motion picture was being exploited. The advertisement read: "Enemies of Women Club, Organized by the Shanghai Bachelors Group. Watch for Announcement of the First Meeting." Then another appeared: "Enemies of Women! Bachelors Watch for Further Advertisements."

That is as far as we know at present, but if the idea indicated was carried through, curiosity must have been aroused.

A MOTHERS' MATINEE on Saturday morning attracted attention to Manager McKee's Million Dollar Heilig Theatre, Seattle, during his showing of "The Lullaby."

Manager McKee advertised that he wanted every mother in the city to see the show, and the first three hundred mothers who presented coupons clipped from the newspapers were admitted as guests of the house.

WHEN "Scaramouche" played the Columbia Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., the management scattered through the "Want Ad" section of the "Arizona Gazette" on each day for a week, three names of citizens for whom a free ticket was waiting at the box office.

In Witness Whereof We Promise
You the Best Entertainment You Ever Had

FIRST NATIONAL'S "The Galloping Fish" got away to a flying start at the Strand Theatre, Cincinnati. At least part of the credit must be given to a unique four page herald which announced the advent of the picture in an original manner.

A small booklet was issued with a cover caption: "What I Know About the Oil Scandal." The second page was blank indicating that the author knew nothing whatever about it. The third page stated that he did know that there was a laugh to every foot of Ince's latest comedy film, "The Galloping Fish." The closing was: "It's a Whale of a Story."

GOOD advertising helped "The Marriage Circle," when it was shown at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Ga. There is a new bus line on Peachtree Street which operates ten busses. Heretofore these have been taboo on advertising, but Manager Howard Kingsmore arrived at an arrangement by which he secured exclusive rights to advertise his theatre's showings. Each bus carried an outside sign and a smaller card inside telling the riders about the picture.

Announcement cards like wedding invitations went to five thousand prospective customers. On top of the theatre was a one hundred foot banner carrying five foot letters. Jewelry stores displayed wedding rings, and other shops arranged wedding gift windows linked up with the picture through framed stills.

A newspaper teaser campaign was conducted for a week before the showing, paving the way for opening day advertising by having all copy fit within a dark circle.

Today and Tomorrow
The Breathless Moment

It's the Bunk! It's the Bunk!

I had a preview of "Breathless Moments" a few nights ago and invited a number of my friends to see same.

After the picture was over, some time about morning, I asked my friends how they liked it.

Well, I sure was surprised when someone said excellent; another, very, very good; another enjoyed it immensely and others were loud in their praise.

But my opinion of this picture is that it's the bunk.

Of course, if everybody in this world thought the same about things we would be in an awful rut, wouldn't we?

I have a contract on this picture, consequently I have to run it.

If you care to come and see it I hope and trust you'll enjoy it, I didn't.

Tried and Proved Paramounts!

RELEASED only a few weeks ago, here are four more Paramount Pictures that have already established themselves in the front rank of the season's box-office successes. You don't take any chances playing these big winners. They've already proven their worth.

Ask the man who has played them. Read his opinions of them quoted below:

"WEST OF THE WATER TOWER"

The most sensationally selling novel of 1923 makes an even more sensational picture, starring Glenn Hunter. With Ernest Torrence, May McAvoy, George Fawcett, and others.
William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, says: "The picture is an excellent one and will be so pronounced by those seeing it."

"FLAMING BARRIERS"

George Melford's roaring melodrama of thrills, love and comedy. Jacqueline Logan, Antonio Moreno, Walter Hiers. By Byron Morgan, author of the Wally Reid auto racing yarns.
Clark and Edwards, Palace Theatre, Ashland, O.: "Very good. Everyone seemed pleased. Atmosphere just right."

"THE HUMMING BIRD"

We could quote a hundred opinions about this one, and they'd all be the same—a wonder! Gloria Swanson's greatest. Sidney Olcott Production. Russell Armstrong, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Ill.: "One of the outstanding pictures of the year. Many told me this was the best picture I've ever run. That is saying a lot, as we are running the cream."

"HERITAGE OF THE DESERT"

Zane Grey story, featuring Bebe Daniels, with Ernest Torrence and Noah Beery. Directed by Irvin Willat.
Ingersoll and Boget, American Theatre, Sandwich, Ill.: "Here's a good picture. Will please them all. Drew big in spite of bad roads. New print."

Jezra Jazabel's Reputation

He Tread on a Bed of Roses Yet Not a Single Thorn Ever Pricked Him—For He Measured His Steps and Picked His Way Cautiously

JEZRA JAZABEL had a reputation for being a live wire. He once pulled a stunt in his theatre that made the whole town look up and take notice, and those who hadn't been present heard so much about it from others that they talked about him as though they had been convinced by actual evidence that he was a live wire.

At any rate Jezra had established a reputation for being a stepper and everybody was willing to fall in and step right along with him. As a matter of fact most everyone had long since forgotten just what it was that had first convinced them that he was a compelling force, but they knew he had the reputation and they followed right along after him.

And Jezra tread on a bed of roses yet not a single thorn pricked him, for he picked his path cautiously. He had found his way into the good graces of his public and he was determined that he should remain on the throne. He had gotten them to the point where they took it for granted that what he offered them for entertainment would please them and they never stopped to question, they never dared doubt.

And Jezra's patronage continued to grow. Those who knew him passed the good word on to the newcomers and Jezra found that his reputation was just about as firm as the rock of Gibraltar. But in justice to him it must be admitted that he never took advantage of this confidence. He made every effort to justify this trust—he was a wise showman indeed.

When it came to booking pictures he spent time and thought over the selection. He didn't just take what came along, he made it his business to learn something about the film first. It wasn't his object to get the picture before the next fellow—his aim was to get the picture he knew his patrons wanted, and if it meant waiting a few months, it didn't matter to Jezra because he knew his patrons would wait with him.

You see he had established a reputation for his theatre, too. Folks felt at home there. There was such a nice feeling of warmth and intimacy about the place, it was so much more pleasant to see a picture there than across the street where the whole atmosphere was so impersonal. Here they felt that the picture was being shown primarily to entertain them, not to make money for

Now as was natural since he could trace all his affluence to the fact that he had established a good reputation, Jezra was a firm believer in the value of reputation. He knew his patrons' good opinion of him was built on a strong foundation and he felt that every good reputation was justified by as good a basic reason.

So he determined that the selection of his pictures should be made from pictures with good reputations. But he would make sure first that their reputations were really well established. He would keep in touch with the sources of such information. And having arrived at this decision he clung to it. He followed the newspapers diligently to see what they had to say about the new films, he read the trade papers to get impressions, he followed other theatres to see how the pictures pulled with their audiences.

He studied every angle of every picture he thought would appeal to his audience. He watched to see how the picture was making out at other box offices, and what other showmen were using to get the public interested in the film. And this information he was getting from a source that he knew was reliable. He followed the magazine which contained it, with all the interest that is manifest by a man who is watching his entry in the races speed around the track. And he found that he was sounding the gong every time he booked one of these pictures.

Because the magazine he was relying on was a Tried and Proved magazine—THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW. Because the pictures he was booking were Tried and Proved Pictures selected from this magazine's Hall of Fame which is the only reliable service of its kind in the field.

That's why Jezra was a tried and proved showman with a tried and reputation, a tried and proved theatre, and a tried and proved audience.

INTENSE ACTION

Of the kind that gets one is one of the good reasons why "Driven" is still one of Universal's most popular Tried and Proved Pictures.

Jezra. Now, of course, that wasn't so. Jezra was, undoubtedly, in the show business to make money, but he didn't let folks get that impression.

He made them feel that he was getting a darn lot of pleasure out of pleasing them. He talked to them when they came in and when they went out, he got their impressions of the picture they had just seen, and sounded them on what they were anxious to see. So Jezra's reputation as a live wire grew steadily firmer, and his bankroll increased. He was even thinking of trading the old Dodge in for a Buick. (Nancy hoped he would, that old thing looked so shabby when they drove to church on Sunday).

'The Shock'

Underworld Life Released by Universal

BRIEF: A poor cripple who worships from afar a beautiful young girl, is ultimately the means of saving her life. She is being attacked by gangsters when he enters but his crippled body is no match for their healthy ones, and he is being overpowered when the California earthquake breaks, destroying the gang, curing the cripple, and leaving him and the girl to enjoy a life of happiness together.

THIS picture stands high in the ranks of films that have received unusual bookings and made box office records. With several thousand houses to its credit it can boast of having made money wherever it has shown and of having made innumerable friends for the star, Lon Chaney.

As the poor cripple, this talented character actor gives an inspirational performance which is duly appreciated everywhere. An almost unlimited number of exhibitors who have shown the picture have found that before leaving, their patrons have stopped to comment on the production and to thank the showman for booking it. It has been the means of many theatres making new and lasting friends.

And in addition to its merits it is an unusually fine picture from the angle of exploitation. There are so many merchant tie-ups which the exhibitor should find profitable. Why not arrange for a display in the drug store window in connection with a showing of electric vibrators. You might even offer to pay for a demonstrator to stand in the window and demonstrate the device. The signs in the window should advertise the picture and the article at the same time. Pictures of Lon Chaney as the cripple and later as he appears when he is cured should provide a part of the display.

You might also do something like this. Just in front of the theatre place an ordinary scale which you can hire. Have it wired so that when a person steps on it he or she will receive a slight shock. It should also be arranged that at the same time an electric sign lights up the words, "The Shock." A sign on the scale can make known to the public the fact that there is no charge for weighing on this scale.

This stunt will undoubtedly get everyone talking about your theatre and the crowds which will gather around to see the next fellow try the scale will certainly prove beneficial to you.

The merchant in your town selling scales will probably be willing to lend you one for the advertising value contained in the idea as far as he is concerned, so that your cost is practically negligible.

Get permission from the city officials to allow you to string wires around the street in the vicinity of your theatre. On these hang signs reading: "Don't touch these wires or you'll get a shock. But follow them and you'll get 'The Shock' of your life."

You might also try a street bally stunt.

Get several men and have them dressed like a tough gang. Then make one man up to give the impression of being a cripple. Have the gang attack the cripple in the street. When a good sized crowd gathers have another man who is supposed to be a policeman come along and hustle the whole crowd off. Then have some small boys distribute notices to the effect that the rest of this fight can be seen on (dates) at the..... Theatre.

The gang should then proceed to another street where the same fight may be staged again. You will be surprised at the interest you can arouse by this means. It is a simple way of arousing the curiosity and will show results at the box office.

'Bluebeard's Eighth Wife'

Matrimonial Romance Released by Paramount

BRIEF: Mona marries John Brandon and immediately after discovers that she is his eighth wife. Determined that she will not be the eighth to be divorced from him, she sets out on a teaser campaign which proves very effective until Brandon tells her she is bought and paid for. Furious she determines to give him grounds for a divorce and is subsequently found in her room with another man. In the end, however, Brandon discovers that she really loves him and they leave for a happy honeymoon.

NOW and again there appears a picture which stands out above all others as a feature with unusual publicity and exploitation possibilities. This Gloria Swanson film unquestionably belongs in this class. It prevents a splendid opportunity for exhibitors to convey their message with a punch calculated to reach every patron.

It particularly lends itself to that kind of exploitation which cannot fail to excite the curiosity of the womenfolk. Gloria Swanson appears in a variety of Tut-Ank-Amen styles a great many of which are still popular in these smaller cities. Merchants with stock of Egyptian print materials, clothes or accessories exemplifying this style will be glad of the opportunity of arranging a tie-up which, through the use of stills, will help them merchandise their wares.

Another factor that should make the picture popular now is the recent elevated place of Gloria Swanson. Her two most recent pictures are unquestionably her best and have gained for her the unstinted esteem of the critics which in turn has reacted on the fan audience and increased her popularity.

If you are advertising in the local papers you might try a stunt like this. In the ad picture seven well dressed young women to represent Bluebeard's seven wives. In the eighth place have a blank. Along with these pictures announce that fact that "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" is in town and may be seen on the streets any time during the day. To the first ten or twenty persons who identify her correctly offer free admission to the theatre.

The fact that there is news value in the stunt should get you space in the news columns and you are certain to attract considerable attention to your showing if you employ this manner of exploitation.

'Good Night Paul'

Matrimonial comedy Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Paul Boudeaux, partner of Richard Landers, is promised fifty thousand dollars by his uncle if he marries. The partners are hard up so Landers' wife, Mathilda, pretends she is the wife when the uncle arrives. A series of screamingly funny complications arise but Mathilda contrives to find a wife for the uncle and a wife for the partner and thus saves the day when uncle discovers that it was all a bluff.

AMONG the numerous Selznick revivals which are at present receiving the earnest attention of exhibitors perhaps none is so highly comical and so well done as this one which gives Constance Talmadge untold opportunities of being winsome and clever.

It is the type of story that will appeal to everyone because the story is simple and the complications true to life and absolutely natural. Being the wife of one man and pretending to be wedded to another is a situation which is chock full of humor and mirth and Constance Talmadge does it full justice.

The title, moreover, is one that readily attracts attention and makes people smile. It immediately makes them feel that they are letting themselves in for some good entertainment and they enter the theatre in a pleased frame of mind. Therefore the title should be given a great deal of prominence. But that is a simple matter for it can be applied almost anywhere.

You might use it particularly in a teaser campaign of this type. In every available place for a week or more before the showing of the picture have display signs reading: "Good night, Paul, I'll see you at the Theatre next night." These should be placed in store windows, tacked on fences, pasted on billboards and nailed to telegraph poles.

Very soon you will have everybody talking about the signs and wondering what it is all about. After you have aroused their curiosity sufficiently it is a comparatively simple matter to get them to flock to the theatre when the date of showing arrives.

You can get an expression popularized almost without any effort so you should find no difficulty whatsoever in getting people to use the expression "Good Night Paul" as an exclamation. The way to go about it is to get a band of kids together and tell them that you will give each one twenty-five cents if he will promise to use the expression everytime he possibly can. Although most people don't realize it it is from the youngsters that they get their peculiar expressions and by this means you will find that you have soon gotten everybody saying "Good Night Paul."

'Grandma's Boy'

Comedy Released by Associated Exhibitors

BRIEF: A village store keeper is shot by a tramp and a posse is formed to capture the offender. The Boy, a member of the party runs home in terror and hides. His grandmother tells him that his grandfather, too, was a coward but with a magic talisman he won glory in the war. She gives him the charm and he overcomes the culprit. This gives him confidence in himself and he wins the hand of the girl he has always loved.

THIS is the first five-reel Harold Lloyd feature and is probably his best. It has all the elements of real comedy put across as only Harold Lloyd can do it.

Previous to its appearance Harold Lloyd was known but he was not the celebrity he now is. Consequently when the picture appeared there were many people who did not bother to see it. Since that time his work has become so notable that he has gained an unbelievable following. A great part of these are new and they have not yet seen this picture. But they want very much to get the opportunity to do so. That is why the wise exhibitor will run the picture even if he has done so before.

There is such a large percentage of the movie going public that has not seen the picture and is very anxious to, that it is foolish indeed not to rebook it. And give the showing plenty of publicity. Harold Lloyd's name on a theatre will almost invariably draw record crowds and now, just at the eve of a new picture, is the best time to show this one.

Besides the many advantages of the picture, there is also the splendid possibilities it holds in the line of exploitation. The number and variety of stunts which may be used in connection with the showing is remarkable.

In the first place, the kids are wild about Harold Lloyd and it is the ambition of each of them to look like him. Any exhibitor can easily and cheaply secure a few hundred pairs of cardboard glasses like those worn by the star and distribute them among the children. You will find that they will wear them constantly, and that they will be walking advertisements for your showing in every street of the neighborhood.

Another clever stunt which you might try is decorating the lobby with poster cut-out. The characters in the picture are all comical and if you use the pictures of these different characters and place them in the front of the lobby you will find that they give the impression of being the real characters and they will create no end of mirth and valuable chattering on which you can cash in.

You might also arrange special performances to which only children accompanied by their grandmothers are invited and at which the two will be admitted for the price of one. You will be surprised at the rapidity with which this idea will take on and how much attention you will center on your theatre through this scheme.

'The Storm'

Triangle Melodrama Released by Universal

BRIEF: Two men and a woman are snowed in together in a cabin in the North woods. One is a city man away for his health, the other a trapper. The girl is the daughter of a French Canadian whose father had been killed by the Northwest Mounted Police. Through the winter a silent bitter struggle develops between the men for the hand of the girl which ends in the treachery of the city man being exposed and the trapper winning the girl after a thrilling forest fire.

FEW pictures can boast of such a realistic and awe-inspiring forest fire, and such a convincing snow storm as is served up to the spectator in this film. On the stage the play was considered a masterpiece, but its reproduction on the screen has endowed it with pictorial effects that actually thrill. And the movie public is keenly alive to its splendor and artistry.

That that is true is shown by the unusually large number of bookings which the picture has to its credit. Based on romance, chock full of high pitched excitement, smacking of tense humor it can easily be understood why the film has found a place of prominence among so large a variety of towns and audiences.

Moreover, it is a picture that lends itself to any number of exploitation ideas. One of these is in the nature of a lobby display. Have your electrician arrange the lights in the lobby so that they will light up in series and be entirely extinguished at rapid intervals to give the effect of lightning. Then get someone who can roll a bass drum to sit in a concealed spot and simulate thunder. The effect can be seen and heard from a distance of several hundred feet and will bring patrons hotfooting to the theatre to find out what all the excitement's about.

'Poppy'

Love Drama Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Poppy Destin, ill-treated from birth runs away and falls into the hands of a wealthy man who adores her. Fearless lest he lose her he marries her without her knowledge. Complications arise which make her life even more bitter but finally the man releases her from the marriage making it possible for her to marry the man she loves.

THIS is another Selznick revival which has the entire Selznick force behind it to help the exhibitor who rebooks it put it across. It was selected for revival because of its tremendous success on its first run and the increased popularity of Norma Talmadge, the star. The same big scale advertising and publicity campaign which accompanied the first release is backing the re-issue, and new titles and new angles of exploitation will give the picture an up-to-the-minute aspect.

One of the most attractive posters shows several kids seated on the back of a covered wagon with their farmer mother and father. This used as a cut-out to decorate the lobby should prove very attractive since it suggests a back home touch which always go over big.

The same idea used in a street bally would certainly attract attention. A rambly old wagon should be secured and fixed up in a covered wagon effect. A rather stout lady wearing a house dress, and a man in shirt and suspenders, wearing a beard, and two or three kids in farm clothes should ride inside the wagon. The sides of the wagon should carry signs announcing the name of the picture and the date of showing. If this wagon drives through the important streets it will very soon be the center of a great deal of attention and comment.

Springtime marks the season for poppies and so no exhibitor should have any difficulty in arranging a window display tie-up with the local florist. A window that will compel attention can be readily arranged by the use of all types of poppies and stills of Miss Talmadge. The florist might also announce a special sale of these flowers during the showing of the picture. A pretty florist window is always a place of interest and a stunt like this will call it into greater prominence.

You might also arrange, too, to grant free or half price admission to any person who comes to the theatre with a natural poppy. The flowers can later be distributed to some local hospital. The philanthropic aspect will gain space for you in the local papers and will unquestionably call attention to your theatre.

'Prodigal Daughters'

Flapper Life Released by Paramount

BRIEF: The two daughters of a locomotive magnate are reckless, pleasure loving flappers. "Swiftie" the elder of the two falls in with bad company and to pay a gambling debt promises to marry a worthless gambler within sixty days. Just before her marriage she goes to her father's factory at which the man who loves her is superintendent. He is about to try out a new engine, and Swiftie jumps in and starts it. It careens down the road, smashes into the car of her future husband and kills him, leaving her free and contrite to marry the young engineer.

THERE are thrills galore in this film. The run away engine, the daring rescue by means of an airplane and a rope ladder, the auto crash which results in the death of the villain are incidents which are guaranteed to keep any red-blooded audience at the edge of its seats. Spectators who are looking for action, will find all they can chew right here.

And coupled with this there is the ever popular flapper element which gives the stars plenty of opportunity to be carefree and reckless, provides lots of jazzy scenes, and generally feeds well the appetite that craves entertainment of this variety.

In exploiting the picture the exhibitor should strive to get all these elements across to the public. Posters and stills can best do this since they actually show scenes from the picture. In order to get prominent space for these arrange for merchant tie-ups. These may be founded on the automobile incident, the lavish clothes, the beautiful interior sets, the airplane rescue. All these provide the theme for tie-ups with the stores or agencies handling these various commodities and if an attractive window is afforded the showing, the merchant can derive real benefit from the tie-up.

There has just come out a new toy airplane that is delighting both youngsters and grown-ups. It is a little cardboard affair that when sailed up into the air returns again to the place from which it was sent. The toy stores are all handling these and there is splendid opportunity here for a tie-up on the airplane incident. An entire window of these toys could be arranged with stills showing the rescue as background. Passersby will surely stop at the window to see the toy and they will be attracted by the pictures. A poster should be conspicuously placed so as to acquaint people with the fact that the picture is showing at your theatre on certain dates.

There seems to be a demand now for gambling pictures. A great many of the new pictures devote themselves to the famous gambling resorts and are woven around gambling wives or gambling husbands. It is, therefore, to make known the fact that the picture also takes on this slant. This can best be accomplished by the use of pictures in the lobby and by a lobby display of gambling paraphernalia.

'Love Madness'

Underworld Drama Released by Hodkinson

BRIEF: Mary Norwood's husband, a weakling, is framed by a gang of crooks and sent to prison to die for a murder he has not committed. His wife, believing implicitly in his innocence, assumes the role of a confidence woman, gets in with the gang, learns the truth by playing one against the other for her affections, has them arrested and frees her husband, who has become regenerated through the ordeal and emerges a bigger and better man.

THIS story of the love of a wife for her husband and her efforts to save him at the price of her own life is very stirring indeed and since it contains a great number of the elements that go particularly well in the movies it is small wonder that it has been highly successful everywhere. But there is still a great deal of business to be done on it and it remains for some wide awake showman to step up and put it across big.

In the first place Louise Glaum, star of the film, has a real following of consequence and it would be wise to give her name considerable publicity. In order to do this you might announce similarity contests, allowing the public to be the judges and offering some small prizes to the winner. In this way you will enlist the interest of the contestants and those spectators who are interested in the contestants and the results.

Matt Moore, co-star with Miss Glaum has a reputation for being a very fastidious dresser. This should permit you the occasion of a tie-up with the local haberdasher or men's clothing shop whereby a window display of the latest goods could be arranged in conjunction with stills and posters taken from the picture.

You can make your lobby interesting by getting a collection of weapons including a few revolvers, a black-jack, a knife and the like. These should be placed in a case with a sign acquainting the reader with the fact that these weapons were the property of some locally famous gang and that with one of these..... (name of criminal) killed his wife. Date of crime..... Reason—"Love Madness."

In view of the fact that a great many scenes are laid in Chinatown and that there is a decided Oriental atmosphere about the picture, it would be entirely in keeping to dress your ticket seller, door man and house attendants in Chinese costumes. Besides its being pertinent it would greatly add to the pictorial effect.

If you favor the street bally for exploitation you can arrange an interesting one by getting three young girls who closely resemble each other and dressing them in outlandish costumes that are bound to attract attention. Let them walk along bearing small signs reading: "You might not be able to understand this. It's 'Love Madness.'"

The Modern Operator on Defective Spools

THAT the treatment of spools is becoming a matter that is looked upon as unimportant is made more apparent the farther one travels.

In an endeavor to impress upon those concerned just how important it is, I will take it as the subject for this week's article.

During my tours of inspection, it is amazing the number of cases of neglect with regard to the care of spools that come under my notice.

That the damage is often caused by rough usage at the hands of switch boys and others outside the bio. box is true, but I could mention several instances where carelessness in the box is responsible.

I have repeatedly seen spools on the floor, actually being trodden on, unconsciously of course, but a few minutes occupied in driving in a few nails would render such happenings impossible. I am quite convinced that it is only because the matter is not thought of sufficient consequence to trouble over, for most of the operators concerned are otherwise thoroughly competent men.

One of the dangers associated with bent spools is that it is likely to cause the film to press against the fire box film trap. This naturally breaks the film. Many have wondered at the necessity for replacing film traps, which, by the way, are most expensive items to renew.

Recently a city theatre had to install two new film traps for each machine. The operators concerned have now been instructed to keep a keen eye on the spools, so it will be a long time before those traps will require renewing again, unless, of course, something most unusual happens.

It may not be generally known that spools may be re-passed and re-bushed for about a dollar. And spools with large spindle holes (which cause undue vibration) could be converted to the correct size for the consideration of a half dollar or so.

Those concerned in the process of switching could also read this to advantage, as in the majority of cases, the film is switched per medium of the motor cycle and side car. The spools are often carried loose, and the jolting they are subjected to in many cases damages the film itself as well as the spools.

A suburban exhibitor recently complained that a switchman had to lift four spools of film out of a side-car together, so that the loose film could be held together. Such carelessness is an instance of "more hurry less speed." For it took over twenty minutes to straighten out the tangle, and cut out the damaged portions.

THEATRE AND EQUIPMENT NEWS AND NOTES

The new Criterion Theatre, Enid, Okla., opened to capacity business. The very finest in theatre equipment was installed under the personal supervision of Wesley Trout, projection and electrical engineer.

The Rex Theatre has opened at Holdenville, Okla., with A. O. Perkins as the manager and he reports that business is very pleasing with pictures as the present policy.

C. T. McFadden has recently purchased the Lyons Theatre at Lyons, Colo.

J. D. Gentry purchased the Rex Theatre at Hamilton, Mo., and will present pictures as the new policy of the house.

The Trouco Theatre Supply, Enid, Okla., reports that they will have the agency for "Bio" carbons and the Automatic Ticket line of products. They also plan on stocking the "Fulco" line of products in the very near future. Manager Wesley Trout reports that the supply business is very encouraging. A complete moving machine repair department has been installed to repair all makes of projection equipment at very reasonable rates.

The name of the Lyric Theatre at Havard, Neb., has been recently changed to the Paramount Theatre.

A new motion picture theatre will open soon in Fort Payne, Ala., a three year lease having been closed for quarters in the new Wright Building, now under construction. The new theatre will be under the management of G. L. Brock.

The Trouco Theatre Supply, Enid, Okla., reports that two Powers machines and a Transverter were installed at the new Criterion Theatre in this city.

ANOTHER NEW HOUSE FOR MILWAUKEE

When the palatial new Wisconsin Theatre opens in Milwaukee, Wis., on March 28, theatre goers there will be greeted by the friendly countenance of Rudolph Kopp, musical director, who has been selected to have charge of the thirty-piece orchestra.

The Wisconsin theatre is the newest and finest theatre in Milwaukee and is the most expensive and pretentious of the Saxe chain of theatres.

Mr. Kopp, who will have the honor of opening this fine house, was for two years conductor of the Balaban and Katz Chicago Theatre Concert orchestra, alternating there with his chief, Nathaniel Finston, who is musical director of The Chicago Theatre. Mr. Kopp's place at The Chicago, is taken by Louis R. Lipstein, formerly conductor at the Balaban and Katz Roosevelt Theatres. Mr. Lipstein was chosen to succeed Mr. Kopp because of his sensational success in "cuing" pictures.

Theatre Construction News

THE following is a resume of some of the theatres which will be built this year, together with the estimated cost, the seating capacity and name, etc.:

Canton, Ohio.—Construction will start March 1, on a $100,000 theatre in Canton which will seat about 1,000. Name and owner is withheld for the present time. G. A. Ebeling is the architect, Newmenstern Bldg., Cleveland, O.

Mishawaka, Ind.—A modern picture theatre will be created in this city at an early date. R. L. Simmons, Elkhart, Ind., is the architect.

Flint, Mich.—The Bijou Theatrical Enterprises, City Bank Bldg., Battle Creek, Mich., will break ground in Flint during February for the erection of a modern picture theatre to cost $600,000 and have a seating capacity of about 2,000. Will be modern in every respect and the very finest in theatre equipment will be installed as soon as it is completed.

Bisbee, Ariz.—The Lyric Amusement Company, operating several motion picture theatres in this city, will soon erect another modern theatre to cost about $40,000 here.

Construction of a new theatre at Cadiz, O., will be started soon. Will have a seating capacity of 850. H. L. Wardner, architect, Akron, Ohio.

The Star Theatre at Homer, Neb., will soon give place to a new modern picture theatre. Fred R. Baker will erect same at an early date. A new picture theatre will soon be erected at Raleigh, N. C.

H. Miller is installing a modern picture theatre at Heber Springs, Ark.

The new picture theatre at Eufaula, Ala., is nearing completion. It will have a seating capacity of about 600.

Plans are now under way for the erection of a modern picture theatre at Olympia, Wash. The very finest will be installed in the line of theatre equipment. Work will be started at once.

The new $100,000 Criterion Theatre at Enid, Okla., has been recently completed and is doing a very nice business.

The Grand Theatre Company will erect a new $100,000 motion picture house at Wheaton, Ill.

The Importance of Good Lighting

SOME wonderful results have lately attended the efforts of managers in America to effectively use lighting for orchestral and stage effects.

The idea represents an angle in presentation which might easily be exploited by even the smaller shows. It is novel, and certainly spectacular, and is therefore sure to create much discussion and attention.

When staging even the ordinary vocal number, it is surprising what results can be obtained with lighting, without the aid of scenery.

Very few additional lights are needed, a flood in each wing being all that is necessary. These can be so fitted that each becomes a spot when required, a nood and a spot from the operating box, and at times, a dome light in the roof.

Remarkably pretty effects are obtainable by "lighting" the orchestra. Here are some color schemes already proved successful:

During the Entra-acte, a baton of deep amber lights along the front orchestra rail should light up the faces of the musicians. Music stand lights to be of a deep green. From the box, a red flood should be thrown. The total effect is one of such beauty that whenever practiced, the scheme has evoked unstinted applause.

A most impressive lighting effect that can always be remembered is one used for the rendering of "Asleep in the Deep." The orchestra was flooded in straw color, the singer (in wet oil-skins, sea boots and sou' wester) had a deep blue spot. The footlights were amber, one wing flood orange, and the other red. During the rendering of the second verse, red flooded the orchestra, deep green the singer, and the side floods purple and light blue, footlights, half red, half blue.

At one theatre a speciality was made of light jazz medleys as overtures, the lighting on the orchestra being deep blue. Light red was on the music stands, straw color pin-shot on the conductor, and half-orange and deep green on the stage curtains. These were changed at intervals to purple on orchestra, green pin-spot on conductor, and pink footlights.

At first thought, these color schemes may seem rather elaborate. They are not. It is only a question of some extra work at a small cost, which combination will produce an effect on the audience that will be lasting.

The Editor would be pleased to hear from those exhibitors who have already tested the scheme, as well as from those who may have tried some original innovations of their own.

CO-OPERATIVE INSURANCE

The Theatre Inter-Insurance Exchange issues a pamphlet showing its plan, the saving, the security, and service the concern renders to clients.

The Exchange confines its business to theatre insurance and carries no other line. It operates under the reciprocal plan, which means that the amount remaining from each year's premiums, after losses and expenses are paid, is returned to the policy holders instead of being paid out as dividends to stockholders of the company under the ordinary plan of insurance.

An addition to this saving in cost, the Theatre Inter-Insurance Exchange furnishes an inspection and assistance on fire prevention methods and equipment that is of established value to the exhibitor. Showmen might do worse than to get in touch with the concern at 137 South Fifth Street, Philadelphia, and learn further particulars of this unique service to the theatre trade.

BEAUTIFUL NEW THEATRE FOR BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Birmingham, Ala.—Birmingham's Masonic Temple Auditorium with a seating capacity of 3,500 will receive improvements amounting to $75,000 and will then be leased as a first class moving picture house with a forty thousand dollar pipe organ and a huge orchestra as features.

The theatre will be known as the Temple Theatre according to Joe Steed a well known suburban theatre operator of Birmingham who with several men from out of the city is said to be heading the project. No formal announcement has been made yet by Temple officials but it is understood that the lease has been practically closed at a large rental.

Electric signs of a beauty and size never before tried in Birmingham will attract the theatre crowds to the location of Sixth Avenue and Nineteenth Street which is known to be a little off the beaten path but which will be in the center of town within a few years. The white lights will also be extended the block to reach the theatre. The lease has been so arranged that the auditorium can be turned over to the Shrine for their activities at stated intervals.

Every Week--He's Your Box-Office Attorney!

GEORGE T. PARDY has been so long the recognized unbiased authority on box-office reviews that his counsel is taken by a vast majority of exhibitors as their "attorney's advice." He sees and reviews for the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW every week practically all of the more important productions. In addition, he counsels the constructive views of his assistants and co-workers. Never does he bitterly attack nor scathingly denounce. Always he analyzes with the sincerity of a combination showman-producer. When he criticizes, he does so constructively. When he applauds, his praise stands for pleasing power and drawing power as viewed by the possible count of the cash register.

Those showmen who may be depending upon reading "the other fellow's" copy of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW—or who might fail to get theirs at the newsstand on account of "sell out"—would do well to sign the attached subscription coupon, which will place George Parady on YOUR staff as YOUR BOX-OFFICE ATTORNEY for fifty-two weeks of the year. And there are twenty-seven other reasons! Mail it today!

WHAT'S IN THE AIR

STATION E. T. R. presents its special Tried and Proved Number. A program as individual in film trade journalism as the American dollar in Germany.

Ever since man first inhabited the earth he has had to struggle for originality. Possessed of lofty ideals the man who would beat the field keeps striving for new high levels in search of that will-o'-the-wisp, Success. The Review, being a combination of the thoughts of many men, was motivated by just such ideals when it inaugurated its Tried and Proved department.

"By Their Deeds Ye Shall Know Them" is the concrete essence of Tried and Proved attractions. With this slogan as a banner, the Review ushers in its Special Tried and Proved Issue, throwing a bright spotlight on every aspect of a subject which has captured the interest of the motion picture industry.

It is with no little pride and pleasure that the Review presents the views and reports of such forceful personalities in the film world as Carl Laemmle, President of Universal (see page 3), and S. R. Kent, General Manager of Paramount's Distributing Department (see page 5). From page 26 to 35, the reader is confronted with a bristling array of data, news, reviews, pictorials and lists—all pertinent to these real thoroughbreds of filmdom—Tried and Proved Pictures.

STAND BY for next week's Special Prologues and Presentations Issue. A program of ideas, suggestions, striking pictorials and articles on the ingenious methods of program building. How to put patrons in sympathy with your bill; the importance of begetting the proper audience mood; the values of various entertainment presentations—these and a host of other important details will be treated by those who have reached the showman's "pot of gold" through being expert in the handling of entertainment.

ANOTHER 'INTERNATIONAL' EXPEDITION

Captain Ariel Vargas, crack staff correspondent, has already started on another camera expedition into a far-off, little known corner of the globe. You need no introduction to Captain Vargas. His intimate pictures of India, China, Arabia and other remote sections of the world have appeared exclusively in International News for the past four years. He made the only moving pictures of Pope Benedict and the Vatican, was the first man on the job after the Japanese earthquake. The first pictures of Lenin and Trotsky, from "Red" Russia, was his. These all had a distinct box-office value to the exhibitor who played them up. Pictures of his next expedition should be even more thrilling than any previous one and they will appear exclusively in the

Trade REVIEW

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

Let It Not Be Said of Pictures That the Good Ever Die Young

IN the present issue of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW will be found articles on Tried and Proved Pictures written by Carl Laemmle, Sidney R. Kent and Louis F. Guimond. They present the general principles from the viewpoint of the head of a great company, from that of the chief of the distribution forces of another large corporation and from that of an advertising man of wide experience.

They attack the question from three angles, but their conclusions are the same: That the Tried and Proved Picture is worthy of its place in the sun and that its importance, while perhaps heretofore somewhat neglected by those to whom it had a right to look for support, is now being widely recognized.

One of the difficulties associated with obtaining definite data on Tried and Proved Pictures is the perfectly understandable reluctance on the part of distributors to uncover intimate facts and figures regarding details of their companies' business.

Mr. Laemmle hits upon the happy plan of presenting the total number of theatres in which a certain subject has been played. The figures relating to "The Storm" will have value and interest for everyone associated with the industry. When a picture plays 8589 houses it shows something more than the fact that it is a good picture. It indicates the possibilities for other good pictures when behind them is put intelligent and—this is the important word—continuous selling effort.

ONE of the best examples of a Tried and Proved picture is "Nanook of the North," a subject that it not a photoplay within the ordinary meaning of the word. It might have been named "The Life of a Family" in all truth.

In fact, the subject was one that in the beginning distributors shied away from. They were afraid of the exhibitor, believing he in turn would be afraid of the public. Pathe had the courage of its convictions, that the production contained great appeal for the multitude and that if once the latter had a chance to see it the picture would go over with a rush.

Contrary to the practically unvarying rule of all companies Pathe determined to make preparations for extending the life of the advertising—to the exhibitors—on the picture.

"Nanook" was released June 10, 1922. It was advertised steadily for a year and a half after its issue. Twice when the advertising appropriation had been exhausted application was made for an additional budget and it was granted.

THE company figures on the picture—which is a dramatic novelty and not a photoplay, it is again emphasized—show that up to December 23 of last year 4,523 theatres had shown it on their screens. At the present time it is believed the number easily will exceed 5,000, as it is still in active circulation and several new prints have been ordered only recently.

"Doctor Jack" is another production which, although in circulation a year and a half still is going strong. At the beginning of the year it had been played in six thousand houses, and the present figures will run in excess of 6500.

"The Call of the Wild," released last September 23, already has been played in more than 4200 houses. "Safety Last," issued last Fall and now strongly booking in the "volume theatres," has made the remarkable record up to March 1 of 5,274 houses played in that comparatively short time.

Concrete figures are of advantage to exhibitor and distributor and producer as well as to prove what may be accomplished with pictures that appeal.

To attain the big end, to get the pictures to the largest possible section of the public, it is necessary to take two major steps: To advertise the accomplishments of the picture to the exhibitor and in turn to exploit that subject to the public.

Every picture has to be sold twice, but the fact never must be lost sight of that the retail merchant must be sold before any recompensing money will flow into the treasury of the manufacturer.

THERE are thousands of exhibitors whose interest in first runs is that of the man who admires an object from a distance, knowing it will be a long time before he will establish contact with it. If often happens that an interest that is keen in the beginning of a distribution campaign suffers a lapse following the death of the advertising, finally being snuffed out entirely.

Of course, the subject may be good, but the fact is not kept in front of the buyer, unless it happens that he is one of those methodical chaps who files his reviews from his business publications; not only files them, but with regularity keeps a scrutinizing eye on them.

A picture that is worth while is deserving of a square deal at the hands of its agent, especially when that agent is its owner. To obtain that square deal it is necessary that the merchant be reminded occasionally of the goods that are to be found in the wholesale house.

Some time ago EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW called attention to what it considered the mistake of the distributor in splurging his budget on one smashing advertising campaign rather than following the plan of spreading it over a period sufficient in length to carry the picture along to the average exhibitor.

Word comes to us that one of the large distributing organizations already has instituted the policy of reserving a definite proportion of its advertising appropriation on each production so that if there proves to be demonstrated capacity in any instance entitling it to rank as a Tried and Proved Picture there will be something "in the kick" to help it on its long journey to the end of the road and provide the stimulant that in the case of pictures as in men is bound to be beneficial when judiciously administered.

Speaking now of pictures and not of men may it no longer even be intimated that the good die young.

McGill Spells 'Success'—Co-operation

Port Orchard (Washington) Exhibitor Makes Business Advance on the Stepping Stones Of Initiative, Push and Showmanship Sense

FOUR years ago, in January, 1920, J. A. McGill took over the Port Orchard Theatre, Port Orchard, Wash. The general impression was that someone had slipped him a lemon, as the house was well known to have had nine owners in the four previous years, each of whom had made a dismal financial failure of it. The theatre's credit was zero at the bank. In fact, he was asked to pay the charge of twenty-five cents delivery on a can of film in advance, by the transportation company! One year later the Kitsap County Bank offered McGill unlimited cash advance to enable him to carry out improvements or to build a new theatre as he desired.

This is how he did it. After taking over the house, renaming it the Liberty, he did a good deal of quiet observation, all the while strengthening his acquaintance and enlarging the list as rapidly as possible. Soon he got some valuable first hand information regarding the kind of program his unsuccessful predecessors had been putting on. They had been for the most part, cheap, junk shows, run on the theory that being the only house in a small community, they would have to stand for what they got. Thus the patrons, who should have attended their own theatre had drifted away, and were going elsewhere.

FROM his opening day, McGill started with high class pictures for which he had paid a good price, as soon as they were available. But during the first six months it was a hard fight to convince the fans, who had formed the habit of going out of town for their shows, that they could see just as good shows in their own home town. The best pictures available, good music, clean theatre and persistence in the face of innumerable disappointments, finally won out. After six months the residents began to show signs of confidence in the new exhibitor, and they have never had cause to withdraw their patronage.

Co-operation was the secret of McGill's success. Before his fellow town-folk realized it, he was the prime factor in every civic or social movement where he could see a chance to strengthen his friendly foothold in the community. If the high school or local lodge was giving a big opposition show on his best night, McGill advertised their show as well as his own. He didn't wait for them to ask him to do so, either. Before long they began to say, "Here, that fellow is a good sport." and to select their show nights so they wouldn't conflict with the theatre's big night. McGill got in touch by mail or in person with the ministers, school board and principals. When he came across a good educational reel or two, he would run it for the schools some afternoons.

As a proof of what this spirit of co-operation accomplished, a local school principal refused one time, to co-operate with McGill who offered him any one of four nights to stage an opposition show. The principal insisted on holding his show on McGill's big night, trying his best to queer the exhibitor's

Showmanship Urge

"Don't be afraid to give a free show now and then to aid in some worthy object. Send the ministers a standing pass to all your shows. Do the same with school principals. Word of mouth advertising is the most valuable kind."

These are the showman sentiments of J. A. McGill, who took over a sick baby of a motion picture house that had been passed up by nine other exhibitors as being beyond repair so far as building up a profitable patronage for the house was concerned, and put it in the running as the pride of the community.

show. After making every reasonable effort, McGill took the matter up with the school board, which promptly dismissed the principal for his unnecessary opposition. "Must I ask him, when I want to give a show?" inquired the principal, and he was informed that he was expected to show the same type of co-operation that was always given by McGill, for the best interests of the community. His successor was introduced to Mr. McGill by the school board and advised to always consult McGill regarding such matters. McGill says it is a good plan for the small town exhibitor to have portable projection outfit with a 1,000 watt light. He can then show occasional pictures at schools, churches or lodges. This also minimizes the danger of community picture shows, which are a real menace to the exhibitor.

DON'T be afraid to give a free show now and then to aid in some worthy local object, such as a benefit for the library—club, grade schools or P. T. A.," says McGill. "You always start new fans at these shows and you win in the end. And never carry a local grouch! Run church announcements free, and send the ministers a standing pass to all your shows. When congregations see their pastors and families going to shows on week nights, you can bet they follow suit. Do the same thing with school principals. Word of mouth advertising is the most valuable kind. They will tell their teachers and friends what they saw and what is coming. Never pass up an opportunity to make a new friend. Friends are your most valuable asset in this business.

"Particularly make friends of the youngsters. The finest music I hear is a cheery 'Hello, Mr. McGill,' from the youngsters I pass on the street. They don't deface my posters, or play destructive tricks on me either. There are too many things for them to remember that leave a kindly feeling. It is their house, too. If they want to raise a fund for baseball suits or gymnasium equipment, they know I will back them up, either with a percentage on tickets, or on fifty percent of the receipts for the night. The biggest kick the kids ever got was in parading around the town in 'Robinson Crusoe' costumes, selling tickets for a show on my opening night with this chapter play. The parents are influenced by the way their children are treated and they know their little folks will never see anything harmful or degrading in my theatre."

MCGILL features his fine music, and gives credit to his wife for the quality of the product. She is leader of his little orchestra. He thinks poor music is the cause of many small town failures.

McGill's reputation for dependability has spread beyond the limits of his home town, where, by the way, he has built a pretty little home. He is a member of the Seattle District Arbitration Board, and a member of the Board of Trustees of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington.

'You Owe It to Your Patrons'

Universal President Urges Exhibitors to Run Tried and Proved Screen Attractions

By CARL LAEMMLE

A GREAT motion picture that has not been seen is like a great book that has not been read. Its beauty and merit are enhanced by the discovery of its hitherto hidden charm. There are so few truly great pictures produced it is the duty of the theatre-going public to patronize those masterpieces that have been created.

By the same token, it behooves every exhibitor to present to his patrons those outstanding motion pictures which are a credit to the industry. The exhibitor owes it to his theatre, his public and his industry to show every great picture made. By so doing, he satisfies and elevates his patronage, augments the prestige of his house, and enhances and encourages the production of further screen triumphs.

The time will come when every exhibitor will show every worth-while picture, regardless of the fact that his competitor has shown it previously. But before that day comes the exhibitor will have to realize that much of the first, second and third run propaganda is artificial. If one hundred other theatres in your city have played the picture, and your patrons haven't seen it, it is virtually a first-run.

In fact, the more that picture has been shown, the more advantageous it is to you to run it. The majority of theatre-goers attend one theatre only—theatre-going is really a habit—and although the picture may have been shown across the street, they could not have seen it, if they went to your theatre.

Take, for instance "The Storm." If imitation is an indication of greatness, then "The Storm" is one of the greatest pictures ever made, for never was a picture so widely imitated.

Will Rogers said something to the effect that "all the pictures are 'The Storm' under another name." Besides being the most imitated picture ever produced, "The Storm" has several other records to its credit.

It was more widely booked than any other production ever made, I believe, playing in 8,589 houses—the nearest approach to 100% representation I know of—and, according to exhibitor's reports, broke more box-office records than any picture I ever heard about.

One of my Saturday Evening Post correspondents writes me she has seen "The Storm" no less than eighteen times! That's the sort of picture it is. One you can see again and again, enjoying it more and more on each subsequent viewing.

The fact that it has met with such unlimited success is the best argument in favor of exhibitors booking it now. If your patrons have seen it, they'll flock to it again; if they haven't seen it, they've heard about it from most of their friends and are eager to view it.

To those who have seen it once, it's a Tried and Proved Picture; to those who have not seen it, "The Storm" is a first-run, its value enhanced by almost world-wide word-of-mouth advertising. In justice to your patrons, you dare not deprive them of an opportunity to see this never-to-be-forgotten masterpiece.

"The Flirt," another Tried and Proved Picture if ever there was one, played in 7,030 theatres and, to the best of my knowledge, received not one adverse criticism!

EVERY exhibitor, every critic, every patron declared it one of the greatest pictures he or she had even seen.

The fact that "The Flirt" has not had the same representation as "The Storm" is not an indication of any inferiority, but merely that, having been released a year later, it is still being booked heavily.

To date, 1,559 more theatres showed "The Storm" than "The Flirt." That means "The Flirt" is still first-run in fifteen hundred theatres now, the patrons of fifteen hundred theatres will have the thrill of seeing this Booth Tarkington masterpiece for the first time, and an assured patronage will be gained for those fifteen hundred houses for forth-coming Tarkington productions, such as "The Turmoil," to be released as one of Universal's "Perfect Thirty-Six."

And while I'm on the subject of "The Flirt" I want to make a little confession. I wasn't sold on the title, when we were about to release the picture. Several exhibitors told me they thought "The Flirt" too frivolous a title; that the name Flirt was old-fashioned, that the Twentieth century name for that type was Vamp.

I ordered the title changed, and met with such opposition that, against my judgment, the picture was released under the original title. Its unbounded success under its present title convinced me I was wrong.

The renown of the book and the already established prestige of "The Flirt" make it all the more imperative that exhibitors take advantage of this combined popularity and excellent exploitation and advertising, and get every penny to be made out of this production.

Perhaps the best example of a Tried and Proved Picture offering unlimited possibilities is "Merry Go Round." Although, because of its recent release, it has played in but 4,199 houses, that Universal-Jewel is gaining momentum daily and, if I am not mistaken, will surpass the record established by "The Storm."

Universal has always tried to select pictures whose subject matter and title admit of forcible exploitation. "Merry Go Round" contains limitless possibilities for the enterprising showman, has an appeal to both sexes and all ages, and is as fine a picture as can be found on the market today.

THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW in a recent issue paid tribute to this Universal-Jewel in its Tried and Proved Pictures section, and stressed the exploitation possibilities of this production, which to date has played almost 4,200 houses, less than 30 per cent of its potential representation.

One picture, such as "Merry Go Round," may draw the patronage to your house during the hot weather; but you'll need consistently good productions to retain that patronage.

I CAN suggest nothing better than such eminently worth-while pictures as "Way Down East," "Tol'able David," "Human Hearts," "Over the Hill," "Fury," "Under Two Flags," "Broken Blossoms," "The Kentucky Derby," "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "Foolish Wives," all Tried and Proved Pictures.

"Human Hearts" has been shown in 7,048 houses, a remarkable presentation record, second only to that of "The Storm" among Universal releases.

"The Kentucky Derby," shown in 6,999 theatres, is an ideal selection for two reasons. It has been a consistent money-maker wherever shown, and has for its star Reginald Denny, whose success in "The Abysmal Brute," "The Leather Pushers" and "Sporting Youth" has brought him a host of admirers, many of whom did not know of his charm, ability and personality when "The Kentucky Derby" was first released.

LITTLE DINKY DEAN is very much at home among the band of traveling acrobats who have made him a member of their select band. Besides, they have taught him the happiness in charity.

THE little fellow will soon be leaving the familiar friends, for the charm which he wears has revealed his identity. The picture on the left shows one of the band pleading with the messenger to keep him.

He's Just a Little Fellow But He's 'A Prince of a King'

The Splendid Work of Little Dinky Dean Is Largely Responsible for the Success of This Selznick Production the Record of Which Has Gained for it a Place Among Tried and Proved Pictures

The Old Are Always New When They're Tried and Proved

By S. R. KENT

General Manager, Distribution Department, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

THE exhibitor who plays second, third or fourth run is, in one respect, the most fortunate individual in the business. For him the gamble in playing and exploiting pictures is reduced to a minimum. While the first-run exhibitor must buy his product on faith, reputation of past performances and his own personal opinion, the small-timer can turn to profit the experience of the bigger fellows and, laying out his program with tried and proved pictures can insure steady revenue and good will for his house.

Undoubtedly the most advanced step along the lines of rendering valuable service to the small exhibitor, in the opinion of the writer, is that taken by EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW in establishing its Tried and Proved Department. It is, therefore, a pleasure to co-operate with the editors of that department by furnishing additional data for the information of TRADE REVIEW readers.

For several years the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, keenly appreciative of the value of exhibitors' reports in the shaping of plans for future product, has maintained its own report-gathering department.

Confidential to a certain degree, these statements gathered through the company's own channels are invariably frank and unbiased. Through them it is interesting to note the quality trend of the Paramount product from year to year. Moreover, in evident fulfillment of the very purpose for which the department was established, it is gratifying to note that the Paramount product released during the past six months has reached the highest standard, in point of satisfaction to the average exhibitor and his house clientele, yet attained.

Going back to October, a few comments upon some of the pictures entitled to the tried and proved classification should prove of interest.

"Ruggles of Red Gap," a James Cruze production. — "All audiences thoroughly enjoyed this picture," wrote A. B. Morrison, Majestic Theatre, Memphis. "Taken as a whole, and particularly with regard to its artistry of impersonation, this production has rarely been equalled on the screen."

"Woman-Proof" (Thomas Meighan). — "We like your picture immensely," was the voiced sentiment of the 1153 people who braved an all-day rainstorm Monday afternoon and night. Despite the fact that it has set in to rain all week, we are going to have a good week," wrote V. M. Culver, Capitol Theatre, Little Rock.

"Pleased 100 per cent," wrote J. H.

Everett, Palace Theatre, Maryville, Tenn. "Received more compliments than any picture in weeks."

"A wonderful picture which did the usual Meighan business," from Ollie Brownlee, Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla.

"The Spanish Dancer" (Pola Negri). — "Received with fine comments from practically everyone who saw it," said A. L. Snell, Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala. "As a drawing card Negri is giving the other big ones a race."

Incidentally, this picture made an unusual record in San Francisco, a city notoriously confined to one-week engagements. Following a big week at the Granada it went into the Portola and played to the largest week's business in many months.

"The Light That Failed" (George Melford production). — W. J. Melvin, Grand Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., reported: "Comments of patrons were unanimous that this is one of the best pictures, and we agree. Christmas day broke all records for that day."

Charles Morrison, Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, reported: "Splendid picture, wonderfully acted, and as one patron said, 'Gets under one's skin.' The kind they talk about and advise their friends to see."

"To the Ladies," a James Cruze production. — "James Cruze has scored again. Audience was very appreciative and laughed a great deal," wrote H. E. Farley, Empire, Montgomery, Ala.

"Intensely interesting and human. Good through and through," said V. M. Culver, Capitol Theatre, Little Rock.

"Comment on all sides favorable," said Howard Price Kingsmore, Howard Theatre, Atlanta.

"The Call of the Canyon" (Zane Grey production). — This picture, played holiday week at Loew's Palace, Washington, led all theatres in the city, even legitimate, both in attendance and receipts.

"Comes near to 100 per cent. Interest never lags," was the report of A. B. Morrison, Majestic Theatre, Memphis.

"A most successful engagement," wrote H. B. Clarke, Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C. "Receipts away above the average and picture made a splendid hit with the patrons."

"Big Brother," an Allan Dwan production. — "A perfect picture that pleased all. Truly worthy," was the report of Earle Settle, Palace Theatre, McAlester, Okla.

Barry Burke, Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Tex.: "Cast is excellent and very good for the box office."

Going back still further in the list of releases, Paramount has made a careful analysis of those pictures which have stood out as particularly successful in the smaller towns and especially recommends the following as having demonstrated a special appeal to small-town audiences.

Thomas Meighan in "If You Believe It, It's So," Rudolph Valentino in "Blood and Sand," "The Valley of Silent Men," Jack Holt in "While Satan Sleeps," Cecil B. De Mille's "Manslaughter," James Cruze's "The Old Homestead," with Theodore Roberts; "The Cowboy and the Lady," George Fitzmaurice's "To Have and To Hold," with Betty Compson and Bert Lytell; "The Pride of Palomar," Thomas Meighan in "The Bachelor Daddy" and "Back Home and Broke," George Fitzmaurice's "Kick In," with Betty Compson, Bert Lytell and May McAvoy; Jack Holt in "Making a Man," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," Gloria Swanson in "My American Wife," Betty Compson in "The White Flower."

In fact, this list could be extended back indefinitely for, as the TRADE REVIEW has so aptly stated, "any picture is a first-run subject in any locality where it has not been shown previously."

In other words, to say that a picture is tried and proved is far from saying that it is old, for any picture is new to those who haven't seen it before.

Old Lady Astor Says

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, preparing to depart for the coast next week to remain until September, told this week of some of the discouragements he encountered following the announcement of the proposal to make "Cytherea." Hundreds of letters were received, he says, urging him to drop the plan. Together with Director Fitzmaurice he studied the problem and reached the conclusion that there was a motion picture in the story, one in which the dominating theme should be retribution, and they went ahead. The result, he says, has justified their faith, declaring the product to be a clean, censor-proof production with a great love story. The producer remarked incidentally that not for a million dollars would he return to making pictures with a board of directors, and that pictures cannot be supervised from a desk in New York.

COLONEL JASPER EWING BRADY, editor of Metro Pictures Corporation, and brother of the late Cyrus Townsend Brady, is the author of the play "Intuition," which was presented for the first time in Brooklyn April 7. It is being staged by Cecil Owen, and it is planned to give the drama a Broadway showing next season.

CHARLES DAVIS, 2d, is back from a visit to Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Detroit, Indianapolis and Louisville. With him went a print of John Lowell Russell's "Floodgates," which Mr. Davis booked in a Chicago Loop house, in an Asher house in Milwaukee, in the Strand in Louisville and for which he also sold the Kentucky territory. The returned traveler is convinced that the way to dispose of an independent picture is to take it out in the country and show 'em. Conditions in the territory visited, Mr. Davis reported, while not ideal, were on the whole very good.

JEROME BEATTY, who for the past year has been in charge of the advertising department of Preferred Pictures, has completed his contract and is now with Universal. In his new post, the duties of which he took over April 7, he will be national exploitation director. Mr. Beatty carries with him the heartiest good wishes of his former chiefs.

GEORGE H. SMITH, managing director of the Vitagraph Company, Ltd., of London, sailed for home April 2, after a visit covering several weeks with his brother, President Albert E. Smith, in New York and Hollywood. The visit reunited the members of the family for the first time in several years and also gave the London visitor an opportunity to participate in the celebration of the twenty-sixth anniversary of Vitagraph's organization.

SAM MORRIS, general manager of Warner Brothers, is back in New York from a several weeks' trip in the Middle West. Asked if he heard anything about such an institution as the radio during his absence he replied that he did. Mr. Morris said the more menacing phase of the new amusement seemed to be the tendency on the part of radio devotees not to be content to restrict the audience of the loud speaker to the immediate family but to invite in the neighbors.

BEN P. SCHULBERG, president of Preferred Pictures Corporation, arrived in New York April 5 for a conference with his associate, J. G. Bachmann, treasurer of Preferred. Production and distribution plans for the new season will be completed while Mr. Schulberg is in New York. He expects to be in town for several weeks.

THEODORE ROBERTS, his friends will be glad to hear, has been able to leave Pittsburgh following his long illness and travel to his home in Hollywood. At the request of Mrs. Roberts there was no demonstration of welcome, although one had been planned. While extremely weak the veteran actor was in good spirits and confident that in home surroundings he will quickly and entirely regain his health.

THE Kay Street Theatre of Tacoma, under the direction of Jensen & Von Herberg, was opened Saturday, March 29, it is announced by H. T. Moore of the Moore Amusement Company.

CHARLES RAY'S first picture in the new series with Thomas H. Ince will be "Smith." Here's a smack in the eye for those who insist "It's all in the title." But Mr. Ince probably is thinking of the name of the star rather than the title. By the way, "Charles Ray in 'Smith'" will delight the heart of the man who worries how he is going to get it all into the lights. That will be easy. The player will be directed by Ralph Ince, the latter's first production on the west coast and also his first in association with his brother. The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan.

JOHN W. HICKS, Jr., managing director of Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., of Sydney, Australia, arrived in New York last week for his annual conference. Mr. Hicks is accompanied by Mrs. Hicks and their son.

IF any one has an idea that the lot of the small town exhibitor is all cakes and ale let him step out of it. A letter from John Neff of Hamburg, Iowa, written as the cold weather was drawing to a close, told of arising at 4:30 in the morning and taking care of two boilers in a school building of which for twenty-three years he has been janitor, the thermometer meanwhile ranging up or down to 24 degrees below zero. Mr. Neff has been running two Power's 6-B machines for six years. As it is close to midnight before he has a chance to call it a day we are inclined to believe him when he says "You can see that I am not playing around." No, indeed!

HARRY M. CRANDALL, president of Crandall's Tivoli Theatre Company of Washington, was host at an elaborate opening of Crandall's Tivoli Theatre of the capital city on the evening of April 5. The house is situated at Fourteenth street and Park Road, Northwest.

ARTHUR MACKLEY, known for years as the "Essanay Sheriff," has returned to the screen in the Arrow-Ben Wilson "Notch Number One." Mr. Mackley will play opposite the star, Mr. Wilson. The work of the "Sheriff" will be remembered with pleasure by all the old-time picturegoers. It was always of a high order, the player never permitting himself to be thrown out of his conception of what constituted good acting by the "western melodrama" surging about him. He was one of the first of the screen actors and he also was one of the first to employ the naturalistic form of interpretation, never giving currency to the fallacy that screen work required exaggeration. The late Arthur Johnson of the old Lubin company was another of the earlier players of whom the same might be said. All the old-timers will welcome Mr. Mackley and the later host will enjoy his work.

Good Fellowship Prevails at Kansas M. P. T. O. Convention

THE sixth annual convention of the M. P. T. O. Kansas, held in the Hotel Broadview, Emporia, Kansas, Tuesday and Wednesday, April 1 and 2, was in every sense a crowning tribute to the progress of that organization.

The banquet Tuesday night, at which 250 exhibitors and their families attended, was a spectacle without rival in the history of the organization. R. R. Biechele of the Osage theatre, Kansas City, former vice-president and one of the most ardent workers in the association, was elected president, succeeding R. G. Liggett, resigned.

Aside from a few "high spots" in certain resolutions and talks, the convention was more a gathering of progressive harmony rather than one of outstanding action toward policies or legislation. Construction was the keynote of both days.

Officers Elected

The other new officers:

Harry McClure, Strand theatre, Emporia; Charles Bull, Holland theatre, Wichita; A. R. Zimmer, Liberty theatre, Marysville, and Walter Wallace, Orpheum theatre, Leavenworth, vice-presidents; C. M. Smith, Tenth street theatre, Kansas City, secretary, and Fred Meyn, Pershing theatre, Kansas City, treasurer. Board of directors: Stanley M. Chambers, Miller theatre, Wichita; M. B. Shanberg, Midland Circuit of theatres; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum theatre, Topeka; E. E. Frazier, New Grand theatre, Pittsburg, Kansas; Walter Wallace, Orpheum theatre, Leavenworth; A. F. Baker, Electric theatre, Kansas City, and R. G. Liggett, Gautier theatre, Kansas City.

Following an address of welcome Tuesday morning by Walter Gunsolly, president of the Emporia Chamber of Commerce and a responsive address by President Liggett, Mrs. Z. Wetmore, president of the Kansas Parent-Teacher Association, made an appeal to the exhibitors to play films approved by the P. T. Association, using a small insignia of that organization in the advertising of pictures. A resolution, approving such an action was adopted, with the reservation that such pictures would be played as much as possible. Co-operation between the welfare committees of the exhibitor and P. T. organizations also was urged by Mrs. Wetmore.

The arbitration committee, appointed by the new president, consists of A. F. Baker, R. G. Liggett, Fred Meyn and C. M. Smith, all of Kansas City. Committees on promotion and research, auditing and other duties later will be appointed. A mammoth free luncheon Tuesday noon provided a colorful scene. An annual report, covering activities of the M. P. T. O. K. was given by Mr. Liggett at the banquet. Samuel A. Handy, attorney for the organization, urged exhibitors to keep up the fight against payment of music tax. The central shipping project was endorsed, while unfair competition of schools and churches came in for a panning.

Unfair Competition

John Tackett, of the Tackett theatre, Coffeyville, obtained a poster on his way to the convention, advertising "Rosita," a United Artists production, which was being played, he said, at big prices at the First Methodist Church of Ottawa, Kansas, where there are three theatres. With the one exception, the M. P. T. O. K. has an unwritten agreement with all producing companies that film is not to be sold to schools and churches for public exhibition, admission charged, without consent of the exhibitors.

"I don't believe exhibitors actually realize the power of their screens," Judge Richard Hopkins of the Kansas supreme court said at the banquet. "I don't believe you appreciate it. I believe the screen to be equally, if not more, powerful than the press of today. With its vast educational value, the screen should support only men of clean standards.

Music at the banquet was furnished by the Emporia Glee Club, while an address was given by Rollin Boynton, county prosecuting attorney. A gold watch was presented Mr. Liggett by Judge Hopkins as a token of appreciation of Mr. Liggett's services to the organization. A huge birthday cake was presented Mrs. Liggett by the Paramount exchange of Kansas City. Six candles, marking the anniversary of the M. P. T. O. K., were atop the cake, which was returned to Kansas City and served at a special gathering at the Paramount office, which is next door to the M. P. T. O. K. headquarters, the Kansas quarters being too small to accommodate the crowd.

Resolutions Passed

A lively atmosphere was lent the banquet by the Strand theatre orchestra of Emporia. Resolutions approving more economy in the production of films, opposing the playing of pictures where the stars are of questionable character, extending appreciation to senators and representatives in their work to abolish the war tax and appreciation of Mr. Liggett's services were adopted.

The Exhibitor's Midnight Frolic at the Strand theatre, Emporia, Tuesday night was the most successful event ever held in conjunction with a convention, it is said. A program of seven "acts" was arranged, but the "talent" was impromptu, an exhibitor being informed only ten minutes ahead of time the nature of the act in which he was to participate. Three-round battles, impersonation of Victor Herbert, violin solos, stockyard actors, the "dance of the dinosaur" and a short drama were staged with hilarious applause.

Following the convention, exhibitors of Kansas City were guests Thursday night of the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce; a huge banner designating the section occupied by the exhibitors. A pass to Kansas City theatres was awarded to the president of the Chamber of Commerce.

Registered List

Those who registered at the convention were: Abe B. Ulamperl; Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Smith, Kansas City; E. E. Frazier, Pittsburg; W. H. Webber, Great Bend; Roy A. Fuhrer, W. G. Valerius, Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Biechele, Charles A. Bull, H. B. Doreing, Walter Wallace, J. H. Kelley, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Liggett, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Meyn, C. E. Liggett, W. D. Frazier, O. K. Mason, Michael Mehman, A. R. Zimmer, W. P. Bernfield, S. A. Davidson, F. S. Davidson, Robert Holmes, H. L. McClure, Mrs. Alice Clark, A. F. Baker, L. Ware, G. L. Hooper, Stanley Chambers, E. D. Larson, John Tackett, Mr. and Mrs. E. Barbour, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Davidson, E. S. Schwan, H. Thatcher, E. R. Ruch, M. B. Shanberg, I. E. Runyan, George R. Koch, Mike Lehman, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sloop, Charles N. Barron, C. N. Balderston, G. J. Ranson, J. R. Burford, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Cook, Harry Keeler, Herbert Welsh, Raymond Gear, C. L. McVey, L. A. Wagner and H. R. Besby.

CANADIAN M. P. T. O. HAS PROGRESSIVE SPIRIT

Will Send Delegation to M.P.T.O. Convention in Boston

ANNOUNCEMENT was made at the last meeting of the Ontario Division of the M.P.T.O. of Canada, held as the regular monthly meeting of the association at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, that it is expected that at least 20 exhibitors from the Province of Ontario will attend the annual convention of the M.P.T.O. of the United States at Boston, Mass., on May 27, 28 and 29. Ray Lewis of Toronto was appointed official delegate of the Ontario Division to the Boston convention and others nominated to attend included J. C. Brady, proprietor of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, who is president of the Ontario M.P.T.O.; J. Cohen, treasurer, Toronto; Directors Harry Alexander, Harry Ginsler and M. Gebertig of Toronto; S. Lent, H. Rottenberg, Ben Cross, J. Smith, G. Lester and A. Applebaum of Toronto.

Announcement has been made of the appointment of Sidney Taube of Toronto as official traveling organizer of the Ontario M.P.T.O. with authority to enroll new members and to collect dues throughout the Province. Mr. Taube was formerly a well-known exchange manager, having been identified with Famous Players, Universal and other companies in various cities of the Dominion for a number of years.

Eight new members were enrolled at the recent meeting, these being J. C. McKenzie of the Princess Theatre, Seaforth, Ontario; M. Taylor, Monarch Theatre, Toronto; George F. Schneider, Regent Theatre, Peterboro; L. Rosenfeld, Pastime Theatre, New Toronto; S. Hamer, Variety Theatre, Toronto; Charles Rottenberg, Toronto; L. T. Patrick, of Stratford, Ontario, and S. Friedman, Woodbine Palace, Toronto.

"Your organization is functioning splendidly," was the tenor of the message which was received at the meeting from Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M.P.T.O. of America.

THE NEWS AT A GLANCE

The Davison bill, which was opposed by New York exhibitors, was defeated in the State Assembly, 77 to 65.

Carl Laemmle, just back from California, and W. R. Hearst sign contract for Universal to distribute International News Reel for the next five years.

Sol Lesser, vice president of West Coast theatres, issues a statement saying 25,000,000 have paid admissions to West Coast Theatre Circuit in past twelve months.

Portland, Ore., Protestant churches have started a boycott against picture theatres following a disagreement over Sunday opening hours.

R. F. Woodhull has been indorsed for president of the M. P. T. O. A. by the New Jersey M. P. T. O. board of directors.

Bill Hart severs his connection with Famous Players. A disagreement over the type of stories to be used brought the action.

Henry Ginsberg resigns as general salesmanager for Preferred. Max Roth has been appointed to fill the office.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas will hold their state convention in Dallas on May 6-7-8.

The Walker Bill, calling for the repeal of censorship in New York, is reported out of committee in Albany and the battle is now in progress.

R. R. Beichele, of Kansas City, is chosen president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas.

North Carolina M. P. T. O. annual convention will be held in Morehead City on June 11-12.

Harry Warner denies that his company plans to figure in a merger and says he will make 20 pictures this year.

Luis Firpo, "The Wild Bull of the Pampas," signs a contract to make serial for Theodore Wharton.

The Department of Internal Revenue sends out a warning that theatre owners must pay their taxes more promptly or indictments will follow.

Jerry Beatty has severed his connection with Preferred and is now with Universal as national director of exploitation.

Canada will send a large delegation to the M. P. T. O. A. convention in Boston.

At the opening of Norma Talmadge's "Secrets" in Los Angeles, tickets were sold by speculators for as high as $25 each.

Harmon Weight has been chosen to direct Betty Compson in "The Ramshackle House" for Hodgkinson.

Houston Thompson, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, asks the Independent Producers and Distributors Association to keep the gates of trade open through competitive methods.

Arthur Lowe, home from abroad, says Americans are using Europe as a dumping ground for old films.

Charles Ray's first picture under his new Ince contract will be "Smith."

There are 578 exclusive picture houses in New York City. This compares with 423 in 1919, according to an official city report.

Harry Warner Spikes Rumors Concerning Consolidation Plans

THIS is the open season for rumors in the film industry and one of the most prominent and persistent rumors recently has been regarding the probable affiliation of the Warner Brothers organization with one or another of the more prominent established releasing companies.

So wild and varied have some of the statements become, that Harry M. Warner, senior member of the Warner Brothers, felt that the time had arrived, in justice to all concerned to make known the position of the Warner organization in respect to its producing and releasing plans for the 1924-25 season.

In a statement Mr. Warner said:

"Within the past five or six weeks the name of Warner Brothers has been linked with nearly every producing and distributing organization in the motion picture industry.

"In justice, not only to ourselves, but to the other concerns who have been mentioned and also to our franchise holders and exhibitors who are interested in our product, I am making this statement to clear the situation and to settle the various rumors that are floating around.

"Our firm consists of four brothers, H. M. Warner, A. Warner, S. L. Warner and J. L. Warner, which to us, is enough of a consolidation without affiliating with any other concern.

"The production of photoplays that are successful both artistically and financially is the result of experience. No sane man would think of establishing a law office or proclaiming himself a physician simply because he had, or could obtain $100,000 or any given sum. The motion picture is an even more complicated combination of art and business than the two professions named and it requires all the thought that any person can put into it, plus years of arduous work.

"Therefore it can be definitely stated to the industry at large that Warner Brothers are going to remain independent."

COURT OF APPEALS DECIDES ON DRAMATIC RIGHTS

Albany, N. Y.—The Court of Appeals, in New York State, holds that film and dramatic rights are not similar. The Court rendered this decision last week, in an injunction action that had been brought by John G. Underhill, in an effort to restrain Richard G. Herndon, from showing "La Malquerida," as a motion picture.

Underhill obtained the right to translate and produce the play, from the offer and made a contract with Herndon, giving the latter the exclusive dramatic rights on the payment of royalties.

Herndon produced the play under the name of "The Passion Flower." He then sold the picture rights to Joseph Schenck for $22,500, the latter producing a film with Norma Talmadge as the star. It was Underhill's contention that the motion picture rights had not been given to Herndon, and that its showing in pictures competed with the play and hurt him financially.

BILL HART AND FAMOUS PLAYERS DISAGREE

Unable to Agree on Type of Stories Best Suited to the Actor

WILLIAM S. HART and Famous Players have agreed to disagree and the deal pending between the two is declared off. The trouble arose from a difference of opinion as to the stories Hart should use in his pictures. The actor held out for the right to choose his own stories, claiming his experience in acting qualified him to judge the merits of a story best suited to himself.

The company intimated that Hart's latest vehicles did not carry enough appeal, or rather were not especially adapted to the actor's type.

Hart has left for the Coast without any definite plans as to the future, but it is considered quite likely he will produce a series of pictures under his own name.

FRENCH SCENES COMPLETED FOR 'MONSIEUR BEUCAIRE'

Sidney Olcott has completed the French sequences of "Monsieur Beaucaire," Rodolph Valentino's new starring picture, at the Paramount Long Island studio and is starting on the English part of the story. In this part Doris Keryon, who plays Lady Mary, and Ian McLaren, who has the role of the Duke of Winterset, will have important work to do. Valentino will have two duels to fight and much other strenuous activity in the English sequence.

DAVISON BILL FAILS TO PASS NEW YORK ASSEMBLY

Albany, April 10.—By a vote of 77 to 65 the Davison censorship repeal bill was defeated in the Assembly this afternoon. Seven Republicans voted in favor of the bill and three Democrats against it.

The defeat of the Davison bill means also the defeat of the Walker censorship repeal bill when it comes from the Senate, which is expected to pass that measure this afternoon, or tomorrow.

The Davison bill called for the repeal of the censorship act and in its stead placed a clause in the penal code making the exhibition of an immoral picture an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment and revocation of license of the theatre showing the picture.

Theatre owners throughout the State worked for the defeat of the bill, fearing an abuse of power and the placing of their houses in the hands of the politicians.

Shady Stock Selling Companies Injure Legitimate Producers

By L. J. DARMOUR,

Assistant to the President of Selznick Distributing Corporation

IT has become a popular indoor sport for various people of more or less importance both inside and outside of the industry to sporadically break into print with gratuitous slams at the motion picture business as a whole, with impressive analyses of what's wrong with us and the suggestions for complete panaceas for all our ills.

Some of these remedies are ridiculous, some of them merely interesting while a few, (a very few), contain really constructive suggestions. In the face of so many solutions and analyses certainly one more won't hurt and I am advancing here an outline of what I sincerely believe to be one of the dominant ills of our business. What I have to offer may be food for thought for the general public (which so generously and gullibly insists on investing in wild-cat motion picture promotion schemes), and that vast army of workers which looks to the motion picture industry for its sustenance.

Perhaps the greatest evil confronting those sincerely interested in the success of the motion picture business is the exorbitantly high costs chargeable to production, and, if we delve deep enough, we find in many instances that the greatest single expense involved in these costs comes under head of "finance," which means the rate of interest paid for the money borrowed by legitimate producers to complete productions which were started on their own capital but which they were unable to wholly finance. The rates of interest charged for money of this kind are incredibly, almost unbelievably, high. As an example; a production for which we recently negotiated for distribution rights carried a negative cost of $100,000. Upon investigation we found that the actual negative cost was $75,000 and the interest charges made up the other $25,000.

In considering this matter of financing production we must draw a sharp dividing line between what we might term "producing-producers" and "promoter-producers." The first classification includes those really earnest men mentioned above, who are intent on creating the best in motion pictures, but who are unable to wholly finance their production activities. These men are forced to seek outside financial aid borrowing money against their finished, or partly finished negatives. Occasionally this type of producer makes his production a stock proposition and sells stock sufficient to cover his actual production costs. This is entirely legitimate and if the production is a successful one it represents a perfectly sane investment.

In the case of the promoter-producer we most times face a different type of operator. Ostensibly his objective is the production of motion pictures. Actually he is primarily and principally interested in stock selling, or promotion, whichever you elect to call it. He forms a financing corporation tacking to it some high-sounding, impressive name, and then dumps a few million shares of stock or units on the market with the understanding that the money derived is to be expended in the production of motion pictures at an amazing profit to all investors. And these same gullible investors flock in and lay their hard-earned savings in his greedy hands and incidentally kiss them good-bye.

FRASER DENIES LLOYD WILL CHANGE DISTRIBUTION

Regardless of all rumors to the contrary, Harold Lloyd has signed no new contract for the distribution of his independent comedy features. The Lloyd productions will continue to be distributed by Pathe Exchanges, Inc.

A statement issued by William R. Fraser, general manager of Harold Lloyd Corporation says there is no foundation for any report that Lloyd would change the present distribution plans. Lloyd has two more pictures to make for Pathe and it will require at least a year to complete them.

J. D. Williams, president of Ritz-Carlton Pictures issued a statement denying having said that he had Harold Lloyd under contract upon completion of his contract with Pathe.

WINNIPEG OVER-SEATED

An indication of the manner in which Winnipeg is over-seated, it is claimed, is shown by the fact that admission prices at the Metropolitan, which was formerly the Allen Theatre, have twice been reduced during the past couple of months, the one admission for matinee performances being 25 cents and evening prices ranging from 25 to 40 cents with 50 cents for the loges.

There was no orchestra at the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, for several weeks because of a strike among the musicians.

'BEAU BRUMMEL' RUSH DISRUPTS SCHEDULE

Strand Forced to Start Show Early to Accommodate Crowds

THE popularity of "Beau Brummel" and the fact that thousands were unable to see the picture, induced the Mark Strand Theatre management to change its opening schedule, last week. The usual opening time is one o'clock, but such was the pressure on the box office that after the first day it was changed to noon. Even this proved unsatisfactory, due to the rush of the Monday matinee crowds; once again a change was made, with eleven o'clock the starting hour. All last week crowds could be seen long before eleven o'clock waiting for admittance. The lines were a block long during every matinee, and extra box offices were installed to handle the crowds.

Broadway was thus afforded the sight of a motion picture house which opened early in the morning, in this way resembling the theatres of the smaller towns which begin activities around ten or eleven o'clock.

The attraction is proving so popular that "Beau Brummel" is being held over a second week. This was decided after the record business of the first few days. There has been no abatement in box office receipts, and the Mark Strand management expects second week receipts to be as strong as the first one.

WARNER OPENS NEW OFFICE

Following close upon the announcement of their special booking period between April 27 and June 1. Warner Brothers now announce a further extension of activities through the opening of an Indianapolis office, which took place April 7, and is located at 220 Wimmer Building. This step has been occasioned through the increasing demand for their product, which has been proving itself exceptionally successful, and through a desire to facilitate business with their accounts.

POOR PICTURES FLOODING FOREIGN MARKET

Arthur Loew Says America Using Europe for Dumping Ground

THAT American producers are losing thousands of dollars in England as well as on the continent, as the result of flooding the foreign market with too many back releases that cannot compete with current productions, is the statement of Arthur Loew, general manager of the foreign department of Metro Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Loew has just returned from a three months' tour of investigation throughout Europe, in the interests of his company, during which he visited France, England, Belgium, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Austria, Italy and Spain.

Conditions are much improved, according to Mr. Loew, since his last visit six months ago, except in certain countries where American producers and distributors are dumping on the market American pictures made three and four years ago.

"The foreign market is limited as to theatres," said Mr. Loew, "and they are all eager to buy outright or play percentage the big American feature productions, such as 'Scaramouche.' This demand has created a buyer's market that should mean even more to American producers in future years than it does at present. Instead of taking advantage of this opportunity to build up good will through the foreign market, and realize the largest financial profit, what have American distributors done?"

"They have literally flooded the foreign markets with old releases of several years ago, and films of inferior quality, that cannot compare with current productions, because the short-sighted producers figure that they have the pictures and whatever they can get is profit. The result is that American producers are, to put it truly, 'cutting off their noses to spite their faces.'"

CO-OPERATION ASKED BY TRADE COMMISSION

Urges Independents to Build for Foreign Business

HOUSTON THOMPSON, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission at Washington, aroused the members of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association to a high pitch of enthusiasm at their regular monthly luncheon held April 8 at the Astor when he told them how the Independents could profit themselves and the government by helping "Keep Open the Gates of Trade" through competitive methods.

The Federal Trade Commissioner detailed the policy and inner workings of the governmental bureau through a simile to an umpire operating in behalf of public welfare. His address and encouragement was received with rousing welcome and his earnest advice that each independent producer try to build every production with a consideration of foreign audiences and their attitude toward Americanism registered deeply in the sincerity chambers of his producer listeners.

Robert E. Welsh, editor of the Moving Picture World, brought a hearty response when he followed with an earnest appeal to all of the members to avoid cliques and factions and to maintain the unification upon which the association was founded.

Probably the most direct appeal was made by Oscar N. Neufeld of the De Luxe Film Exchange, Philadelphia, and president of the Film Board of Trade in that city. His discussion dealt with credit amongst the reputable exchange men and a hope that the time was not far distant when the state rights buyers themselves might become an integral part of the association.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, who had hurried in from Chicago, and Joe Brandt, who had just returned from a trip to the coast, arrived in time for dessert and the addresses.

The regular monthly business meeting of the association will be held Thursday at the offices at 1650 Broadway.

JOHN B. ROCK EXPECTS BIG SEASON

Vitagraph Manager Says Business Is Steadily Improving

THE coming summer will be the most prosperous the motion picture industry has known for ten years, declared John B. Rock, general manager of Vitagraph, Inc., upon his return from a flying visit to his sales organizations in Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Buffalo and Albany. General prosperity both in agrarian and manufacturing districts, as well as the relief afforded by the lifting of the theatre tax is the impetus behind the increased exhibitors' business.

These conclusions are the result of specific territory surveys made by the Vitagraph sales force under the direction of branch managers and which were reported to Mr. Rock at general sales meetings in each of the cities visited. The reports were based on data gathered by municipal commercial organizations and state authorities in the capitals of the various states in these territories.

"Exhibitors in the middle states and the East are preparing for unusual patronage this summer," he said. "The ticket tax relief undoubtedly has contributed to theatre prosperity, but I am sure that the character of pictures that are now being made, such as the superfeatures now on the Vitagraph list is the reason for the increased attendance."

"Vitagraph has never been in so stable a condition as today. It has in distribution a score of superfeatures all of high grade production, excellent direction and box office casts, and, the pictures now ready, but not yet in the hands of our branches are of the same fan pulling calibre."

"I am more than glad to find in the territories that I visited that Vitagraph representatives are giving the theatre owners and managers the same helpful co-operation for which this company has been famous in the industry since its organization. Prints are carefully scrutinized before leaving every exchange and advertising accessories and exploitation aids are furnished in abundance, in addition to which the salesmen themselves follow their bookings through and see to it that exhibitors are satisfied. I am proud of the record of Vitagraph men; and I have the word of President Albert E. Smith, who is now in Hollywood, that our coming pictures will be products that will back up the statements and predictions of every salesman on our staff."

ROBERT VIGNOLA LEAVES FOR COAST STUDIO

New Metro Director Ready to Start Work on First Production

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA, who recently entered into an arrangement with Metro for the production of a long series of Robert G. Vignola Productions, left for the coast this week and soon after his arrival at the Metro studios in Hollywood he will begin work on the first of his new pictures.

The initial photodrama to be made for Metro by Mr. Vignola will be from an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon. Advance information indicates that it will prove an unusually interesting story, full of color and dramatic high lights providing Mr. Vignola with broad opportunities for bringing into play the vast amount of data that he compiled on his recent tour of the world. As a matter of fact, the director undertook his trip around the globe with the express purpose of gathering data and adding to his knowledge of all countries and all peoples to be used in his forthcoming motion picture productions.

Soon after his arrival on the coast Mr. Vignola will begin the selection of his cast and immediately after this has been completed he will begin the actual shooting of the scenes and it is expected that his first production will be among the first releases on Metro's next season program.

BENNETT PICTURE RETITLED

Whitman Bennett announces that he has decided to change the title of the production now being made at his studio in Yonkers from "Divorced in Name Only" to "Love of Women."

Mr. Bennett gives as his reason for making this change his conviction that so-called "sensational" titles have been overdone to such an extent that, even when appropriate, they are no longer effective from a business viewpoint.

The actual taking of the picture will be finished within another week and it should be ready for the market within about a month.

'SCARAMOUCHE' MAKES RECORD IN ASHEVILLE

Manager E. D. Turner topped all records of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., with Metro's "Scaramouche." He could not help but do so after the bang-up campaign which focused attention on his attraction.

A thirty foot "Scaramouche" banner was hung over Pack Square for a week preceding the opening. The Square is the heart of the city, and incidentally, this is the first time such a stunt has been permitted in Asheville. You see, with Turner there is no such word as "can't." The Red Top Taxicab Company distributed ten thousand pamphlets with the cabs. These advertised both the cabs and the picture—but were paid for by the cab company. Each taxi carried a thirty-inch on the spare tire reading: "Take a Red Top Cab to See 'Scaramouche' at the Imperial Theatre."

Local window tie-ups helped remarkably. Four book stores displayed oil paintings with the photoplay edition of Rafael Sabatini's novel, drug stores gave up their windows to a Slendaform-Scaramouche tie-up with stills from the picture, and so on. A private screening was arranged for the Asheville Better Film Committee with the result that the Committee endorsed the picture for newspaper publication and spread its enthusiasm to the public through the Parents-Teachers Association.

The "Imperial Close-up," a special leaflet detailing the story, was distributed to thousands, and as a final touch airplanes flew over Asheville through the busiest hours raining circulars in the main sections.

'LILIES' STAND 'EM UP

Telegrams received by E. A. Eschmann, First National's Indianapolis general manager of distribution, during the past two weeks, prove the unanimity of opinion on the dramatic worth of "Lilies of the Field," its drawing power at the box office, and the popularity of Miss Griffith.

The Main Street theatre of Kansas City wired: "Lilies of the Field" opened to hold-out business in thirty-one hundred seat house. The picture highly lauded by press and public. Corinne Griffith now established here as one of the screen's strongest drawing cards."

In San Francisco the picture did absolute capacity business at the Warfield Theatre. "Corinne Griffith," wired the management, "is the talk of the town and there is no doubt but that this picture makes her one of the greatest stars on the screen."

"Lilies of the Field," stated Floyd Brown, First National's Indianapolis manager, "brought out the largest crowds to Circle Theatre that the house has experienced in weeks. Corinne Griffith's work in this picture and in 'Black Oxen' has made her a star of the first magnitude. Exhibitors will reap a harvest with 'Lilies of the Field.'"

'THREE WEEKS' A WINNER

Goldwyn's film version of Elinor Glyn's sensationally successful novel, "Three Weeks," had its first New York showing at the Capitol Theatre last week. It did the biggest Sunday night business in the history of the theatre and the attendance for the entire showing, up to date, has been of unusual proportions. The public has responded to the romance and the sentiment of this photoplay as to a charm, justifying the time and the money spent on it. Both Aileen Pringle and Conrad Nagel received most laudatory notices for their excellent acting. The metropolitan newspapers freely recognized the box office value of this production, the artistry with which it has been produced, the excellence of its direction and acting.

Taking the New York reception of the picture and the furor which it has created here, in Washington and in San Francisco, Goldwyn may well feel that it has one of the big picture hits of the year on its hands.

'GALLOPING FISH' HAS BIG OPENING IN SEATTLE

"Galloping Fish," Thomas H. Ince's comedy produced for First National, opened March 15 for a week at the Liberty, Seattle. Newspaper comment was enthusiastic, the Seattle Star in particular declaring the rapid-action comedy as funny as its title "and literally packed with laughs and thrills."

According to telegrams received at the First National New York office, the comedy proved one of the strongest box office attractions of the past six months.

'WHITE SISTER' BREAKS RECORD

Mr. Citron, who is general manager of the Louis R. Greenfield Theatres, who control the Santa Cruz, wrote to Fred Voigt, manager of the Metro office in San Francisco as follows:

"I am certain that I derive as much pleasure in writing you this letter as you will from reading it. The phenomenal success of the Metro release of Henry King's 'The White Sister' at our New Santa Cruz Theatre prompts me to congratulate your organization and yourself because of your connection with an attraction of this kind. The box office value of 'The White Sister' was clearly demonstrated at the New Santa Cruz Theatre. I am pleased to inform you that the opening day of 'The White Sister' at the New Santa Cruz Theatre broke all the records on all attractions which have played in the theatre. On the following day however 'The White Sister' broke its own opening record by a substantial sum."

"After Six Days," Artclass Pictures Corporation, opened at the Nixon Theatre in Pittsburgh on Monday, March 31, to the two largest attendances ever attracted to that theatre by a photoplay production.

The film is scheduled to remain at the Nixon for an indefinite run and, by present indications, seems certain to equal the run of the same picture at the Tremont Temple in Boston, where it has entered upon its fifth record breaking week, showing twice daily to capacity audiences.

The Pittsburgh reviewers were very laudatory in their comments on the film, some classing it as one of the really few great epics of the screen.

LEADERS ALL

Robert H. Cochrane, Practical Psychologist

EIGHTEEN years' uninterrupted partnership comes pretty near to being a record in the film industry. It was late in 1906 that Robert H. Cochrane, then in an advertising agency in Chicago, became affiliated with Carl Laemmle, who had just opened an exchange in the same city.

Mr. Cochrane took to the showmanship side of the theatre like a duck to water. Before entering the advertising business he had spent seven years in a newspaper office, and undoubtedly it was the training he had there received, the development of the news sense, that gave him such an uncanny grip on the art of writing attention compelling advertisements.

For it was on the advertising side of the industry that Mr. Cochrane made his deepest impress on motion picture men in the earlier days of his association with Mr. Laemmle.

He had the knack intuitively of digging under the skin of the customer prospective or actual he wanted to reach and also searing the soul of his uncomfortable target.

It was a straight shaft which flew from the bow of this young associate of Mr. Laemmle. It struck hard and bored deep. Almost always it aroused antagonism, the man who was hit fought back, and the fight was on.

MR. COCHRANE was born in Wheeling, West Va., and at an early age his family moved to Toledo, Ohio. Here he went to school. Following graduation from high school in 1897, he became a reporter on the Bee.

The initial salary was $6 a week. It was not long before the reporter was advanced to city editor and the compensation increased to $13.

In 1904 Mr. Cochrane went to Chicago to join his brothers, Phil D. and Witt K., in the Cochrane Advertising Agency. The firm handled the regular run of newspaper and magazine accounts.

One of these accounts was that of the Continental Clothing Company of Oshkosh, Wis., of which Carl Laemmle was manager. In February, 1906, Mr. Laemmle bought a theatre in Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, and in the following October he opened an exchange.

It was a few weeks after this that

LEADERS ALL—R. H. COCHRANE

BECAUSE he began his career with the advantage of seven years in newspaper work with its large contact with men; because following that in an advertising agency he had full opportunity to develop his natural aptitude for arousing the other man's interest in the most direct way; because of his unerring facility in striking the weak spot of his opponent's armor; and because of his straightforward and aboveboard ways of conducting business

Mr. Cochrane bought an interest in the Laemmle Film Service. Thrown into more intimate companionship with him he saw at once the lovable qualities of his new associate and realized that these attributes were Mr. Laemmle's greatest initial assets.

JUST at that time Rockefeller and Standard Oil were under attack. Mr. Cochrane suggested to Mr. Laemmle that if the oil man had started thirty years before to build up public esteem for himself no amount of mudslinging could have made him a villain to the public. He had waited too long before starting to employ the power of the press to show his human side.

Mr. Cochrane added that if Mr. Laemmle would permit him to present his personality to the public as he saw it he would make him known over the world in a short time. He explained that whether the ads brought criticism or praise they would in any event make him talked about and that was what he wanted.

With the suggestion came an intimation from Mr. Cochrane that Mr. Laemmle might be subjected to some criticism, but if the latter would stand pat he would guarantee the results.

Mr. Laemmle did stand pat, and Mr. Cochrane demonstrated his knowledge of the psychology of advertising. Mr. Laemmle and his service became world famous.

Back of Mr. Cochrane's plan of campaign was the conviction that the world will take an interest in a likeable aggressive human being where it will not in a hard-boiled corporation. The idea was revolutionary in those days, but it has been used in many lines with success since.

"I have been in the United States forty years," said Mr. Laemmle the other day. "Just one-half of that period I have been closely associated with Mr. Cochrane, for we have always worked very closely together. Yes, team work is the expression. We have never run out of ideas, so far as that goes.

"There is one trait about Mr. Cochrane that is outstanding: He never hesitates to give credit to the other fellow and he is never too proud to accept the other fellow's idea.

"Our advertising has been unique from the very start. It was different from anybody else's, just as it is today. Take our Saturday Evening Post advertising. I can show you hundreds of letters from the readers of that magazine. Some of them tell me the first thing they look for is our advertising."

No history of the development of the film industry will be complete without a record of Mr. Cochrane's contribution to its advertising, not to mention other substantial if less spectacular achievements in the building up of a great company and an important division of the country's commerce. As to the former it made a distinct mark upon its time.

In January, 1913, Mr. Cochrane became a full-fledged and an active member of the Universal organization, severing his connection with the advertising agency and coming to New York, where he has occupied the office of vice president ever since.

The Passing
Edward Earl

THE death of Edward Earl, president of the Nicholas Power Company, came as a distinct shock to his friends. Although he had been ill for a year there was a general belief that he would come through the ordeal and be spared many years of usefulness. He was of a particularly sunny disposition, a man who attracted others to him. He was one of those who impress others on sight and most favorably impress them.

Distinguished in appearance and genial in manner, with a ready and hearty handclasp, casual acquaintances quickly became his steadfast friends. Mr. Earl had been a bank president before he went to the Power Company a decade ago. Large responsibilities were no strangers to him. He faced them as a part of the day's work. With the same fine courage he stood up under the blow of the death of his son—a splendid young man—as a result of an aeroplane accident following the war.

The affection in which he was held by his subordinates in the Power Company was the best proof of the larger personal qualities possessed by him. The sorrow of these men in the passing of their chief will be shared by the trade at large.

Extending the Tenure of
Will H. Hays

WILL H. HAYS is to be with us for three years beyond the time originally allotted—in other words, until March, 1928. For that there is reason to congratulate the industry and the public as well. And it is with the public that Mr. Hays' work has counted most heavily.

In making that statement we are not minimizing the sum of his achievements within the industry. At the time Mr. Hays entered upon his work the trade was confronted by a serious condition. It was a genuine "situation."

Hiram Abrams
Ignores Rumormakers

THE renewal of the agreement between the four contributing members of the United Artists and the corporation as represented by its president, Hiram Abrams, emphasizes the unreliability of the old saw which declares where there is much smoke there must be some fire—at least when the allusion has reference to the motion picture business.

More than that, the extension for three years of the contract between the contributors and the company following five years of successful operation shows how thoroughly the precedents of other years may be smashed.

Through influences which even in their broader reach affected only a small portion of the industry, so small as to be practically negligible, magnified by large-eared and clarion-tongued sensational newspapers, public confidence in the screen was threatened.

As a result of the work of Mr. Hays and his organization that hysteria was dissipated.

The extension of the life of the contract with its chief executive is a proof of the faith in the "Hays organization" on the part of the men who contribute the money to maintain it, of their belief that it is a useful institution.

Those who recall the situation at the time of the organization will bear out the statement that it was commonly agreed "it just can't be done"—that the four players and directors who could work together in amity on a business proposition hadn't been born, that the artistic temperament was one thing but that the business instinct was something else again, and that the two would not mix in groups.

The fact remains they have mixed. There are those who deny Mr. Abrams is a diplomat. If that be true then the measure of his business ability must be all the greater. Still, when a man holds four aces he can afford to sit tight and look pleasant.

Woodhull
Is Now a Favorite Son

THE action of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey in presenting R. F. ("Pete") Woodhull for president of the national organization marks the formal opening of the campaign for that office. When it is borne in mind the election is but a little more than six weeks away and that up to date no other hats are in the ring it will be apparent the atmosphere is anything but surcharged.

A year ago at this corresponding period it was different. Then there were several active candidates. It was a quiet day that didn't bring to an editor's desk one or more statements on behalf of the contenders. Some of them were a trifle ungente in their contents, but it could not be said they were dull.

Without prejudice to the claims or merits of any others who may be nominated for the high office of national president it is our belief that Mr. Woodhull is a worthy candidate.

He has had wide experience in organization work, not only in his own state but in the national body as well. He has ability and he has tact—and he is a graceful presiding officer. New Jersey is well represented by her favorite son.

BARTHELMESS SHINES IN CHARACTER ROLE

'Enchanted Cottage' Artistic and Moving, With Pretty Love Theme

ENCHANTED COTTAGE. A First National Picture. Produced by Inspiration Pictures Inc. Adapted from the play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero by Josephine Lovett. Directed by John S. Robertson Length,

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Oliver Bashforth Richard Barthelmess
Mrs. Smallwood, his mother Ida Waterman
Rupert Smallwood, his stepfather Alfred Hickman
Ethel Bashforth, his sister Florence Short
Beatrice Vaughn Marion Coakley
Major Murray Hillgrove Holmes E. Herbert
Laura Pennington May McAvoy
Mrs. Minnett Ethel Wright

Oliver Bashforth, physically wrecked by the late war and hating himself because of his twisted body and hollow cheeks, breaks his engagement with his boyhood sweetheart and quits his family to seek isolation in a lonely cottage in the woods. There he meets Laura, a lonely little governess, whose plainness makes her unattractive to men. They marry and then both commit themselves to intense depression because they are both so ugly. However, with the dawning of real love, both commence to see each other through the beauty of the soul, with the consequence that each appears as handsome to each other as either could wish. In the week of their enchantment they have found love and they look forward to a future happiness and to the creation of children who will embody the beauty they do not possess.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

GIVEN a screen vehicle in which opportunities for fine characterization abound, you have something which is meat and drink to Richard Barthelmess. For that reason the dark-eyed, sleek-haired star assimilates, digests, and converts into clean, wholesome, red-blooded tissue the ingredients which make up "Enchanted Cottage."

In this reviewer's opinion, nothing Barthelmess has done to date excels his performance in Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's after the war romance. A twisted, hollow-cheeked victim of the world war, he is a tragic figure of a man. It is a powerful characterization, or, one might rather say, a character study, as stirring in its essence as any story which depends on lightning-bolt action for effect.

One is almost constrained to fear that this photodrama's very virtues may prove its box office undoing, especially in locales where much subtlety and artistry bordering on the sheer aesthetic is of little or no account to the fans. However, most folks are going to pulsate sympathetically to Barthelmess' conception of Oliver, careworn, stoop-shouldered, limping and wan.

The theme is interesting and in this case the possibilities for enhancing its dramatic value have been carefully attended to. A hero and a heroine who hate themselves because they are not beautiful! Rather original, one must admit, but nothing of the hurly-burly in it to appease the hearts of folks who crave action of the hurricane order. For real lovers of inspiring, beautiful drama however, it will be nector and the fragrance of roses. There is a character portrayal that is simply amazing in its effectiveness and a story as simple and as beautiful as "The Song of Songs."

The theme in which Oliver Bashforth, war-racked shell of a man, goes to the little country cottage in order to find complete isolation, only to meet Laura Pennington, and have a charming romance develop between them is one in which Barthelmess and Miss McAvoy win bright, sparkling dramatic spurs. There is pronounced deftness and originality in the rendering of the drama sequence in which Oliver the deformed, and Laura, the ugly, appear as lovely and attractive as they wish themselves to be. Throughout the unfolding of the story splendid characterization is the outstanding feature.

The high pitch of dramatic moments is struck when Oliver in a moment of self-denunciation, stands in front of the mirror and curses his hapless image. He then hobbles across the room, hurls his cane at the glass and falls to the floor in a swoon.

May McAvoy in the supporting "ugly-duckling" role rivals Barthelmess' portrayal. The screen story in toto is a credit to the directing genius of John S. Robertson.

The finished calibre of the story and the performance should be maintained in the exploitation on the part of the exhibitor and to do this is a comparatively simple matter. The most logical tie-up would be with the local real estate agents. Especially since the picture will be shown at a season when everyone is interested in buying and renting houses. There should be no difficulty in arranging for poster displays and such in which the name of the picture and the property may be beneficially linked together.

'Virtuous Liars' Serves as Program Attraction of Ordinary Caliber

VIRTUOUS LIARS. Whitman Bennett Photoplay. Released by Vitagraph. Author, E. C. Holland. Director, Whitman Bennett. Length, 5,800 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Norman Wright David Powell
Josiah Wright Maurice Costello
Edith Banton Edith Allen
Jack Banton Ralph Kellard
Julia Livingston Naomi Childers
Livingston Burr McIntosh
Juanita Dagmar Godowsky

Jack Banton deserts his wife, Edith, and their three-year-old child, goes to Havana and becomes involved with Juanita, a Cuban girl. Edith pursues an art career, aided by Josiah Wright, a wealthy man, whose nephew, Dr. Norman Wright, is engaged to Julia Livingston. Josiah dies, leaving Edith a fortune. She loves Dr. Wright. Banton returns, blackmails his wife and abducts the child. Juanita follows Banton. Edith buys her freedom from Banton, who is slain by a Cuban infatuated with Juanita. Julia breaks her engagement with Dr. Wright, who weds Edith.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

AN average picture, affording a fair measure of entertainment, "Virtuous Liars" is neither better nor worse than many other feature films ranking as ordinary program attractions. It will pass muster with audiences of a not too critical turn of mind, and in such localities probably roll up good box office returns.

The cast is a capable one, and thanks to the united efforts of director and players, a rather unconvincing plot is invested with some semblance of reality. Also, the photography is admirable, the lighting effects excellent and reasonably attractive settings are in evidence.

Apart from the fact that the heroine, separated from her philandering husband, deems it advisable to masquerade as a young widow, the picture's title has little enough to do with pointing out the march of events. But at least, "Virtuous Liars" has a "catchy" sound, and as such, is not without advertising value.

There is always a certain amount of sympathy aroused in behalf of a young movie mother thrown upon the world's cold mercy to work out her own destiny, and Edith Banton gets her full share, when she is shown pursuing an artistic career under financial difficulties. Undoubtedly the best situations are those which arise as a result of the elderly Josiah Wright's devotion to her, a devotion which has pleasant consequences for Edith, inasmuch as his sudden demise leaves her the mistress of a comfortable fortune.

Edith Allen, Maurice Costello and David Powell are the best names to exploit. Dwell on the love romance, the trials of the deserted wife, her love for her child, the clever work of the players and fine photography, and utilize the title as a catch-phrase in your advertising.

'A Man's Mate' Suitable for Houses Where Bill Changes Frequently

A Man's Mate. Fox Photoplay. Author, Charles Kenyon. Director, Edmund Mortimer. Length, 5,041 feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Paul John Gilbert
Wildcat Renee Adoree
Lion Noble Johnson
Monsieur Bonard Wilfrid North
Father Pierre Thomas Mills
Veraign James Neill Lynx John Giddings
Sybil Patterson Dial

Paul Bonard's wealthy father is opposed to his son's choice of an artist's career. Two Apaches, the Lion and Lynx, quarrel over the Wildcat, female member of their gang. The Lynx flees, meets Paul, stuns him and changes clothes with him. He is brought to the Apache den, where he conquers the Lion in a desperate fight. Paul has lost his memory and falls in love with the Wildcat. He paints a picture of her. She discovers his identity, he goes home, submits to an operation and recovers his memory. Later he seeks out and marries the Wildcat.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A PROGRAM attraction of average merit! It will serve to fill a gap in theatres where a frequent change of bill occurs, but hardly meets the demand of houses catering to critical patronage.

Pictures dealing with Apache characters have been plentiful of late, so much so that it is difficult to impart a semblance of originality to any feature wherein the Paris gangsters run riot and quarrel over the charms of an underworld queen. "A Man's Mate" follows conventional plot lines and is moreover handicapped by carrying the burden of a familiar loss-of-memory theme.

The best situation in the picture is the savage combat between Paul Bonard and a ferocious chap known as the Lion, who is the scrapping champion of the Apache band. Paul, kidnapped by certain pals of the Lion, in mistake for one of the bunch who runs away to avoid fighting the chief slugger, tears into the latter like a mad bull and a battle ensues which is a sure-enough jewel of hot action.

The work of the leading players goes far toward keeping the story's interest alive. Renee Adoree fits snugly into the Apache girl heroine role.

Make the most of the terrific fight between the Apache chief and John Gilbert, when exploiting the feature. Dwell on the underworld life of Paris, as set forth in the film, and stress the love interest. Besides John Gilbert, Renee Adoree is popular with the fans and her name should be displayed prominently with that of the star in your advertisement.

BULLY FILM MADE FROM SERVICE POEM

*'Shooting of Dan McGrew', Stunning
Melodrama and a Sure Box Office Winner*

THE SHOOTING OF DAN MCGREW. Metro Photoplay. Based on Poem of the Same Title by Robert W. Service. Director, Clarence Badger. Length, 6,318 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Lou	Barbara La Marr
Dan McGrew	Lew Cody
Jim	Percy Marmont
Isador Burke	Max Ascher
Ragtime Kid	Fred Warren
Saloon Owner	George Siegmann
Lou's Companion	Mae Busch
Little Jim	Phillipe de Lacy

The troupe of which Lou Lorraine is leading dancer is successful in South America, but she urges her husband to leave there for the sake of their two-year-old boy, named after his father, Jim. Dan McGrew offers to put Lou on the New York stage. He warns Jim in a fight and Lou runs away with him. Jim takes his son to New York, encounters McGrew, who escapes from him. Lou and McGrew go to Alaska. She becomes a decoy in the Malamute saloon. Jim learns that Lou was duped by her abductor. He follows them to the Klondike, shoots and kills McGrew and husband, wife and child are reunited.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

AN attraction which should roll up a winning score in the box office of any theatre! "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" is frankly melodramatic and highly colored stuff, at that, but so well directed, photographed and acted that it stands head and shoulders over the average picture of the kind.

Robert W. Service's well known poem furnishes the title and skeleton of the plot, but as the verses merely detail the slaying of McGrew, with no hint as to the past history of the parties concerned in the affair, it became necessary for the scenario writer to dope out a complete story for the screen.

This task has been successfully accomplished, the narrative is clear, coherent, easy to follow and possesses remarkably fine continuity. Also, the subtitles are terse, forcible and straight to the point, helping the action along amazingly. Everyone connected with the production seems to have done his or her level best in the moulding of its entertainment values, and the result is a credit to the Metro studios.

Director Clarence Badger has obtained some vivid contrasts in locality by deftly switching the action from South America to the white glare of Broadway and staging the climax in the Klondike. The various settings are impressive and unique and better photography could not be desired. There are many excellent long shots and well posed closeups of the principals, the lighting and shading effects are exquisite, a delightful example of faultless camera technique.

Lou's elopement with McGrew, the encounter between Dan and Jim in a New York cabaret, followed by a fire in which the latter is supposed to have perished, and the crashing finale, when the avenging husband fills McGrew full of lead in a Yukon saloon, regaining his wife, are the big scenes of the picture, each put over in slashing style and dramatically effective.

Lew Cody, as Dangerous Dan McGrew, scores a tremendous hit. Portrayed as a soulless villain willing to go to any length to achieve his aims, contemptuously cool and disdainful, he strikes you as a chap who deserves the epithet of "dangerous," if any screen plotter ever did. It's a convincing characterization, which sends up the artistic stock of Mr. Cody ace-high. Barbara La Marr is exactly the right type for "the lady known as Lou," her physical charms are undeniable and she displays them generously. Percy Marmont registers well as Jim, the devoted husband and adequate support is rendered by other members of the extremely large and talented cast.

In arranging possible tie-ups with book stores on the strength of the poem's title, it would be well to make it clear that the picture is merely suggested by the verses. Otherwise, those of your patrons who might be induced to purchase the book containing Service's rhymed effusion might feel that they were being tricked. You can exploit the melodrama as one of the best of its sort, a fast-moving intensely emotional story, thrilling, colorful and bully entertainment all the way through. Play up beautiful Barbara La Marr, Lew Cody, Percy Marmont, George Siegmann and Mae Busch, all performers with a strong fan following.

*'The Moral Sinner' Makes a Good Start
But Flops Toward Finish*

THE MORAL SINNER. Paramount Photoplay. Adapted from the Stage Play, "Leah Kleschna." By C. M. S. McLellan. Director, Ralph Ince. Length, 5,437 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Leah Kleschna	Dorothy Dalton
Paul Sylvain	James Rennie
Anton Kleschna (alias Garnier)	Alphonse Ethier
Schram	Frederick Lewis
Raoul Berton	W. I. Percival
General Berton	Paul McAllister
Claire Berton	Florence Fair

Kleschna, a crook, has his daughter Leah for accomplice and utilizes Raoul Berton, son of a French general, as a tool. Paul Sylvain rescues Leah from a burning building and she forms an attachment for him. She is sent to his study to steal the Sylvain diamonds, but is detected by Paul. Raoul appears half drunk, and Paul hides Leah. Meanwhile Raoul gets the valuables. They are restored by Leah. She resolves to go straight and works in the fields with the peasants. There Paul finds her and persuades her to be his wife.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

ABOUT ten years have elapsed since the play "Leah Kleschna," from which this picture has been adapted, figured as a Broadway success. French crook melodrama was rather more of a novelty then than now, and the production virtually took the town by storm. That its dollar-raking ability hasn't been forgotten, is proved by the fact that William A. Brady is preparing a revival of the stage attraction for the Great White Way.

There was mighty good stuff in the old plot and one would naturally expect the film version to equal, if not excel, the original in sensational strength and appeal. Usually stage melodramas transferred to the screen are put across even more effectively because of the camera's power to furnish a wealth of detail and atmosphere impossible of duplication behind the footlights.

Yet candor compels the admission that "The Moral Sinner" doesn't come up to expectations. It isn't actually a bad picture, but falls considerably short of touching the high-water mark of Paramount features. Its box office value depends altogether on the locality where it is shown. Critical audiences won't care much about it, but the star's name possesses a certain amount of drawing power, and where Dorothy Dalton is popular the exhibitor may not find it a losing proposition.

Your best plan for exploiting this picture is to play up Dorothy Dalton and refer to the success achieved by the stage production on which it is based. Tell your patrons about the big fire scene and romance of the girl forced by fate into the underworld, but redeemed by her love for a man who wasn't afraid of the world's opinion and decided to help her.

A fishing boat in which Kate Masterson is sailing is run down by a schooner commanded by skipper Brute Morgan, a man with a terrible reputation. The girl is rescued, forced to work and ill-used by Morgan, who hates her sex. In a mutiny Morgan is overpowered and put in irons. A storm breaks and he is released to reassume command. The vessel sinks. Morgan and the girl reach a desolate island. Morgan is a changed man and in love with Kate. She agrees to marry him.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

LOVERS of strong nautical melodrama will find much to please them in "The Storm Daughter," which offers a sufficiently romantic story, with considerable interest, and the dangerous grandeur of the tempestuous deep for a background. It is lively entertainment, the star possesses a strong fan following, and the picture should register satisfactorily at the box office wherever it is shown.

As originally filmed, the mutiny aboard ship led up to a scene where the brutal but valorous skipper battled desperately against big odds, and this ranked as one of the feature's great "punch" moments. But the episode proved too ferocious to suit the tastes of the mildly-disposed censors, who ruled it out. A pity—for Tom Santschi plays the skipper and is never seen to better advantage than when engaged in rough-and-tumble scrapping.

However, there are plenty of other stirring incidents to whet the appetite of those who rejoice in thrills and racy action. Among these, the storm in which the vessel is wrecked stands forth as a most enthralling picturization of Old Ocean in a fury and the perils which menace the crew. The mutiny is well staged and creates considerable suspense, although of course much of its effect is lost by the elimination of Brute Morgan's heroic struggle. Yet the continuity does not suffer much, as he is shown being taken to his cabin senseless, with all the signs of terrific conflict upon him.

The regeneration of Morgan comes about rather suddenly, but such lightning changes in a hero's disposition are usually popular and well received by film devotees. And Kate Masterson, as depicted by Priscilla Dean, is a really lovable creature who might well be expected to work a transformation in the theories of the most confirmed woman-hater. Miss Dean is very appealing in her melting moods.

Universal has prepared a press book for this picture which abounds in fruitful exploitation suggestions and should receive the careful attention of all exhibitors booking the picture. You can safely praise it as a melodrama of the sea surging with vigorous action and offering an appealing love story. Refer to Miss Dean's former big screen hits and feature Tom Santschi in combination with the star.

Roland Francis, timid silk salesman, is much sought after by the ladies, but avoids them. Anne Winton decides that a girl has the right to flirt when she pleases and selects Francis as her victim. She takes him out in Bohemian circles. Francis falls in love with her but is hampered by other girls and their indignant suitors. After many adventures he eludes his pursuers and weds Anne.

THERE'S lots of fun in this lively comedy, which abounds in bright, farcical situations, buzzes along at a merry clip, is handsomely photographed and well directed. Also, the plot is altogether out of the ordinary and keeps the spectators continually guessing as to what is coming next, so that interest in the action never slackens. All in all, "Second Youth" provides snappy, pleasing entertainment and ranks as a first-rate drawing card for any theatre, large or small.

A bashful hero is somewhat of an oddity in filmland, and Roland Francis, the effeminate seller of silk to the fair sex, can probably be listed as the most modest male that ever dodged a maiden. A sub-deb, a stenographer, an extremely modern miss and, worst of all, a very experienced widow are all trying to land him in the matrimonial net. The latter, having disposed of three husbands, wants to grab Francis for a fourth trial, and is naturally the hardest of the lot to evade.

Her pursuit of that shrinking soul, who doubles and twists like a hunted hare in his efforts to avoid disaster, furnishes many a hearty laugh, nor are the wiles and subterfuges employed by the single girls to ensnare him far behind the efforts of the energetic Mrs. Benson, in point of skill and cunning.

But it remains for Anne Winton to securely hook and finally gaff the desired fish. Anne, stimulated by the gibes of a sportive brother-in-law, invites Francis out to supper, lures him under the white lights and gives him a heck of a time, generally speaking. The result is that he falls genuinely in love with her and not even his ingrained bashfulness is a strong enough barrier to save him from traveling the path to the marriage goal. For Anne is brought to realize that she has started something she can't stop, and wedding bells are the finish.

Not the least of Francis' troubles is the fact that each of the girls, excepting Anne, who would fain possess him, has a suitor frantic with wrath on his account. The activities of these gents increase the complications, and right merrily the action whirls on through department store, boarding house, Greenwich Village and Broadway resorts. It's all very comic and crammed with surprise stuff and the climax gets across in spectacular style.

The acting is what might be expected from such a large and talented cast of players. Roland Francis plays the silk salesman hero, a very effective bit of characterization, in which we watch the "frightened fawn" specimen gradually develop into a "regular chap" under the influence of daring Miss Anne Winton. The latter role is filled by Mimi Palmeri.

There are a good many names in this cast worth exploiting, Alfred Lunt, Mimi Palmeri, Faire Binney, Lumsden Hare, Jobyna Howland, Walter Catlett, Lynn Fontanne and Hugh Huntley standing out prominently. It ought to be possible to arrange tie-ups with stores on the silk salesman angle. You can safely praise the story as a comedy sparkling with life, farcical situations, and offering an unusual plot.

After Nila has passed through a number of exciting experiences, she settles down with her husband.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

L AURA LA PLANTE emerges into stardom in this picture, and makes good her claim to a place among the elect. "Excitement" is the correct title for her vehicle, which abounds in all kinds of extraordinary stunts, including hairbreadth escapes from seemingly sure destruction, wherein aeroplanes, autos, motorcycles, wild horseback riding and daring leaps over precipices figure largely.

It's what you may call a real comedy-thriller, with plenty of love interest thrown in for good measure, the sort of thing that will please a large proportion of the movie fans and swell the box office receipts generously wherever it is shown.

Suspense is one of the most difficult qualities to develop and maintain in a film with a strong comedy slant, but director Robert Hill and his clever players have done the trick all right in this instance. There isn't a dull moment in the entire feature, which is as sensational as the most lurid serial, but offers a compact story, with unbroken continuity and more fun than a cageful of monkeys.

Laura La Plante is entitled to hearty congratulations for her breezy, energetic and natural work in the leading role of Nila Lyons. The little star enters into the spirit of the part as though she thoroughly enjoys it.

You can exploit "Excitement" as an amusing and hair-raising comedy-thriller, which more than lives up to its title. Play up Laura La Plante and emphasize the fact that this is her first starring vehicle. You need not hesitate to praise the picture's entertaining values.

John Moore and his wife are hard-working parents of six, struggling from morn till night in a valiant effort to give their children all the necessities of life. It is a herculean task, and when they receive an offer from a wealthy relative, of ease and physical comfort for the rest of their lives in exchange for one of the children, they decide to accept. However, they are stopped by the thought of which child to give. After much speculation and conflicting thought, they decide on the oldest girl. She no sooner takes leave than the mother suffers terrible remorse. Just when it seems as though her heart must break, the daughter appears and flies to her mother's arms. The father, who had driven her off in his buggy, simply couldn't, as it turned out, "say good-bye," and the happy family is reunited once more.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

JUDGING by sundry sniffles and incessant dabbing of eyes with moist-soaked handkerchiefs at the showing of "Which Shall It Be" in New York's Cameo Theatre, one is prompted to say, "it hurt beautifully."

The audience, almost to a man—a foregone conclusion including the women, of course—took the simple, homely tale, very much to heart, which is about as much proof as one could want as to the convincing heart-interest and appealing effect of the screen version of the famous E. L. Beers poem.

The theme of "Which Shall It Be" concerns the problem of two toil-worn parents, with a brood of six, who are offered a life of ease and comparative luxury in exchange for one of their children. "I looked at John, and John looked at me," as the poem goes, on which the screen story is based, is the start of a series of speculations through which the fond parents undergo in trying to determine which child they can best spare. They finally conclude that the absence of riches and physical comfort is as nothing compared to the deprivation of even the tiniest mite in the family.

The story which ensues is a simple, homely tale, revealing the great love of mother and father for their children and the immense sacrifices they consent to suffer in preference to the easier way out. The narrative unravels itself with all the beauty and poetry of a mother's love.

The six children carry off their parts in the story with convincing effectiveness. Ethel Wales, as the toil-worn mother, gives an inspiring performance. Willis Marks, as the father, is also convincing and pleasing. "Which Shall It Be" is minus the fanfare and hullabaloo generally associated with the theatricals that take with those who roll up the gross for the motion picture producer, but it is nevertheless thrice blessed in its strong elements of heart interest, love theme and simplicity.

To exploit this picture, don't lose sight of the ready way in which the title adapts itself to teaser advertising. A title like "Which Shall It Be" offers innumerable opportunities for working on the cupidity.

Larry Donovan, owner of a printing business, tells his credit manager, Joe Merrill, that if he can't collect a seven-year-old bill for $25.11 against Tim Perrin in a week, he's through. Donovan also tells Glenn Collins that if he doesn't get Perrin's account within a week, he's through too. Both young men are thrown out of Perrin's cement yard. Joe goes to a modiste shop owned by Perrin, ready to park there until he receives payment. He makes various attempts to see Perrin who finally beats him up and wrecks the shop. When Merrill wins the love of Perrin's daughter and with her connivance, finally secures payment of the bill, Perrin capitulates and offers him a job.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

FOLKS who enjoy a good laugh, interwoven with some sprightly romance, will find a pleasant time in "Try and Get It."

Far from incorporating moments of heavy human passion, the play still contains love elements of the most satisfying nature but it is the laugh-provoking situations, of which there are a goodly number, which put the story across in the realm of satisfactory entertainment.

The theme centers around the persistent go-getting attempts of Joe Merrill, in the employ of Larry Donovan, to collect a bill of $25.11 against Timothy Perrin, who makes Leo the Roaring Lion seem like a tame lap kitten by comparison. The fact that the bill is seven years old, and that Timothy Perrin, or the "Ringtailed Galliwampus" as he is generally known by those who have tasted his sweet disposition, likes nothing better than to feed carboic acid to bill collectors, lends impetus and interest to Joe's assignment. For one thing he has to collect or take the air so far as his job is concerned.

Lionel Belmore, as Timothy Perrin, the incorrigible bill dodger, belches the sort of flame that means instant death to any venturesome bill collector, but that doesn't phase the irrepressible Joe Merrill one bit. He proves this conclusively by permitting himself to be forcibly ejected three or four times and returning with inspiring regularity to be shown proper cause why Perrin should not come across with $25.11. And, oh, the Galliwampus is a wild one. One whose very eyebrows connote acid of the sharpest order; whose flourishing fists and bristling mustache predict instant demise for the one unlucky enough to arouse his ire.

The humor of the situation is palpably heightened when the Merrill family "serenades" Perrin at his private home while his daughter is giving a party to a select gilded set. In fact at the very moment that Perrin whispers to his friend that he feels in fine fettle for killing a bill collector, up pops Joe with the old, old story. Whew! Hot solder and electric sparks! The Galliwampus starts to swing into action, with murder in his eye, but is restrained by his daughter, whose connivance Merrill has conscripted in his behalf. Merrill then puts a pleasant touch to the evening by dancing with the pretty hostess.

For attracting attention to his show, the exhibitor might get a cage and in it place some kind of a dummy animal, constructed of an old duster, a couple of potatoes, or anything that is outlandish in appearance. Put a sign on it reading, "Don't feed peanuts to the Ringtailed Galliwampus—but come inside and see 'Try and Get It,' starring Bryant Washburn."

Anna Belle Lee		June Elvidge

John Marshall, young engineer, goes to Bullis Valley, in the Alabama hills, to secure lands for a big power project. The hill folks think he is a revenue spy and plans are laid against his life. He is in love with a school teacher, Mary Dale. She struggles through a storm to his cabin to warn him. A lynching party, headed by Trav Williams arrives. Williams and Marshall agree to fight it out and battle furiously. Marshall's men from the construction camp rush to their chief's rescue. He weds Mary.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

MELODRAMA unleashed and running wild, great storm scenes, fighting, love-making, danger and devilment of all kinds! They'll like this wherever the patrons want plenty of action for their money and are not too particular when it comes to stretching the imagination.

In its opening stages the picture moves rather deliberately, but once it hits its stride, there's no complaint likely to be made on the score of retarded speed, for the pace becomes cyclonic. Perhaps the first two reels could be cut down a bit with advantage to the feature, but even as it stands "The Right of the Strongest" registers as a good audience film and should secure a satisfactory box office rating.

Mary Elizabeth Dale, with whom hero John Marshall falls in love, had a father who was slain by the hill squatters when they suspected him of plying the trade of government informer. So naturally, her friendship with the stranger whose business in their midst is a mystery, arouses hostility to the couple. Thus both hero and heroine are under a cloud and unjustly blamed, and the audience early begins to burn up with sympathy for the pair.

When through the agency of a stolen letter the squatters learn that Marshall is after their land, but are unaware that he is willing to pay a fair price for the site he wants, they go on the war-path in earnest. He has already defied their threats, but this time they make ready to lynch him.

The big scene follows, when Mary struggles through a blinding storm over the mountain to warn her lover. Headed by Trav Williams, rival for Mary's hand, the would-be killers arrive at the cabin. Then comes the most exciting episode, the terrific encounter between Marshall and Williams, who go to it single-handed and put up an awful fistic argument. A cracking climax is achieved with the rush of Marshall's men to his rescue in the nick of time, all difficulties are smoothed out and hero and heroine duly slated for the altar.

You can exploit this as a stirring melodrama, with a strong romantic tinge, thrills galore and gaining in suspense and interest the further it goes. The cast offers many names worth while, those of E. K. Lincoln, Helen Ferguson, George Siegman, Tully Marshall, Niles Welch, Winter Hall, Tom Santschi, having especial significance from a drawing power standpoint.

E. K. Lincoln does some of the best work of his career as the dashing hero, Helen Ferguson is a prettily fascinating Mary Dale,

OLD THEME, WELL HANDLED

'His Forgotten Wife' Excellent Attraction for Neighborhood Theatres

HIS FORGOTTEN WIFE. Palmer Corporation Photoplay Released By F. B. O. Author, Will Lambert. Director, William Seiter. Length, 6,500 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Suzanne		Madge Bellamy
John Rolfe		Warner Baxter
Corinne McRea		Maude Wayne
Major		Eric Mayne
Meadows		Willis Marks
Judge Henry		Tom Guise
Irene Humphrey		Hazel Keener

Donald Allen is reported killed in France during the war. His fiancée, Corinne McRea, inherits his property. Donald, a victim of lost memory through shock, returns to America married to his French nurse, Suzanne, under the name of Rolfe. They both obtain jobs as servants at Donald's home. He is recognized by the estate trustee. Corinne attempts to escape with the bank roll, but is foiled by Suzanne. An operation restores Donald's memory of his old life, but he temporarily forgets Suzanne. However, he regains his lost consciousness in time to know his wife and all ends well.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A VERY clever handling of a theme which is rapidly becoming shopworn. The "lost-memory hero" is such a painfully familiar screen figure that a whole lot of credit is due a director who can frame a yarn around him and make the interest hold. Yet this is just what William Seiter and his cast of clever players have succeeded in doing.

"His Forgotten Wife" has not only a good title to draw with, but moves swiftly, exploits a number of surprising angles, is well acted and registers as a program attraction considerably above the average. It ought to prove a box office success at the neighborhood theatres and smaller houses.

That the hero and his newly-wed wife should happen to obtain jobs as servants in his old home on his return from France with his recollection mill out of order, is stretching the "long arm of coincidence" quite a little. Nevertheless, it is this situation on which the entire plot hinges and makes it really enjoyable. Allowance must be made for melodramatic license in pictures of this kind, and as a matter of fact, the average spectator isn't likely to resent its improbability.

Madge Bellamy plays the little French heroine with alluring charm and looks the part to perfection. Warner Baxter is convincing and pleasing in the hero role, while Maude Wayne gives a very fine performance as the unscrupulous Corinne. The support is adequate, and excellent photography is in evidence all through the film.

'THERE HE GOES'

2 reels

Lige Conley livens things in this comedy. Conley is the whole show and when he leaves the scene the action ceases. Action is the only redeeming feature of this two-reel subject but it is so fast and furious one is willing to overlook many shortcomings. It is above the average slapstick comedy.

The excitement begins when Conley enters a southern mansion after a round of golf in the pouring rain. Everyone who touches him is given a shower bath. Water is used unsparingly but it brings laughs.

Conley evidently butted into a Halloween party as pumpkins and ducking for apples are the center of attraction. This particular spot is weak and greatly overdone.

The comedian comes into his own in the second reel where he acts as a race horse driver. Considerable originality is shown in the racing scenes and some of them are riots of fun.

The race is a cross country affair and Conley starts out with a nice new cart but owing to accidents and plotting of the villain, the hero ends the race in a milk wagon. The trick photography in the racing scenes is good and figures largely in the success of the picture.

Lige Conley is one of the best known short subject comedians and he does exceptionally well in this picture. It is safe booking, and the use of Conley's name will aid in pulling patrons.

'GATEWAY TO THE WEST'

Pathe

A Chronicles of America historical feature. This picture shows Washington as a Lt. Colonel in the Virginia army at the time the French were trying to occupy the territory in the Ohio River country. It portrays the young soldier as the leader of a valiant little band of patriots that suffer privations in an effort to dislodge the French from their stronghold at Fort Duquesne, now Pittsburgh.

The French and English soldiers are shown on the march through the wild country and as a climax a battle is staged during a raging rainstorm and Washington, to save his battered little army, is forced to retreat, but the retreat leads to the final defeat of the French and the march of pioneers to the western country.

This picture should be shown in the schools as it portrays American history of the days which decided whether this country should be French or English speaking. It shows the hardships suffered by the pioneers and visualizes events that are bound to create a profound impression.

'THE RACING KID'

2 reels

Buddy Messinger proves himself a good comedian in "The Racing Kid." It is one of his best pictures and is a little different from the usual wild variety that has been chosen for him of late. He really has a chance to act, and aided by his young sweetie, Martha, and the much freckled "Spec," he produces a really interesting picture.

Buddy is the son of a race horse owner and is an accomplished rider. He suspects his father's trainer of being crooked. Buddy watches and discovers the trainer in conference with a noted gambler. He informs his father who discredits the story but Buddy, with his companions, waylays the trainer and Buddy enters the race and rides his father's colors to victory.

There is a good element of excitement running through the picture and there is a large amount of comedy. The titles are clever and the whole picture shows time in construction.

The picture is good for any program. It is clean and wholesome.

'SUN AND SNOW'

1 reel

Grantland Rice shows winter sports at Lake Placid and winter sports in Florida, alternating the scenes for comparison. At the finish one doesn't know whether to purchase a ticket to Florida or buy a pair of skis and hit the trail for Lake Placid. The scenes are interesting and should prove popular with any audience.

'FOLD UP'

Ambitious inventors will find this picture very instructive. It demonstrates a method of utilizing every inch of space in an apartment and the faulty mechanism brings many laughs. Although the idea is somewhat shop-worn, there are several new touches that make "Fold Up" a good comedy.

The collapsible apartment has many surprises for the Kronk family, from Iowa, and although they are shy at first they soon learn the tricks. The beds slide into the wall and the tables rise from the floors and when, through faulty mechanism the furniture starts its crazy antics during a party, the action is plenty.

The picture, of course, is slapstick of the wildest variety, and there is no attempt at plot, nevertheless, the elements of fun are present and after all that is the chief requirement of a comedy.

"Fold Up" is a good clean hit-and-run laugh producer and will fit in well with your program.

'SING THEM AGAIN'

This series has little to recommend it. There is a flash of scene and then the words of an old time song are thrown on the screen with a request that everyone sing. The whole entertainment value depends entirely upon the spirit in which the audience enters into the game. In afternoon shows in which the audience is made up chiefly of women it is very doubtful if there would be any spontaneous response. Again, the songs are very old and date back to such a degree that few of the young people know them.

If there is no response to the singing request it means at least a ten minute period of restlessness and the effect will be noticeable as it will dampen the spirit of the audience and will be a handicap to the feature picture.

This short subject might do reasonably well in small communities but for large houses it is too thin.

IN Pathe's "Shanghaied" there are all the elements that go to make up a good comedy. Mistaken identity furnishes the theme.

HARRY LANGDON is a Tried and Proved short subject comedian. He does not depend on slapstick to produce fun.

BEFORE THE DAYS OF CANOPENERS

C. B. C.'s Hall Room Boys series has caught the public fancy. The pictures have been tried and proved popular. In "Tin Knights in a Hall Room" the boys have wide range for their funny burlesque antics

'ONE WET NIGHT'

1 reel

Neely Edwards and Bert Roach figure in this. If your patrons like water scenes this picture will appeal. It abounds in water. It is remarkable how much amusement can be made by the use of a large amount of water and Edwards and Roach manage to squeeze the last drop of entertainment from the cloudburst.

Edwards does some fine comedy work when he tries to repair a punctured tire during a rainstorm. The passing cars seem to make it a point to splash him and his antics in trying to avoid the water are well done.

In the evening a crowd of friends is visiting at Neely's home and one of the party in demonstrating a new shotgun blows a hole in the roof of the house permitting the rain to enter. In order to avoid wetting the carpet, the grand piano is moved under the hole and when this fills with water the bathtub is brought into play. Finally the deluge is so great everyone dons bathing suits and play cards under an umbrella.

This is an average Edwards and Roach comedy and can be used to brighten a heavy dramatic program.

'A TRIP TO THE POLE'

1 reel

A Paul Terry cartoon up to his usual high standard. The cat and mouse make a trip to the pole in a balloon. In making the trip they view different scenes on the ground, some of which are exceptionally funny. They finally arrive at their destination and attach a rope to the Pole and drag it back home. The Pole, however, proves to be the tail of a sea monster and causes excitement. The usual moral is attached.

Terry's cartoons are always welcome to any program and this one is a hum-dinger.

'HIT THE HIGH SPOTS'

2 reels

The Spat family in preparation for a trip to Switzerland, try mountain climbing near home for practice. Their escapades are worthy of note. There are many hair raising stunts where high cliffs play an important part in furnishing the thrills. Mr. and Mrs. Tewksbury, with brother Ambrose, fight their way through the two reels and the family rows are the basis for good comedy.

In starting up the mountainside, the trio is tied together in true Alpine fashion. They mount mules and the fun begins. As the ascent up the mountain proceeds the action becomes faster and is culminated in a drop over a high cliff by brother Ambrose. His coat catches on a very convenient twig and holds him in a semi secure position until the Tewksburys can effect a rescue.

This picture is a clean fast comedy and

DON'T MONKEY WITH THE POLICE FORCE

Pathe's series of animal comedies has scored a distinct hit. Miniature villages and equipment aid in creating the illusion of humanness. In "The Bar Fly" the monkey police force makes a clean sweep of all the bad characters in the village and do a job that would be a credit to General Butler

'THE HOLLYWOOD KID'

2 reels

This Sennett comedy is true to Sennett form. The bathing beauties strut their steps and Charlie Murray gives them the once over. Even Mack Sennett (himself) appears in one scene which is reminiscent of the past days when the producer was noted as a fun maker.

The picture starts out with a semblance of a plot but as it ambles along the plot fails by the wayside and is finally entirely lost. As the plot disappears the action speeds up and finally all of the tricks of the movies are brought into play with good results.

A feature of this picture shows the back stage of the movies. Many trade secrets are shown and from this angle alone the picture is of interest to fans.

Jackie Lucas, a kid comedian, enters into the spirit of the fun with a vengeance and really acts. The youngster is talented.

Those who like fast moving comedies with every mechanical means brought to play will like this one. It is slap stick of the most flagrant specie yet it is interesting and will bring many laughs. It will fit in well with a melodramatic feature.

'DANDY LIONS'

Neal Burns with the aid of good cast makes "Dandy Lions" one of the best recent Christie releases. Although there is considerable slap-stick to the picture, it distinguishes itself by having a plot. Not just a threadbare disappointed plot but a real honest-to-goodness one than can be followed intelligently.

The picture deals with lions. Neal's fiancée is an animal lover and the owner of a pet lion cub. She insists that her marriage with Neal take place in a lion's cage. Neal agrees feeling that there are no lions in the vicinity but a circus comes to town and it requires a great amount of fixing to straighten matters. For awhile it looks as though Neal would have to go through with the lion act, but he is saved at the last minute.

This picture will find favor with any audience.

SOME of the Newsreel camera men on 'location' so to speak. From aeroplane, from the broad backs of elephants, from the hump of the camel—anything that offers a point of vantage, the irrepressibles point the camera's eye and gather in the news.

International Newsreel A Tried and Proved Service of Appealing Program Spice

TEN years ago the modern newsreel was born. The "weekly" idea died when the newsreel came into existence.

Today the newsreel reaches everywhere. Perhaps an example of this may best be found in the world-gathering organization of the International Newsreel Corporation. The editor of the International is in touch with staff cameramen in all parts of the world. In one day he may issue orders to one cameraman at Nome, Alaska, to proceed into the Arctic Circle for a news picture; to another cameraman in London, Paris or Rome to "shoot" some other event of importance; to another staff man in British East Africa. Simultaneously, orders may be issued to a dozen different men in various cities of the United States, or in Japan, China, Java or South America.

Ten years ago the newsreel consisted mainly of parades, monument unveilings, corner-stone layings, launchings, flag-raising and industrial subjects. Occasionally some picture of very ordinary interest appeared from London, Paris or Vienna. The principal idea in the mind of the newsreel editor of that day was to "cover" anything that didn't cost much to get. It wasn't a matter in his mind of "will the picture be interesting?" but "how cheaply can I get it?"

Edgar B. Hatrick, General Manager of the International Newsreel Corporation, is the man who changed the "weekly" into the "news reel." Calling anything dealing with news a "weekly" went against Hatrick's grain. He was a newspaper man. He would just as soon have called it a "monthly" or an almanac. When he started William Randolph Hearst's first new film he called it a news reel and not a "weekly." He changed the entire product from a dull, drab, more or less worthless "filler" to a genuine attraction.

Editorial headquarters of the International are located in New York City. Bureaus are located in all important American cities and in London, Paris and Berlin. Hundreds of correspondents or field cameramen represent the International in the American cities of lesser importance and in many of the smaller cities of Europe. In Africa, Asia and South America the International in some instances is represented by staff cameramen and in other instances by free-lance or field cameramen.

THE newsreel cameraman is always busy. International's New York Staff men have all travelled all over the world. They have shot tigers in India, sailed the seas with the battleship fleet; shot alligators in Panamanian jungles; bearded the Sultan of Turkey in his palace, before Mustapha Kemal put the Sultans out of business; threaded their way through the jungles of Brazil and ridden on camels in the Holy Land.

Ariel Vargas, International's famous globe-trotting cameraman and war correspondent, only recently completed a five year tour of the world during which he travelled 250,000 miles, or roughly, about ten times around the globe. He visited scores of different countries in Europe, Asia, Africa, the South Sea Islands and North America. He didn't drift aimlessly. He moved from place to place as news beckoned. If revolt seemed imminent in India he went there. If Chinese bandits had just kidnapped a number of Americans and other foreigners, he went there. That is how a newsreel is conducted. Is it any wonder that "movie" audiences like them? Is it any wonder that they

Eliminating the Chance Element in Booking

Using Tried and Proved Pictures Corresponds to Method of Trying Out Legitimate Plays in Smaller Cities Before Bringing Them to Broadway

By L. F. GUIMOND

*Director of Advertising and Publicity
Selznick Distributing Corporation*

RECENTLY, there was a symposium in the New York Times on the subject of "What the Public Wants," in which a number of men and women, leaders in the field of motion pictures, drama and literature, gave their answers to that vital question. Griffith spoke for motion pictures, and Belasco and George M. Cohan and other phenomenally successful purveyors of entertainment to the American people, told what they had learned after years of trying to solve the problem.

Each of these experts told in generalities what he strove for in the entertainment he sponsored. And each one confessed, at the end, that there was little chance of telling, in advance, just what the public would flock to. Fashions in entertainment changed rapidly, they said, and their idea or type of play or picture or book that made a hit at one time because of its truth and novelty, might fall flat if produced later or in a different manner.

To take the risk out of productions as much as possible, these astute managers and playwrights of Broadway, try out their plays in cities outside of New York and around the country generally, to see just how they get across with the great average mass of the public which must be depended upon to put over such a production. So important is this phase of show business considered, that many vital changes in plays are made, and some plays actually rewritten or withdrawn completely, on the basis of the verdict of the "try out" towns.

Similarly, the gambling element may be taken out of the showing of motion-pictures. No longer is it necessary for the showman on Main Street throughout the country to book an unknown quantity, meanwhile praying that at least he will break even on the showing. There are enough uncontrollable elements in the show business as it is—weather, seasons, general business conditions—so that the elimination of one of them is an actual boon to the exhibitor.

And this is exactly what is performed by the use of the Tried and Proved picture. Instead of each exhibitor trying out the picture on an audience himself before he books it, the idea is carried out, but on a much greater scale than the theatrical managers ever could do it.

The majority of theatres throughout the country are not first-run houses. They are the great body of houses which run up the gross for the producer and distributor, and so it is of the utmost importance that they should be satisfied.

How can he tell what to choose out of the great list which is offered him? Does he have to do his picking blindfolded? The answer to both questions lies in the Tried and Proved Picture Department initiated by the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

This department lists the pictures which have been playing around the country for some little time, and which have met with success everywhere. Exhibitors have written in to the trade paper telling of how audiences reacted to the picture, how it was exploited, and other information of vital interest to a showman about to book it.

In addition, the Tried and Proved Picture Department analyzes each picture, in its "Hall of Fame," telling just why each production is a good box-office bet, and just what angles and features in it should be emphasized in order to get the greatest return from it.

This is the kind of information the showman wants, and the kind which he could not buy for love or money, before the Tried and Proved Picture Department was started. It is not what the picture did alone in the big city playhouse, or what a high-brow critic thought of it, or what the producer or distributor says he thinks of it, but what the average showman, just like the man who is looking for the product, did with that particular picture. It is the only way of getting a line, not on what any individual thinks, but on how the picture will perform.

"Reported Missing" is a typical example of the kind of production offered among the Tried and Proved Pictures. This picture was released early in the Summer, but in spite of this drawback, it rolled up the impressive total of $200,000 gross within a short time.

Analysis of this gross indicates one thing to the expert showman: that the picture has gone over in all types of houses throughout the country. He knows that a picture may roll up $100,000 on its first runs, but after that, the picture is played largely on its past performance, and the size of the additional gross is an indication of its box office possibilities.

When such a production reaches the showman who can pick and choose what he wants to book, his problem is greatly simplified. The Tried and Proved Picture Department furnishes him with the indispensable information upon which he can make a selection, based on the experience of hundreds of other exhibitors.

'His Wife's Husband'

Mystery Drama Released by Pyramid

BRIEF: A young girl marries a man whom she does not love and immediately after the ceremony quits him leaving a note saying she is going to drown herself. As she is leaving the house she sees a woman shoot her husband and later reads his death notice. She goes to her uncle and meets a young lawyer whom she marries. Her former husband later turns up and attempts to blackmail her husband but through a happy circumstance the entire truth is revealed and the husband and wife are free to continue their former happiness.

ANNA KATHERINE GREEN is a pioneer mystery story writer and her stories have established their reputations not only in book form but on the screen as well. The most notable phase of her stories is the clever way in which she veils the final outcome so that the end is never suspected. This picture, when put on the screen, retained its clever mystery element and it is for this reason that it has been so well liked and so highly regarded.

Betty Blythe plays the part of the young wife and infuses the picture with an irresistible charm, so much so that the picture was unstintingly praised by critics all over the country, and this praise later attested to by the support of the public wherever it was shown.

The story is simple and its appeal general and therefore the suggested line of exploitation is that which stresses the theme of the story and sustains the mystery element. Perhaps the best way to secure the desired effect is to run a teaser campaign. You could use lines like this: "Five hundred dollars reward to the person giving information leading to the arrest and conviction of the slayer of 'His Wife's Husband.' Communicate with the.....Theatre."

You might also try this: Offer prizes for the persons who can guess the outcome of the picture. You can get a great deal of attention in your vicinity if you will invite all the local detectives to your theatre as guests. The idea is to run the film almost to the end, then switch on the lights and allow them to speculate on the outcome. The patrons will certainly be very much interested in the scheme and if you advertise the special performance widely you are sure to get a record audience.

Moreover, the scheme will get you space in the papers since any thing which involves the police is of general news interest. Persons reading of the results of the experiment will be interested to see the picture for themselves. You should also arrange to have the conclusion kept an absolute secret both in your own advertising and in the stories that appear in the newspapers.

Don't neglect, either to give plenty of publicity to the name of the star and wherever possible publish extracts from the reviews which appeared in the papers when the picture was first released. People are always interested in knowing what the critics had to say and you should be glad of the opportunity of telling them.

'Potash and Perlmutter'

Comedy Released by First National

BRIEF: On the verge of bankruptcy Abe Potash quarrels with Morris Perlmutter—and the two become partners. Up-to-date methods revive the business. One of the employees falls in love with Abe's daughter and the complications start. Falsely accused of shooting, the young violinist is held under a twenty thousand dollar bond put up by the two partners. Just as the hour for the trial is about to pass which means the forfeiture of the money which in turn will mean ruin, the young man appears and clears everything restoring the money to the two partners and gaining his own liberty in time to marry the girl.

A STORY of business with all its comic forces and its pathos this picture has found its place as a popular picture in an unbelievably large number of theatres throughout the country. During a period of nine years Potash and Perlmutter have been appearing on Broadway in a succession of stage hits; for the same length of time they have been known to readers of the Saturday Evening Post, for five years they have been delighting London audiences, for three years Petrograd has been enjoying their business difficulties. More than twenty different nations speaking as many different languages have been laughing with Potash and Perlmutter since Montague Glass first conceived the two characters and their comic families.

It is little wonder then that when Potash and Perlmutter appeared on the screen it became an immediate sensation and there is every reason to believe that the picture will be good for several years if exhibitors are wise enough to book it and rebook it, and keen enough to give it the proper exploitation.

There seems to be an inexhaustible font of ideas to draw from, all of which are capable of pulling in the business. Perhaps the most logical is the fashion show prologue which is extremely pertinent and very much to the liking of the average audience. The two partners in the story are in the cloak and suit business, consequently there are beautiful gowns worn by the players. You can arrange with some local store to allow you to borrow some of their latest models in exchange for which they will get publicity which will accrue from announcements that the clothes worn in the prologue are Blank's models.

On the same basis you can arrange for merchant tie-ups with department stores, specialty shops, milliners, etc. They will all readily give you window space and use the name of your picture in their ads if you provide them with the material.

Also be sure to get it over clearly that the picture is a comedy. Real good comedies are more or less rare on the screen and they are very much in demand. This suggestion can be gotten across by using some of the titles of the picture as catch lines. Most of these have been taken directly from the lines of the play and they are highly amusing.

'The Midnight Alarm'

Heroic Melodrama Released by Vitagraph

BRIEF: Through some peculiar circumstances Sparkle Carrington becomes a penniless orphan and while her grandparents search for her she and another waif run a newsstand together. A young crook who loves her and knows of her connections plans to destroy the papers which will identify her, marry her and get the money. Trapped in a burning building with him, she is rescued by a fire captain who loves her, is restored to her grandparents and marries the captain.

IF you have an audience that craves sensation; that eats up thrills whole, you have a certain winner in this picture. While the plot is based on the life of a kidnapped orphan, the entire action of the story revolves around a startling fire. It is one of those pictures whose stirring romance tugs at the heartstrings, and whose gripping suspense keeps spectators on the edge of their seats and their nerves.

There is a ring of realism in the fire scenes in which heroic firefighters strive to save the life of a young girl imprisoned in a steel vault of a building whose walls are crumbling. There is high pitch interest in a situation like this, and untold exploitation possibilities as well.

In any city or town in which the picture is shown you will find the local fire department willing and ready to co-operate in putting the thing across. Since it reflects on the heroism of the fire department you will find that they will readily consent to put their apparatus at your disposal in order to arrange effective street ballys.

You can arrange with them to run a special fireman's performance whereby a portion of the receipts will go to the firemen's fund. You can get them to sell tickets for you with the understanding that you will donate a certain percentage to the fund for widows and orphans of firemen. You can get them to run a special drive for contributions to their fund in conjunction with the showing of the picture.

You might be able to get the civic officials to run a fire prevention week which will coincide with the showing at your theatre. In such a case it would be wise to get permission to have the signs printed which will be placed in every available spot in the city. These should run something like this: "April 21 to 27 is fire prevention week. Clean out all your rubbish and make your home and office safe. See the 'Midnight Alarm' showing all this week at the.....Theatre."

Another splendid tie-up is with the fire insurance companies in your vicinity. The red posters which are available for display purposes would serve such a company admirably in urging people to insure their homes and businesses against fire.

'Thundering Dawn'

Spectacular Melodrama Released by Universal

BRIEF: Jack Standish, in order to protect his father, assumes the blame for the father's financial difficulties and disappears to Java. There he falls in the hands of a gang of schemers and is almost ruined by drink. When the girl he is supposed to marry arrives in Java she finds him a physical wreck. She is nursing him back to health when a typhoon hits the coast and all the gang is destroyed. The girl, too, is carried away but is rescued by Jack and they start back again to America.

AN almost unending series of complications accompanied by daring rescues and unusual climatic conditions, have been woven together into a very interesting story that directly touches the average appeal. To interpret the story a capable cast has been assembled which factor has also been largely responsible for the satisfactory bookings which the picture has had.

The sensational slant of the posters will aid measurably in getting across the atmosphere of the picture and it would therefore be wise to give these as much prominence as possible. The lobby should, of course, be profusely decorated with these and the effect will be heightened if you will substitute red electric bulbs for the white ones you usually use.

In contrast to this, you should make your marquee especially bright. Here is a good way to do that. Make a compo board cut out to fit in with the electric light sockets on your marquee. The twenty-four sheet will supply you with the material for this. The red portion should be made of oil paper so that the light can filter through.

You can also make arrangements for a tie-up with the local bank. This is a stunt which will bring the name of your theatre before the great masses interested in thrift. You furnish the bank with special throw-aways with their ad on the back. It is up to you to get them to consent to inclose one of these in every letter that they send out.

Try this too. Sell the bank the idea of allowing you to give away, at the theatre, a check for one dollar which will be honored when accompanied by a four dollar deposit for a savings account, not to be withdrawn for thirty days. It might seem a bit difficult to get them to consent to do this, but you can remind them that they pay a solicitor one dollar for every savings account which he secures, and you are merely acting in the same capacity on a larger scale. The only difference is that instead of the solicitor getting the dollar, the depositor is getting it, thereby making new friends.

TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES

'The Impossible Mrs. Bellew'

Social Drama Released by Paramount

BRIEF: Lance Bellew likes his mistress better than his wife. This is resented by Woodruff, a friend of the family. Lance becomes suspicious of the relations between Woodruff and his wife and in a fight shoots Woodruff. A clever lawyer, by working on her love for her little son gets Mrs. Bellew to testify for her husband and he is acquitted on the basis that the killing was justified. To humiliate her, Lance divorces his wife and he is granted the child. Mrs. Bellew finds how hard it is to get along with a ruined reputation but with a new friend who is a constant help to her, all difficulties are overcome, the child is restored to her.

GLORIA SWANSON is the particularly favored exponent of the society drama. Probably her reputation rests more upon her remarkable achievements with this type of role than anything else. Her support in this picture, headed by Conrad Nagle, is an excellent one.

The story as taken from the book of the same name by David Lisle, published in 1916 by Frederick A. Stokes, New York. It gained a certain amount of popularity.

Before the picture was started, Miss Swanson went to Paris to get her gowns for it, and she wears an array of the most stunning clothes and remarkable bathing suits.

This should suggest a tie-up with the leading modists of your town. And wherever they make displays be sure that you have several good stills of Miss Swanson in the display. You will find good dress stills of the star among the photographs available at your exchange.

There are several bathing scenes in the picture showing many beautiful bathing girls. If the season permits, it might be a good plan to arrange for displays of bathing suits.

Another tie-up is suggested for employment with ladies hairdressers. Gloria Swanson's coiffure is world-famous, and it has never shown to greater advantage than in this picture. One of these hairdressers might be induced to advertise that he will dress hair in the Gloria Swanson style, and this probably would provoke comment. Be sure and have him mention, "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," and he might even display some good stills of the picture and some effective photos of the star in his establishment.

Have your book sellers arrange window displays of David Lisle's novel, "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," published by Frederick A. Stokes, New York, in 1916. Place cut-outs of Gloria Swanson with the books, together with announcements of your coming showing. Popular priced copies of the book may be obtained from the publisher.

The old raffle stunt will be brand new by this time and you can elaborate upon it effectively. Get a young or middle-aged woman of pleasing dress and personality, who is a stranger in your town. Arrange with the stores that "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew" will spend an hour in their establishments at a certain date, they to take advertising on a co-operative basis, announcing that "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew" will be in their store from nine to ten, or whatever the hour decided upon may be.

'Michael O'Halloran'

Newsboy Novel Released by Hodkinson

BRIEF: A young newsboy, an orphan, who works hard to maintain the dingy room he calls home, finds a little crippled girl left entirely alone by the death of her grandmother, adopts her as his family and continues to provide for her. A wealthy couple, both selfish and on pleasure bent, finally separate, after which both reform and the wife takes to doing hospital work. Through a meeting with her, Michael has little Lily cured so she can walk again, and is then the means of reuniting the separated husband and wife.

THE fine spirit and all embracing kindness of a little orphan newsie forms the theme of this really big story of the noted author, Gene Stratton Porter. It is an everyday story of everyday life well told and well acted and for this reason it has been an undeniable box office attraction everywhere.

Naturally your first thought for the exploitation of this picture is the tie-up with the book stores for window displays of Porter's novel in book form.

Besides the regular edition of the book, printed by Doubleday, Page and Co., with which the book stores no doubt will be well supplied, Grosset and Dunlap have printed a popular moving picture edition. Each dealer stocking these will be supplied with at least two sets of attractive and interest-compelling window displays and you will find that practically every dealer does stock the book and will be glad to co-operate. You might arrange with your leading book store whereby he would issue a ticket of admission with each copy of "Michael O'Halloran," sold. You could sell the dealer these tickets at a reduced price and both would profit thereby.

Another idea would be to give away copies of the book as prizes for some contest or to the purchasers of the first ticket each day, or some such plan. You will be able to purchase the motion picture edition of "Michael O'Halloran" in quantities at a greatly reduced price.

Probably the easiest way to "cash in" on this picture is to tie-up with boy's clubs, mothers' clubs, schools and other organizations on the "Be Square" theme of the picture. You might organize "Be Square" Clubs of your own among the boys and girls.

DON'T give your right names! The three crooks in Universal's "White Tiger" hear off stage noises just as they are dividing up the booty after a haul

'The Chicken in the Case'

Triangle Comedy Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Steve Perkins decides to borrow the newly acquired wife of his room mate, Percival, in order to meet his aunt's wishes and get his inheritance sooner. The aunt is so impressed with Winifred that she leaves the money in the name of the framed-up wife. Aunt, however, runs into Winifred and her real husband, Percy, together and it looks suspicious to her. Of course after that she stumbles across all kinds of suspicious circumstances and after many kinds of humorous complications, during which Steve really gets married to someone, the whole plot is unraveled, Steve confesses to the hoax, and it all comes out right.

EVERYTHING that has been said about Owen Moore before can be said again. His work in "The Chicken in the Case" is fully up to what is expected of him by his vast public, as one of the finest love comedies of the cinema.

"The Chicken in the Case" starts off with a laugh at the very outset, and as the plot thickens and the situations develop, the fun grows more and more hilarious. There is no attempt at drama or pathos in this picture. It is an out-and-out farce comedy, written and produced solely for the purpose of creating laughter, and this it accomplishes very thoroughly. Of course there is love interest, lots of it; in fact that is where most of the fun comes in, and as ninety-nine and nine-tenths per cent of us have been, are, or will be, lovers, "The Chicken in the Case" accordingly appeals to that corresponding percentage of every audience.

The players who enact the various roles in support of Mr. Moore have all been carefully selected for their peculiar suitability for the parts they are called upon to portray. Playing opposite Mr. Moore is Katherine Perry, the Ziegfeld Follies beauty, who was awarded the Golden Apple by the Artists Club of New York for being the prettiest girl in the metropolis, and who in everyday life is Mrs. Owen Moore. Another charming comedienne, who has a very prominent role is Teddy Sampson, known everywhere for her fine comedy work.

Victor Heerman is both author and director of "The Chicken in the Case," and his story was given a most elaborate setting from every standpoint, and for those discerning persons who take especial delight in the technical perfection of the photoplay, a pleasant surprise is in store.

The best exploitation bet in putting this picture across, doubtless lies in the box office power of the star's name.

'Burning Sands'

Sheik Story

Released by Paramount

BRIEF: A kindly old sheik is being deceived by his villainous son who seeks to destroy his father by uniting with the enemy tribe. But the plan is foiled by a young English philosopher who lives alone in the oasis. In the ensuing battle the villain is killed, leaving the way clear for the happy marriage of the philosopher and the girl he loves.

WHILE the public is still intensely interested in sheik pictures is the logical time to show them. They need not be new, experience is proving that the old one can still draw tremendous audiences. That means that there is still plenty of business to be had on these older bookings of which you would be foolish not to take advantage. In this film the action is rapid and intense especially the great battle in the open desert. You should play this scene up especially big in your lobby cards and the literature which you send out. It will do much to stimulate interest. Also incu'cate into your lobby the desert atmosphere. This can best be done by rigging up a tent in one corner, decorating the walls in bright colors and dressing your attendants in sheik costumes. Have plenty of incense burning in oriental looking burners. This will also help attract attention.

If you have a capable carpenter you might have built a large papier mache time glass using isinglass instead of real glass. This should stand three or four feet high and should be partially filled with sand. The idea is to have patrons guess how long it will take for all of the sand to pass from the upper compartment to the lower. Offer prizes of admission tickets for the correct answers. You will be delighted at the interest you will awaken in the picture through this stunt.

Also make use of the picturesqueness of the story to arrange a street bally that would attract notice. Dress a man in the latest approved sheik style and have him ride a spirited horse through the streets. People will surely stop to look, and will notice the advertisements which should be conspicuously displayed either on the man or the horse.

To make the stunt even more interest arousing, you might have a girl on the horse with a man, which will give the impression that she is being kidnapped. It might be a good idea to have boys or men handing out throwaways to the people who have stopped to look at the "sheik."

'The Light in the Clearing'

Rural Life

Released by Hodkinson

BRIEF: Barton Baynes got a prophesy of four perils and a rosy future from the Silent Woman, while Amos Grimshaw, the son of Ben, who was the tightfisted power over the farmers, received one of death and the gallows. One night Bart met The Stranger. There was another traveller on the lonely road and it happened that the three came together. Bart saw the flash of a gun and The Stranger drop to the road. He saw the assailant come up and bend over the body. He hurled a stone which struck the assailant in the temple and hurried off to spread the news. The body turned out to be the son of the Silent Woman. She fell prostrated with grief. Amos is finally convicted of the crime and old Ben falls dead with the Silent woman's bony fingers pointing at him. Barton's future is bright with the smiles of Sally and success.

THE story which was written by Irving Bacheller is one of charm besides holding the attention and interest. The following of the events in the lives of the striking characters to their endings, some tragic and some happy, is as effective in the film as it was in the book and readers of Bacheller will be well pleased.

"The Light in the Clearing" is one of Bacheller's most popular books. Many thousands of copies have been sold since it was first published in 1917, and there is room for the sale of many thousands more. Go to the book stores in your town or neighborhood and arrange for displays and special sales on the book.

You can well afford to provide the necessary advertising posters for the displays, and in addition might reciprocate by showing a slide urging patrons to read the book after they have seen the picture, giving the name of the book stores where the novel is for sale.

Don't overlook the great opportunity that is provided by tying up with your local lighting company. The amount of your electric bill for the past year certainly entitles you to a small favor from the company. Every electric light company advertises to a certain extent, and in view of your friendly relations with the company in your town, you will probably be able to get them to word their advertisements something like the following: "The power provided by the New York Edison Company supplies 'The Light in the Clearing.'" This will give you catch-line advertising with which you can tie up in your own space. Also, you may be able to obtain permission to snipe a number of electric light poles with the following poster copy: "This is 'A Light in the Clearing.'" See the picture at the Blank Theatre on (date)."

If there is a vacant building lot, centrally located and near your theatre, get permission from the owner to place a lighted lantern in the lot at night. Set the lantern on an ordinary box and place near it a sign reading: "This is 'The Light in the Clearing.'"

'Love Is An Awful Thing'

Marriage Difficulties

Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Anthony is to marry Helen after six months probation to convince her father that he is a proper young man, when Marion turns up with some of Anthony's old love letters. To put her off Anthony assumes the role of a married man with six children. Marion discovers the hoax. Helen runs into a scene showing Anthony with his made up family. Complications ensue and the marriage is likely to be wrecked when it is discovered that Marion is married to her attorney and the two are hatching a blackmail scheme. This discovery removes the difficulties and paves the way for the happy ending.

OWEN MOORE at his best! There is nothing Moore does quite so well as this type of comedy involving love tangles and marriage complications and side-splitting intrigue. In "Love Is an Awful Thing" he has been given a story fully worthy of his powers and needless to say, he makes the most of it.

The story is full of situations that kept audiences chuckling wherever this feature was shown. Moore, in the person of Anthony, is out to convince his prospective father-in-law that he is worthy of the hand of his daughter. Incidentally this involves also being taken into the immensely wealthy business. Such a combined prize is hardly ever lightly won. And when a former flame turns up with a bundle of Anthony's love letters, the fun begins, much to the discomfiture of Anthony and the delight of the audience.

You can re-book this on the basis of pure entertainment. And promise them the limit. Owen Moore will stand for it. His name will be the main pulling power in getting them to come.

The subject of love presents numerous exploitation ideas. You can use all the old ones and they will probably be just as effective. The following would be an interesting contest to run. Offer a prize for the person who can submit the most titles of books or of pictures containing the word "love." And in sending the story to the newspapers, don't forget that the title of the present picture summarizes all thought on the subject!

'Pioneer Trails'

Western Drama Released by Vitagraph

BRIEF: The lure of gold draws Robert Dale, his wife and their son, Jack, over the prairie. The party is attacked by Indians and all save Jack are killed. He is adopted by another member of his party but being only four years old does not know his last name. Twenty years later he finds himself in love with a young girl, but not knowing his origin he dares not declare his love. She finally takes the initiative in her own hands, declares her love, and is finally accepted, peculiar circumstances having by this time established Jack's birth and origin.

AS the title would suggest "Pioneer Trails" is a Western but it is not the cut and dried stereotype gold rush story. The fine way in which it has been handled and the accuracy of the sets have put it in a class far above the average and it is therefore not to be wondered at that it immediately took with the public.

The average audience is interested in a picture of this type but it is exacting in the quality. Since, then, this one found a place immediately it is deserving of its distinction as a Tried and Proved Picture. Besides being well handled by the director, it is interpreted by a capable cast and the entire effect is extremely satisfying.

In exploiting the picture get across the atmosphere. Let it be known by all your advertising that it is a story of the gold rush, that it takes one back to times and places that are forever gone, that it has all the thrills and romance that were crowded into those unusual times.

It is the sort of picture that appeals to everybody—to all ages and classes, and no exhibitor should therefore hesitate to use every available channel for publicity. The support of the schools and churches can be enlisted on the educational and moral elements contained in the film and it would be wise to get together with these people with schemes which would prove of real benefit to both parties.

The picture is especially adaptable to ballyhoo exploitation. You can hire a horse and cart almost for nothing if you will show the owner that he will get some advertising out of it. Then dress up the wagon to look like an old fashioned covered wagon and get some men and children poorly dressed to ride in it. This thing going through the main streets will certainly attract attention and is a fine means of getting the atmosphere of the story across to the public.

Drawing contests always attract the children and offer material for attractive lobby displays. Invite the school children to draw pictures of Indian life, pioneer days or stage coaches. Offer prizes for the best drawings by pupils in the primary grades, those in grades from four to six; those from six to eight and those in high school. Many of these sketches will be found suitable for use in advertisements. They will create a local interest and draw patrons.

Many women and children in the community have made attractive pieces of needle and bead work. Some families have a collection of the handiwork of "grandma's" day. Boys are often handy at whittling, tying knots and making things. All of these may be brought to your theatre and displayed in the lobby if you offer prizes which may be in the form of passes for various periods of time.

Such exploitation is local. It unites the patron and exhibitor in closer union. It brings the theatre into the home and the home to the theatre. It wins permanent patronage.

"Pioneer Trails" lends itself to novel prologues that will prove highly entertaining and put your patrons into the spirit of the film. As this photodrama revolves about the romance of life in the early West an effective prologue will be found in the employment of singers in Indian costumes to render Indian songs.

The effectiveness of such a program may be greatly increased with proper settings. By using a tepee, a campfire and a back-drop showing a wood land scene the Indian atmosphere may be obtained.

Another suggestion calls for the employment of a number of male and female dancers to give a program of Indian dances which would fade with war whoops into the opening of the picture.

'Queen of the Moulin Rouge'

Life in Paris

Released by Pyramid

BRIEF: Tom Richards is a budding violinist but his teacher believes he lacks the soul to ever become really great. He thinks if he suffers he will arrive so he arranges a scheme with the girl Tom loves. She takes a position as a cabaret dancer and he finds her there. He is torn with anguish and he seeks expression in his violin. He plays then as he has never played before and the teacher then reveals the plot and the two are reunited.

THE story is laid in Paris and the atmosphere which has been built up around it gives the impression of being so entirely genuine and is so convincing that it elevates the picture to the class of "something different." Its charm and interest have made the picture such an audience getter that it was not long after its initial release that the film found its way into the Tried and Proved Picture class.

It was originally a stage play and the transportation to the screen rather increased than diminished its entertainment value. Being a story for the most part of Paris night life, and yet being built on a touchingly romantic and simple theme, it is little wonder that it hit the bullseye squarely and became almost instantly successful.

The title is one which makes exploitation simple. It carries with it the promise of Paris and the suggestion of sensationalism and for these reasons can be depended on to arouse the interest and curiosity of practically every class of moviegoer.

It is wise, therefore, to give as much publicity as possible to the title. For this purpose the exhibitor should make use of all the available paper. Besides what can be used for poster purposes there is some that will make excellent material for cut-outs and with these any lobby can be made attractive. Particularly this is true if the big red mill is cut out and mounted on cardboard and placed on the marquee. The wind will propel the mill and this added to the color will be certain to attract considerable attention.

If you promise free tickets to some of the shop keepers they will probably be glad to give you some window space in return. You can use this to the best advantage by placing stills of the most spectacular scenes in the window and with them a sign reading: "You don't have to go to Paris. Paris has come to you. See the 'Queen of the Moulin Rouge' at the..... Theatre."

'Enemies of Women'

Love Drama

Released by Goldwyn-Cos.

BRIEF: Alicia, an adventuress, has occasion to befriend a Russian prince with whom she flees to France. They are living together happily when the Prince sees her with her young son and knowing nothing of his existence, mistakes him for a youthful lover and quits her. He and several friends form a club known as the "enemies of women" and plan to have nothing more to do with them. But circumstances finally reunite Alicia and the prince and they find happiness together.

VINCENTE IBANEZ by reason of the number of successful motion picture stories which he has written has become one of the most noted writers of the motion picture world. This is just another one of his most notable stories and for several weeks ran at prominent theatres along New York's Great White Way. The crowds that jammed to see it at that time marked a popularity which has been duplicated not only in all the large cities, but in the smaller cities where it has already shown.

Its phenomenal booking record coupled with the broken records which it has to its credit have earned a very enviable place for this film among the foremost Tried and Proved Pictures. Part of the popularity accrued from the fact that the leading parts are assumed by Lionel Barrymore, one of America's leading actors and a movie star with a recognized following, and Alma Rubens, an emotional actress of merit and note. Backed by an appealing type of story it is little wonder that the public should manifest the interest in the film that is still being shown.

When an exhibitor books the picture he should unquestionably make a point of giving wide publicity to the name of the author and the stars, making sure to use pictures wherever possible and to take advantage of every tie-up that presents itself in connection with them.

The biggest and most promising merchant tie-up is logically with the bookstore for the story has appeared in book form and as such had a remarkable circulation. There is a special motion picture edition which sells at a modest price and was prepared especially for tie-up sales. It might be a good idea to arrange for a table in the lobby of the theatre on which several of these books and the name of the merchant from whom they were borrowed could be displayed. Seeing the picture patrons would be interested in the book and by having them right there at hand the buying urge could readily be satisfied.

Then there are such possibilities as tie-ups with the civic officials for permission to place at all street crossings signs like this: "Reckless drivers are 'Enemies of Women.' Drive Carefully." Permission might be secured, too, to have these placed on all the traffic signs, etc. The signs should also carry the name of the theatre and the announcement that the picture would appear there on such and such a day.

The druggist will willingly contribute window space in connection with a display window for a special kind of face cream. The product could be arranged attractively with stills of stars supplying the background and such signs as these placed in vantage points: "Cheap creams and cosmetics are 'Enemies of Women.' Use ——— and be sure of a pure wholesome product." On the bottom of the card should be an ad for the picture.

In exchange for a pair of tickets the shoemaker near your theatre, or several of them, for that matter, will gladly give you space for posters and stills in his window and will also arrange for some such sign as this: "Run down heels are 'Enemies of Women.' Come in and have your shoes repaired while you wait so that you will be in time to see 'Enemies of Women' now showing at the ——— Theatre."

'Little Old New York'

Romance Released by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan

BRIEF: Disguised as a boy Patricia O'Day comes to America to claim a fortune left to her brother. She silently falls in love with her step cousin who is also anxious to get the money. In a crisis she befriends him and is being whipped at the whipping post when she tells that she is a girl. The cousin rushes in, rescues her, they escape on a boat bound for England, are married on board and they don't care at all which one gets the fortune.

POPULARITY contests among fans and people engaged in the industry have time and again demonstrated that Marion Davies is undeniably a great favorite and bookings on this picture further verify this analysis. After a run of three months at the Cosmopolitan Theatre and similar long engagements at the various big houses throughout the country, "Little Old New York" found its way into the less conspicuous houses, and everywhere it went it found large crowds following it. In most cases it did not stay long enough to accommodate all the patrons who were anxious to see it, which is precisely the reason why it should be booked and rebooked by every exhibitor who can arrange his schedule to accommodate it.

A large part of its popularity, however, may be attributed to the great deal of publicity which it received and to the fact that the picture lends itself to all sorts of different exploitation ideas that have compelled people to notice it. Particularly adaptable are the ballyhoo stunts which the picture suggests.

Send out several men dressed in colonial costumes—knee breeches, satin jackets, etc.—to exactly resemble the old town criers who distributed the news. Have them display signs reading: "Town crier. This is the way they used to distribute news a hundred years ago in 'Little Old New York'." See the picture now at the Theatre.

This should get you space in the local newspapers but an even better idea might be to arrange to have one of the newspapers work with you as an advertising stunt for the newspaper at the same time. You might arrange in exchange for the idea to have the newspaper carry the cost of outfitting the men. The sign should then read: "Town Crier. This is the way they used to spread the news back in 'Little Old New York'." Nowadays the latest and most authentic news is to be found in the Hellgate Monitor, the most reliable and complete evening paper."

For the theatre that goes in for prologues and presentations, the picture suggests a wealth of splendid ideas, and for merchant tie-ups there are no end of possibilities such as bookstores, clothing stores, toy shops, music stores, electric companies and what not. For lobby displays there is a quantity of material that can be advantageously used contained in the posters and stills which are available.

By using the twenty-four sheets a variety of cutout effects may be procured and a little ingenuity will do much to make the theatre look entirely original and unusual. A particularly attractive one can be made by cutting out the two oval pictures of Marion Davies from the twenty-four sheet, for the top of the marquee. From the other twenty-four sheet cut out large figures of the star in her different costumes and mount these on cardboard and place them in front of the theatre. Then using the one sheet cut out the figures and mount them on thin muslin and tack this on a shadow box. Place a large electric light with a flash behind the box and you will find that the silhouette effect obtained will attract a great deal of attention and dress up the lobby very effectively.

'The Hunchback of Notre Dame'

Historic Novel

Released by Universal

BRIEF: Quasimodo, a deformed peasant, is scorned and mocked by both peasants and aristocrats. He faithfully rings the church bells and tries to eke some small happiness out of his existence. Esmeralda, a beautiful gypsy girl and the idol of the peasants, one day shows him a slight kindness and he from that time on adores her. Esmeralda is about to be beheaded because of an offense to an aristocrat and her affiliations with the French revolutionists. As she is being taken to the block, Quasimodo rescues her and takes her to his garret in the cathedral. There he protects her for days at the end of which time her true birth is revealed and she is restored to her lover, an aristocrat.

THE fact that the book was written by Victor Hugo, one of the foremost writers of the world, the historical nature of the story, the exactness and accuracy of the picture in relation to the details, are all responsible for the phenomenal interest which has been manifested in the picture on the part of the public, exhibitors, educators, and the church. It is seldom that any picture gets the universal recognition that has been accorded this film.

The New York Astor Theatre housed the attraction for several months and would probably still be going strong there were it not that the lease on the theatre could not be renewed. At the same time the picture was running in other cities in houses in the same class and duplicating the success it was having in the metropolis. Dozens of theatres raised their admission prices when they booked the film, and the result was a report of unusual business and innumerable broken records.

The one fact above all others that has secured remarkable publicity for the picture is the unusually fine and adequate acting of Lon Chaney. Perhaps the work of no other actor has occasioned so much editorial comment in the newspapers as that of this artist, and the result has been a quantity of word of mouth advertising.

Therefore the logical line of attack when running the picture is to feature the name of this actor and to call attention to his work through every known channel. There have been dozens of similarity contests run by the local newspapers, prizes of different kinds being awarded to those persons who can most accurately represent Quasimodo as Lon Chaney pictures him. Hustle around and get your dramatic societies, clubs, and merchants interested in making awards for some such contest. Then take the story to the newspapers. They will be glad to give you space if you can get an interesting contest.

And don't overlook the support that you can get from the schools, societies and churches. Make special arrangements with them for exclusive showings and the like. They will be ready to support the picture purely on its merit and if you can present them with an extra little inducement that will mean something to them, they will be glad to give you their earnest support.

The book store tie-up is of course logical and practical and all bookstores handling works of Victor Hugo will be ready to make satisfactory arrangements.

Here is a picture that bids fair to live on and on for years, that is good for rebookings year after year and it should therefore be the aim of every exhibitor to get as much publicity for it at this time as he possibly can. It will be one way of establishing it as a classic that will persist even as newer pictures come in to catch the public attention.

But like so many other good pictures which are lost in the following deluge, its full value will not be gotten out of it unless the exhibitor stands behind it with a lively exploitation campaign. It does not matter if this is the first or the fourth time you are booking it, you should expend as much time and energy as you can possibly afford to center the public attention and keep it there.

The use of new ideas will continually give the picture a new aspect. Some new little thing that appeals might decide some undetermined patron that he wants to see the picture again. That is why you should keep after it constantly. It holds big money possibilities for the man who is wise enough to book it and push it.

'The Bad Man'

Comedy Melodrama Released by First Nat'l

BRIEF: Lopez is a Spanish bandit who steals and kills but is good at heart and always ready to stand by a friend. Because of his stealing, Gilbert Jones of the A. E. F. is forced to give up his ranch because he cannot pay the mortgage on it. As he and his invalid uncle are leaving Lopez comes in and discovers that Gilbert has once saved his life. He determines to help him and so he kills everyone who is keeping Gilbert from his happiness, steals so that he can pay off the mortgage, and finally gets for him the girl Gilbert has always loved and wants to marry.

THE BAD MAN, as a play took New York by storm. Almost immediately it was taken up by everyone and became a real Broadway success. When it finished its run in the metropolis, it went the rounds and for three years it played every single day. When it completed its term, Edwin Carew took it for his own and transplanted it to the screen.

To detract not one whit from the story, he arranged for Holbrook Blinn, who had played the leading role on the stage, to interpret the screen part. The screen gave greater opportunity for pictorial effect and more realistic location and it is therefore not to be wondered at that the picture version even surpasses the play.

Being a clean wholesome comedy it is no wonder that it has found a very comfortable berth and that it has proven its ability to attract large audiences everywhere. The paper that has been prepared on this picture is particularly interesting in appearance. It immediately suggests the comedy and entertainment contained in the film, and it should therefore be used profusely.

Some of the lines from the play have become so well known and have been so often quoted that they are known everywhere. These should appear everywhere in every possible connection. In your newspaper ads you should make use of comic strips that elaborate on some of the humorous situations in the story.

Get some men and dress them as Spanish ranchmen. Have them ride wildly through the streets on frisky horses. As they ride they can throw out handbills announcing the name of the picture and the dates of showing. They are sure to attract attention by this stunt, and if the handbills are made to appear interesting you can certainly arouse a healthy curiosity.

SHOWMANSHIP

Tried and Proved Music for Motion Pictures

Let the Melodies of the Great Music Masters Lend the Magic of Their Charm to Your Program. They Have Stood the Test of Time

WHEN a name influential in the motion picture industry is linked with the statement that the musical setting of a picture should be rated sixty per cent and the film itself only forty per cent, it is time to give some thought to orchestral presentation.

We do not agree that the film is but two fifths of the program. After all "the play's the thing," and the auxiliary entertainment can never overshadow the main show. However, as an aid to effectiveness the value of your musical setting cannot be over-rated.

Once we actually paid our way into a Broadway playhouse. The picture had everything—that should have been avoided. We may have seen worse films, but we don't remember when or where. But we sat through it all, with eyes closed—yet not asleep. Why? The music was superb. Keying a story to that orchestration we could have produced a better photoplay ourselves.

You know that all entertainment registers through the senses. There are five of them. Sight is one; the picture satisfies it. Hearing is another, and for it, "music hath charms."

It is not necessary to stick to the hearts-and-flowers type of music, or to wrack your brain for suitable modern tunes to be played during the various episodes of your current attraction. That your audience does not enthusiastically support opera or symphony is not good evidence that they are unappreciative of good music. They may never have had an opportunity to cultivate their taste for the classics.

IT has been said: "Give the people light and they will find the way." Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, the genius who wields the baton at the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, New York, has clearly demonstrated the ease with which fine music may be popularized. Selections from century-old scores please weekly at these theatres. Not content with introducing the public to the beauties of the more lilting Italian operas, Dr. Reisenfeld does not hesitate to select from Wagner and others whose compositions have heretofore been classed as excessively high-brow and difficult to comprehend.

Try some of the operas on your piano—pianola—phonograph, and if you cannot select parts from each which create in your mind and heart vivid pictures of every conceivable human emotion—then there is a trick in it.

If your public is not composed of deaf mutes they cannot help but be thrilled by the "tried and proved" tunefulness and expressiveness of bits from "La Boheme," "Madama Butterfly," "La Traviata," "I Pagliacci," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Rigoletto," "Aida," "Thais." And these operas have lived for generations, they are not the purloined melodies of Broadway's commercial troubadours. Moreover, there are parts from each which your patrons will greet as old friends. Names may have escaped them, but the tunes will recall old loved memories which have been carefully laid away as scented treasures in the attics of their hearts.

By HERBERT K. CRUIKSHANK

The basic principle of film music must be mental suggestion—the creation of atmosphere. It must not be obtrusive, but must form an alluring background for the picture. Really, operatic music is admirably fitted to meet your requirements. Opera is drama portrayed with notes instead of words. Each

When in Doubt—Play Opera

ALL public entertainment registers through only two of the five senses—sight and hearing. A harmonious blending of sight and sound has universal appeal. Properly co-ordinated they form a perfect union.

The picture part of your program appeals through the eye. The musical setting of that picture augments the effectiveness of your offering through its ear-appeal.

You are spending much time and money to select pictures that will attract. How much thought do you devote to the musical background?

If you are neglecting it, you are not offering hundred per cent entertainment. Adequate music—"tried and proved" melody—is easily accessible.

deals with the eternal themes upon which motion pictures, drama, art and literature are all founded. In every opera you will find love, hate, comedy, tragedy, pastorals, storms, peace, war, happiness and heart-break. And just by listening you know just what the action must be at any point in the sequence. That is how well these masters interpreted every human emotion, each natural element.

DO you seek music for an Oriental scene? Listen to "L'Africana" or "Aida." Heart rending passion? "La Traviata" or "La Boheme." The climactic crash of tragedy? "I Pagliacci." But why continue? We have said that each opera contains music written to order for the portrayal of every possible emotion. "Tried and Proved" music. And that statement goes as it lays. Renew your acquaintance with some of them, and you will re-discover a wealth of appropriate musical background for your pictures.

Part of the press book on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is a most carefully prepared and cued musical score. The music fitted to "Merry-Go-Round" contributed in no small measure to that picture's success. In fact, so vital is this question that no important production is without its musical complement.

The special score arranged for "The Ten Commandments" shows well how spectacular effectiveness may be increased. Music for the chariot race shot has the same tempo as "The Ride of the Valkyries." The galloping horses are heard as well as seen. The destruction of the Egyptians is registered by a tremendous crash in brass, while the scene in which Moses receives the Commandments is scored from Bruch's Third Symphony. For the London production of "The Covered Wagon," our own Fred Arundel has gone over to conduct the large orchestra specially assembled for the showing.

IT is important that you "go over" your picture with your music man—whether he be a lone pianist or organist, or conducts your orchestra of 'steen pieces. As the film is screened the music should begin pianissimo—quietly—softly, and as the story unfolds the music builds up with it until the climax is attained. Of course when the action of the picture changes the music must do likewise. But avoid an abrupt change of pace leaving one theme dangling in the air while the music dashes off into melody of an entirely different character. Dr. Reisenfeld cues his music to a fraction of a second. You can at least emulate him by giving a little additional care to synchronization.

When the continuity gives a situation where only a minute of some certain type of music is necessary, you may find brief bits suitable to any mood. These are most helpful, but do not use them consecutively where a more lengthy opus will better carry the thought. Musical settings cannot be standardized. If Harold Lloyd takes a funny fall the accompaniment may be a roll on the drum and a clash of cymbals. But if Valentino falls to a tragic death the effect of awe-stricken horror must be conveyed to the audience. A crescendo culminating in terror-inspiring strains—or impressive silence, the silence of death.

Musical background—atmosphere—call it what you will, may not be created in a hit or miss manner, anymore than Barrymore's "Beau Brummel" is achieved solely through make-up and costume. Study, selection, consultations with your musician are essential. But with attention it is possible—and easily so—to greatly enhance the entertainment value of your program.

The objective of showmanship is to sell the program to the public. To accomplish this it is necessary to present an offering which is attractive from all angles. In making your appeal to two of the five senses instead of only to the one of sight, the chances in your favor are increased by twenty per cent. Increase your program efficiency appeal by twenty per cent and the box office receipts will mount up accordingly.

LIBRARIES AND SCHOOLS CO-OPERATE WITH CLEVELAND THEATRES

BY all means tie-up with your public libraries on every possible occasion! In books we find the best thought of the world for all time, and libraries are frequented by a great public seeking information, enlightenment, education and entertainment. The library is an institution of no less importance than the church or the school; yet the motion picture, which has been described as "the hope of the world," take its place shoulder to shoulder with these agencies which strive always to benefit humanity.

The Cleveland Public Library has shown the way, and the path it has blazed is certainly well-hewn. The work has been thorough. Tie-ups have been effected on "Scaramouche," "The Covered Wagon," "Where the North Begins," "The Courtship of Myles Standish," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Chronicles of America," "A Boy of Flanders," "Columbus," "Beau Brummel," "David Copperfield," "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," "The Ten Commandments," "Monsieur Beaucaire" and others, with great benefit to the circulation of the library, and the attendance at the theatres showing the various pictures.

The Loew Theatres have printed a list of books allied to motion pictures on a very attractive and artistic book-mark which particularly features "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and the Stillman Theatre. Book-marks on "Scaramouche" were distributed in the main library, twenty-seven branches and thirty school libraries in addition to the theatres.

The tie-ups are not limited to the exact volume from which the picture has been adapted. When "The Covered Wagon" came, displays of travel books and histories were arranged in the libraries together with stills and posters with the caption, "The Trail of the Covered Wagon." The fiction display poster read: "Fiction in the Time of the Covered Wagon." The novel of the "Hunchback" was published under three different titles; these are all available in French, German, Greek, Croatian and Hungarian.

The plan has been most successful in linking together the theatre, the library and the school with wonderful results for all three, and great benefit to the public.

MABEL MAKES A HIT

The personal appearance tour of Mabel Normand has proved so successful that it is to be extended for at least ten weeks in addition to the three weeks originally planned.

Wherever Miss Normand has appeared the business of her pictures has been greatly stimulated. She has already greeted audiences in Newark and Elizabeth, N. J., Cleveland, Detroit and Philadelphia. In each case she was enthusiastically received, and John Woody, of Associated Exhibitors, may keep her on the road for thirty weeks.

A SHOWMAN'S MESSAGE TO HIS PUBLIC

Here is a good will builder which may be used as a newspaper ad, be forwarded to your mailing list or fixed up to hang in your lobby.

MY CREED:

To serve the public. To make of this theatre a Headquarters of Happiness. A Haven whence all may come and find that which makes life worth while.

I cannot offer you material things. But I can feast your heart and mind on Beauty—Love—Laughter—Romance—Art—Adventure.

I believe these as necessary to your Happiness as food or clothing. And I believe that Motion Pictures provides them more satisfactorily than any other form of entertainment.

So it will always be my earnest endeavor to provide Happiness Service to every guest. That is the purpose of this theatre.

"Let all who enter here leave dull care behind." That is my motto.

I want this to be OUR theatre—yours and mine. To make it such, I need your help. Whether I please or displease you with my offerings, let me know. Won't you?

Only thus may I continue successfully to provide you with what we all seek—Happiness.

BIOGRAPHICAL CONTEST ON FAMOUS VIRGINIANS

The Victoria Theatre, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, successfully exploited, "The Virginian," by means of a contest conducted with the co-operation of the Harrisburg Telegraph. Silhouettes of famous Virginians appeared daily in the Telegraph for nine days prior to the opening of the picture.

These silhouettes displayed the profiles of George Washington, Woodrow Wilson, Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, James Madison, Zachary Taylor, John Tyler, William H. Harrison—eight United States presidents born in Virginia—and on the ninth day a head of Kenneth Harlan as Owen Wister's hero.

All readers able to identify these nine famous Virginians were offered a pair of tickets to the Victoria providing a brief biography accompanied each of their answers. The interest of an essay contest was added by a further offer for the best set of biographies. The successful authors were awarded with a first prize of a Mah-Jong set, a second prize of a silk umbrella and a third prize of two dollars and a half in gold. The first two prizes were donated by local dealers and the gold piece offered by the Harrisburg Telegraph. Mats of these silhouettes can be obtained for similar exploitation.

'BABY PEGGY' THOROUGHLY EXPLOITED IN HARLEM

"Baby Peggy" was very thoroughly exploited when "The Law Forbids" (Universal) played Proctors 125th Street Theatre, New York. Manager James P. Travers believes he didn't miss a trick.

Two weeks before the showing he ran a trailer, and distributed ten thousand circulars at the neighborhood schools. As a ballyhoo, a man made up as Alexander, the rooster, paraded the streets. "Baby Peggy" dolls were strung along the lobby, and a life-sized doll in a carriage propelled by a governess passed through the streets three days before opening and while playing.

There was also a special electrical display on the marquee; a large illuminated cut-out in the lobby; a "Baby Peggy" shadow box; dolls in swings bearing signs "The Law Forbids Me to Leave Here Until Sunday Night"; a big doll and two roosters with illuminated letters, and colored enlargements of stills in gold frames. Business was big all week.

Two New House Organs Entertain and Educate

MILTON D. CRANDALL, publicity chief of the Rowland and Clark Theatres in Pittsburg, has launched a four-page newspaper for theatre patrons. It is called "The Lariat" because "it ropes them all in."

The sheet is devoted to motion picture events with special stress on films which will be shown at the firm's playhouses. Real news services have been subscribed to. "Dwig's" cartoons "School Days" appear, and the syndicated "Reflections of a Bachelor Girl" is featured on the magazine page.

The entire back page of the first issue advertised First National's "Flowing Gold" booked for the following week. The front page caption read: "We Deny We Promoted the Tea Pot Dome Scandal. Daugherty to Retire After Hearing. Rowland and Clark Theatres Not Involved." Follows a well worded article about the picture.

"Editor" Crandall made some pertinent remarks to you last week on the subject of Showmanship.

Ben Davis, Schine Theatrical Circuit, has put over the initial issue of "The Bell Ringer," a house organ with the slogan, "We Shine for Schine." Tiny tips told by this skilled showman to Schine managers are well worth your attention.

He advises that electric light bills be watched, and that meters be checked to see if they have the "creeps." Eliminate unnecessary lights. You ask people to leave their homes to see your show; make your theatre sufficiently clean, attractive, comfortable to entice them from their fire-sides. Be courteous and patient. These qualities go far in building good will. A good appearance when meeting your public is a valuable asset. Cleanliness and artistic displays draw favorable attention. Avoid making a bill-board of your lobby.

The coming of Spring offers an opportunity to exploit Nature. Tie-up with your florist. Give him a slide on the screen in exchange for fresh-cut flowers and potted plants. Give your theatre a seasonal touch by having flowers in the box-office, in the ushers' lapels—potted plants in the lobby. Arrange a Spring Flower Show with the florist; bank the stage and lobby with plants. Give away a plant or two to the holder of the "lucky number."

Every suggestion is a good one—otherwise it would not emanate from Ben Davis. This Spring thing looks like a particularly good bet. Play it.

SUCCESSFUL STYLE SHOW STAGED BY SUFFOLK

The Spring Fashion Show staged by the Suffolk Theatre, Holyoke, Mass., in connection with the Universal picture "A Lady of Quality" proved such a success that it has been determined to make a style revue one of the annual events.

In the show, styles of today were contrasted with those of the seventeenth century in a novel manner. Men and women garbed in modern attire stepped from a huge volume representing Francis Hodgson Burnett's book. Two girls in costumes of the Queen Anne period turned the pages as each living model was presented.

The next scene was out-of-doors, thus offering an opportunity for the display of the latest vogue in sport clothes. Formal dress was shown, the models being grouped about a piano, singing while the "hostess" played. Then came another pa-

ATTRACTIVE ARRANGEMENT

Walker's Theatre, Santa Anna, Cal., played the Universal picture and announced the fact through this display. The idea shows some real thought made in different costumes, and the act closed with the models bowing their ways back into the book.

Merchants who exhibited their goods bore all the expense except that incidental to the actual staging of the number. A duplicate of the book featured in the show was used as a walking street ballyhoo. A living window display tie-up was also effected, a pretty girl showing stills from the picture to the crowds that gathered before the window of a High Street book store.

The newspapers were liberal with the space allotted to advance notices, reviews and general publicity. Special stories were written by society editors about the show, the merchants who were interested gave window space and mentioned both Fashion Show and picture in their advertisements, and both stores and theatres did big business from start to finish of the run.

'Maytime' Ad Gives Advice to Lovelorn

The popularity of the opera "Maytime" from which the Preferred Picture is adapted, gave Manager Herman Lorence, Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, New York, an opportunity to tie-up with the Steinway piano agency. A Steinway Duo Art was used in a specially arranged prologue, and an announcement of this fact was sent to the theatre's mailing list. In reciprocation the piano company made mention of the "Maytime" picture at the Bellevue in all local advertising.

A similar arrangement was effected with a leading furniture house which advertised the photoplay in its newspaper copy in return for a special herald distributed by Mr. Lorence. This, when folded, read: "How to Win a Girl's Love." The inside copy advised the man to first get enough money to buy candy, roses, silk stockings, gloves, a good dinner and a high-powered motor car. He was then to call upon the girl and say: "Let's go to the Bellevue and see "Maytime," and after the show tell her: "That's just the way I love you, will you marry me?"

If she was the right kind of a girl she would say the fatal "yes," and the boy was to spend the money for furniture instead of candy and the other incidentals of courtship. If the answer was negative, he was told to put the money in the savings bank and get another girl. Not bad advice at all.

PHOTOPLAY EDITION WILL POPULARIZE FILM

In its tie-up with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for the combined exploitation of the film version of Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks" and the photoplay edition of the book, the Macaulay Publishing Company has just issued one of the biggest editions ever published in its series of popular price reprints of copyright novels. The edition consists of 200,000 copies and the Macaulay Company anticipates that it will be entirely exhausted by the demand for it which will be aroused by the showing of the photoplay throughout the country.

The Macaulay Company has arranged to exploit the book on a big scale nationally at the same time that the film is shown. Booksellers will be supplied with copies of the novel, window cards and other advertising accessories at the time the picture is shown in their towns.

'NEVER GO THERE ANY MORE'

Atlantic Garden, an old Bowery landmark, was used for the premiere of the Universal Jewel "Fool's Highway." A corner of the lobby was reminiscent

'Beau Brummel' Wins at Ascot Races

At the recent Ascot Motor Speedway races in Los Angeles there was a car entered with the name BEAU BRUMMEL painted on each side. The driver, a well-known racer, was garbed exactly as John Barrymore appears in the picture. That the car should actually shoot past the stand a winner added the crowning touch to a novel stunt.

The San Francisco Bulletin carried a four-column feature story entitled: "Do You Remember San Francisco's Beau Brummels of Yesterday." The city's old beaux were pictured and described, and many interesting anecdotes related about them. The caption under the nine portraits of these gallants of a dead day read: "The Beaux of the Days When Mrs. Eleanor Martin Reigned as Queen of Society in San Francisco."

'Secrets' Tie-Up in Demand

Such is the beauty of the SECRETS window display tie-up in the spacious windows of Stern's, New York department store, that two other famous merchandising establishments are anxious to yield their valuable windows. Arnold-Constable propose to use the display during their anniversary week, and it will then go over the river to Brooklyn and appear in Abraham and Straus' central window.

The accessories consist of dresses in the style worn during the periods covered by the action of the picture and some very attractive stills of Norma Talmadge.

European Exploiting

As the sweet young thing said when she looked at the Swedish match-box: "I thought 'matches' were made in Heaven." Well, be that as it may, the land of "tand-stickerfabriks" is doing some pretty exploiting.

Yesterday's Sons—Today's Daughters

When DAUGHTERS OF TODAY played Moss's Broadway Theatre, New York, the way was paved by using some paragraph punches prepared as special trailers. One read: "Brazen Beauties and Gilded Fools; Pride Rustling in Slithering Silk; Sweetest Joys and Wildest Woes; They're All There,

EXPLOITATION IDEAS

Neighbor, in 'Daughters of Today.' An other extended an invitation to "Honest John" Kelly, Berry Wall, Ward McAllister, and "the other boys" of twenty years ago to meet "Daughters of Today."

Manager McDonald used a large painted sign across the front of the theatre giving a scene from the picture.

Old Favorites Revived

Manager Simmons, of the Allen Theatre, at Akron, Ohio, engaged special singers to give a program of popular songs during his run of ON THE BANKS OF THE WABASH, the J. Stuart Blackton production, which was inspired by Paul Dresser's famous lyric. He also exploited the picture with the aid of the local music store which made a feature of this record during the run of the picture.

Mary Names Song

"Love Has a Way" is the title Mary Pickford gave the theme melody to be used in DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL. The music was composed by Victor Schertzinger, film director and writer of many musical hits including the recent sensation "Marcheta."

The number is being featured in a country-wide campaign, and is being well received. In Chicago seventeen theatres are using slides several weeks before the showing, and also featuring the music, thus creating interest in both film and song.

A Trolley Without Tracks

A truck plastered on three sides with Warner Brothers' lithographs got some nice publicity for CONDUCTOR 1492 during the showing at the Rialto and Benenson Theatres, New York, and the Rialto in Brooklyn.

On the sides two twenty-four sheets gave the truck the appearance of a street car, while a six sheet on the rear showed Johnny Hines as conductor. A gong sounding like a street car bell rang when the car was in motion and the managers of all three theatres rang up plenty of fares at the box office.

TIE-UP COVERS CENTURY

"The Knickerbocker," a smart Times Square hat shop showed a still of 1824 hat styles for comparison with the 1924 vogue, in one of the many tie-ups on Warner Brothers' "Beau Brummel"

BIG PUNCH IN ONE LINE

This is how Dewey Mousson, Knickerbocker Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., put over First National's picture. At night the sign was well illuminated

Skins for 'Slaves'

A large skin, indirectly illuminated from above, was part of Manager Fred Normand's lobby display for his showing of Goldwyn's SLAVE OF DESIRE, based upon Balzac's famous novel "The Magic Skin."

Before the skin was a small sign reading: "Are you a slave for love, pleasure, fame, money, youth?" and three miniature cut-outs of figures costumed as in the picture. Imitation skins, with the title printed on them, were on the doors leading into the auditorium.

'It's an Ill Wind'

A big fire in Green Bay, Wis., recently gave the fire department an opportunity to display its heroism. As it happened, Harry Hadfield had booked "Hook and Ladder" for his Grand theatre. The rest was easy. With the papers full of the fire story and the bravery of the firemen who had saved life and property in zero weather, the public readily responded to his announcement of the fire fighting film.

Hunches for 'Hunchback'

In Pueblo, Colo., the Sunville and Purity Bakeries carried large banners on their trucks and inserted matinee reduced rate coupons in loaf wrappers during the showing of the HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME at the Auditorium Theatre. In other cities "Hunchback" chocolate bars have made a hit. Also specially baked "Hunchback" loaves of bread.

Streets of Cairo

With only time for an overture and a production number to precede THE SONG OF LOVE, Guy Kenimer, Jacksonville, Fla., decided on a snappy Oriental dance. Following the overture, came an interior Oriental scene—dancer discovered reclining on couch—background an Oriental rug. On both sides of the stage were standard incense burners—with lots of incense. A gauze scrim hung in front of the set. The lights were in red and blue.

The scrim was raised and as the music picked up, the dancer did her number ending in the same posture in which she was discovered. The scrim was lowered as the lights dimmed, and the first few feet of main title were shot on the scrim as the screen was lowered from behind.

Kenimer declares that two ancient "sugar daddies" liked the program so well that they insisted on hunting him up at the box office after the show and paying again for their seats. Can you beat it?

WHY not submit a list of "Tried and Proved" pictures to your audience and have them vote on what ones they would prefer to see? The three pictures polling the heaviest votes may then be shown with a guaranteed attendance. The names and addresses of the persons balloting may be added to your mailing list so that they will be advised when their choice in pictures is to be viewed.

An original theatre front idea was used by a Swedish playhouse on "The Isle of Lost Ships." A large, modern ocean liner was cut out and placed above one side of the entrance. On the other side was a medieval sailing vessel. Two connecting arrows pointed to a map locating "The Isle."

A "TRIED AND PROVED" attractor for a "Tried and Proved" Picture. Lenore looks a dead shot, but exhibitors brag big cash business and no "Annie Oakleys."

MANAGER CLIFF DENHAM received thirty replies to this advertisement appearing in a Victoria, B. C., paper: "A Temporary Husband—Young girl, 22 years of age, attractive, must marry within week. Will pay well any man who marries her, but he must leave her after the ceremony. Prefer gentleman of good breeding but one who does not expect to live longer than a week. P. O. Box 1000."

On Friday prior to opening another advertisement was inserted. This time: "Found—A Temporary Husband—He'll be at the Royal Theatre four days commencing Monday." With the exception of the thirty applicants every one thought this idea a "pin."

ADVERTISING AIDS

Have you considered such trifles as pencils suitably marked; diaries covering a month and featuring your attractions each week; paper napkins distributed to popular lunch-rooms, soda fountains, or for church suppers or club luncheons, bearing your copy on the corner visible when the napkin is folded? What about advertising your theatre on a time schedule of the street cars or elevated line passing near you? And marking the cars which will arrive at your theatre about show time.

IN a novel advertisement used by C. G. Behrens, manager of the Family Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, for his engagement of "Sporting Youth," the Universal Jewel starring Reginald Denny, a "Straight-from-the-Shoulder-Talk" by Carl Laemmle was revamped. The article was headed: "Sporting Youth Without a Flask" and told of the production of a picture of today's younger generation without a single whisky flask or any other objectional feature.

Mr. Behrens ran the article as though it had been addressed to him, personally by Carl Laemmle. The layout and composition was similar to that used in the Universal Weekly with the exception that it was run in two columns instead of three.

WHAT IS IT?

JOTS

Not a candy but it will "tickle your taste" just the same

cannot be eaten but it's a delectable dish to serve up to yourself and friends.

J O T S

will refresh the tired business man and give the gentleman of leisure something to think about!

JOTS

will dispel blues, boredom and indifference. And it doesn't come in a capsule!

USEFUL and inexpensive advertising is at a premium. If you can tie-up your advertising with some practical idea you add to the length of its service and its value to you.

THIS is how Dick Nolen, Seymour, Ark., aroused interest in his showing of the F. B. O. picture "Judgment of the Storm." Newspaper readers were all "het up" before the Nolen Theatre finally told the answer.

THE box office value of tie-ups with local organizations cannot be over emphasized. It should not be difficult to arrange special nights for every society from the Elks to the Epworth League—from the K. K. K. to the Y. M. H. A.

Sell them tickets at box office prices and let them get what they can for the cause in which they may be interested. Arrange with them to augment your program with local talent volunteered from their ranks. Make your show theirs too. Co-operate with them for a real gala night.

IT has been said that America is a nation of bargain hunters. Whether or not this is true so far as you are concerned may be easily determined by having a bargain day once a month—or at any stated interval.

The idea would be to issue tickets in booklets giving fifteen tickets for the price of twelve. A hundred catch lines will suggest themselves to you. For instance: "Get three more for the price of twelve."

THE management of the Auditorium Theatre in Winston-Salem, N. C., gave a series of questions relative to American history for use in connection with the showing of "Little Old New York," and tied this up with a double-page spread of commercial advertising which appeared in two issues. The first, contained the questions about American historical events, one question being published in each ad. In the next, the questions were repeated and the answers given.

Merchants were interested in this tie-up through the free tickets that were offered to them for distribution to the first four persons who took the correct answers to the firm in whose advertisement the question appeared. Fifty-two tickets were given away and the names of the winners were published in the Winston-Salem Journal.

AN array of advertisements that have proven pulling power for Paramount pictures. Each is attention-compelling, and they are all "tried and proved" efforts of expert copy creators.

THE MODERN THEATRE

SEATTLE'S GREY GOOSE THEATRE, DESIGNED BY E. W. HOUGHTON

The Modern Laboratory and its Problems

A Common Sense Talk by an Expert in Film Work, from the Making of the Raw Stock to the Finished Product on the Screen

By BERT WARD

General Manager Claremont Laboratories, Inc.

THERE is distinct individuality in motion picture laboratory work, and the work of a producer can be enhanced or depreciated by the laboratory doing the release work.

While the cost of everything in motion picture production has increased many times in the last five years, the price of laboratory work has been consistently hammered down, and at present the trend seems to be to turn out the cheapest product possible. In figuring on printing, laboratories will cut prices until one has to split into hundredths of a cent. Cheapness is the outstanding cry, and it stands to reason that quality must suffer in this mad endeavor to cut—cut, and cut.

The Eastman Kodak Company recently made a radical cut in the price of film, making the price of raw stock the cheapest in the history of the industry. This cut makes it possible to produce film so cheaply that quality should not be sacrificed.

The slogan of the Claremont Laboratories is quality. An efficient technical staff is maintained to give individual attention to production. There is nothing in the way of tinting or toning that we will not do. We do not use developing machines. Developing machines cut down expense tremendously. Personally, I cannot see how a developing machine can compete with the hand work of artists in their profession. Technically, I can see as much difference as exists between a beautiful, hand painted picture and a lithographic reproduction. The lithograph may be well made, but still it is a lithograph—turned out by machine.

Artistry and individuality must exist in photography, in motion pictures as well as in still plates. In still work you can go to famous photographers and pay $100 per dozen for pictures, and you know they are well worth it and you can find any number of photographers who will make photographs for five dollars per dozen.

Toning cannot be done on a developing machine, and for this reason tones that would greatly enhance the beauty of a picture are very often omitted. In addition, the film is pulled through a developing machine in thousand foot lengths over hundreds of sprockets, which, in my opinion, stretches the film and weakens it so it will not stand up as long in service.

Every time film goes through a bath it weakens the bath a little. The developer working with his eye balances his racks and in this way gets uniform quality. He may start developing in four minutes and by night time be developing in nearly five minutes. Furthermore, with a rack and tank, every rack going out carries with it a quantity of developer which is replaced with fresh developer.

In a rack and tank there is constant agitation of the developer. The ingredients of a developer bath differ greatly in gravity, and in a compartment without agitation have a tendency to stratify. I think it will be found that producers giving attention to the quality of the photography of their pictures are having their work done in laboratories that do it by hand, and not by machine.

It seems a pity that today when the cost of pictures runs up into the millions that producers will try to save a few dollars on a print. The average number of prints used today in the United States is one hundred. A producer naturally will not look at one hundred prints. Instead, a sample print is submitted by the laboratory, is O. K.'d by the producer, and then ninety-nine more are shipped out all over the country. The producer, of course, assumes that all the prints will look like his sample print, when as a matter of fact the sample has been very carefully developed by hand, and more carefully inspected, and the ninety-nine prints will not be so printed and handled.

I THINK it would be a good thing if laboratories were compelled to put their trademark on every print. Credit is given to the camera-man for the photography, and this is justly so. But many times the work of a high-class, competent camera-man is spoiled by a laboratory. A photographer will work out a beautiful light effect, which must be printed and toned and tinted just right to make it effective, and then will be broken-hearted when he sees a print in a theatre which has very effectively spoiled his work.

There are some producers who still say: "I want the best work in the world. How cheap can you do the best work?" This makes fair competition. But when a laboratory is asked to meet an arbitrary price for film, based on machine quality alone, that is not competition, when one is equipped to turn out film on a quality basis.

The Claremont Laboratories will meet any competition in America, based on quality, service and price. We number among our customers producers who demand quality first. There are still a number of such producers who have not lost their heads, and who recognize quality as the paramount issue in having their work done.

If every laborator succumbed to the trend of producing cheaper photograph it would be but a short time before a real technical laboratories would pass out of existence, and then motion picture photography, instead of advancing continually, as it should, would retrograde. Cut out the human element in an art and do the work by machine and it ceases to be an art but merely a method of manufacturing. The individual touch would be lacking, and experimentation and research would be laid to rest.

Consider how it can be possible to take a picture, on which several hundred thousand feet of negative has been exposed, taken through all seasons, under various conditions, and including lighting effects and night scenes, and make that picture conform to the limitations of a machine. As a matter of fact, some scenes should be developed in a slow bath, and others in a faster bath. I have yet to see a machine which will take all these scenes, join them in sequence in thousand foot rolls, and run them through mechanically and bring forth on the screen the best there is in that negative. When such a machine is invented I will take my hat off to it very reverentially and acknowledge that I am licked.

CLEVELAND CONCERN BUYS FOUR WURLITZERS

The Ohio Amusement Company of Cleveland, Ohio, closed a hundred thousand dollar organ contract with G. A. Levy, District Manager of The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company. This contract includes four organs for installation in the Savoy, Knickerbocker, Denison Square and New Theatres, all located in Cleveland. The Wurlitzer (Hope-Jones) organs purchased will give the Cleveland public the finest in organ music and enable the Ohio Amusement Company to render not only high grade concerts, but to interpret to the minutest detail the action upon the screen.

ATMOSPHERIC PROLOGUE FOR 'FOOL'S HIGHWAY'

When Universal's "Fool's Highway" played the Granada Theatre of San Francisco, this appropriate and unique prologue was made part of the program. To say that it put the patrons in the proper kind of mood to appreciate the picture is merely to repeat the obvious. It offers an idea to other exhibitors.

GREY GOOSE THEATRE IS SEATTLE'S ADDITION TO SUBURBAN FIELD

Stippled Walls and Velour Drapes Give Soft Effective Color Harmony to House

SEATTLE'S latest addition to the suburban field, is the highly attractive Grey Goose Theatre, recently opened in the Beacon Hill district by Barrows and La Vigne. Beacon Hill has never previously had a theatre, and its residents are responding with full attendance, to the efforts made for them.

The house seats 500 persons, and is built on the ground floor plan, with rest rooms and projection booth on a mezzanine floor, reached by carpeted stairs from either end of the broad foyer. The building is of concrete construction, with brick trim across the front. It is lighted by the most modern system, with indirect fixtures on dimmers controlled from the box office, and is heated with a modern plant, giving ventilation and an even temperature.

The color scheme, as suggested by the title of the house, is of warm gray and old blue. Walls have been stippled, giving a soft color harmony that is very effective. Velour drapes at exits, across the foyer, and the stage curtain, are of old blue. Carpets are gray. Foyer and stars are being carpeted. The aisles of the auditorium are carpeted with a cork carpet. The ceiling of the auditorium is slightly arched and finished in beam effect. Four large lighting fixtures, and bracket wall fixtures give ample light and decoration. Rest rooms are furnished with wicker furniture in gray, and are finished with paneled glass windows for viewing the screen, while enjoying a smoke or rocking the baby. This is an additional feature for the comfort of patrons, that is not always found in the neighborhood house.

Projection booth is equipped with two Powers 6-B projectors with mazda equipment, Brenckert spotlight and Spencer stereopticon, furnished by the Theatre Equipment Co., also Superlite Screen. The Heywood-Wakefield chairs were installed by B. F. Shearer, Inc. E. W. Houghton was the architect and Hans Pederson the contractor.

The house was opened with a snappy program of music and brief speeches. Mayor Brown made the speech of dedication before a capacity audience. Messrs. Barrows and LaVigne issue a Grey Goose weekly bulletin of news and advertising. They began the establishment of friendly relations and a spirit of cooperation with the residents of their district, well in advance of their opening, and are justifying the splendid patronage with which they have started.

The Grey Goose Theatre, with its unmistakable atmosphere of the rural, and its suggestiveness of the English Cottage style, may well stand as a fitting model for the house that is located on the outskirts of the big city or its suburbs.

SIXTEEN YEARS OF LENS IMPROVEMENT

An announcement from the Gundlach Manhattan Optical Company of Rochester, N. Y., throws some interesting light on the evolution of modern progress in lenses, with particular emphasis on the part this concern has played in the striving for better projection through improved lenses.

In its published brochure, the concern has this to say:

Back in 1908 when we first turned our attention to Projection Lenses most of them were imported and we found that they were uniformly poor in quality. There was only one size of small diameter with an aperture of F:4. We at once saw the possibility of a good market for better Projection Lenses which would transmit more light and we also realized the necessity for grading the focal lengths more closely so a lens could be obtained to fit the picture to the screen and also that the focal length engraved upon the mount should be accurate within a reasonable limit. Our first lenses increased the working aperture from F:4 to F:3 an improvement in illumination of 66% and in a short time we made lenses working at F:2, giving 4 times the illumination compared with F:4. Not stopping here we then introduced our No 2 size Projection Lenses at 2½ in. diameter to supply lenses of longer focal lengths giving equally good illumination and both our No. and No. 2 sizes have become standard.

While these were remarkably fine lenses we later on made another improvement in the optical quality by producing lenses with a flatter field, giving better marginal definition and these are known by trade name of Gundlach Radiant Projection Lenses.

The Modern Operator

ON OILING THE FILM

RECENT happenings have convinced me that the unclean state of much of the film that is returned to exchanges is for the most part due to the indiscriminate use of oil by operators.

True, every projector requires frequent oiling, but as previously pointed out in these columns, there is a vast difference between oiling and saturating. That it is practically impossible to avoid having the oil run into parts of the machine where it has no business is generally agreed, and if operators would only take the trouble to wipe the projector over after each oiling process, there would be little chance of the film coming in contact with it.

Though I have not actually seen them at it, I know that some have gone as far as to dip their fingers into oil or vaseline and apply to new film when the emulsion begins to "drag" on the runners. It is a practice for which there is no necessity, and one that should be immediately discontinued. When trouble is encountered with new film, a safe and easy remedy is to cut down a candle, and apply it to the film as it runs through the machine. In the event of emulsion sticking to the runners, it can easily be scraped off with a copper coin. Besides, most film, is waxed in the proper manner before going out.

For the protection of film against the ravages of oil and attendant grit, all that is required is a little reasonable care. Hereunder are a few rules that if faithfully observed, will do away with a whole heap of trouble.

To be properly cleaned, a machine should be dismantled. This allows the oil to penetrate properly, and, for adequate wiping before the parts are re-assembled. Even after the machine is pieced together, it should again be carefully wiped with a clean cloth. Always see too, that the projector stand is clean, and that there is no oil or grease on the floor of the box. And once more, don't bathe the machine in oil. Remember the one drop is sufficient to carry a projector through one session.

Where two machines are in use, the mechanism should be wiped over after each reel. If one machine, spare a few moments during interval to wipe it down.

Essential as oil is to the projector when used in proper quantities, it causes serious damage to film if allowed contact with it. Oil will shorten its life, for it tends to attract dust and grit, which is responsible for the scratches that cause so many of the careful operators unwarranted trouble.

Never commence oiling up after the show has commenced. It is impossible to watch the screen and at the same time direct the spout of the oil-can to its proper place. Oiling is therefore a procedure that should be performed before screening commences.

ELECTRIC SEAT FINDER

No more groping in the dark for seats when this new device, invented by Wilfred L. Guerin of New Orleans, comes into general use in theatres

ADVERTISING VIA THE RADIO MAT SLIDE

A very clever and efficient slide service that is attracting a great deal of notice, is being distributed for Radio Mat Slide Co., by Sidney Cohen. In conjunction with the Motion Pictures Theatre Owners of America, the postal authorities have arranged for the use of the slides to put over their "shop early, mail your packages early" campaign.

This advertising method has been adopted for this purpose because of its speed and efficiency in reaching everybody. The service is so established that any desired message will be sent out in slide form within twenty-four hours after they are ordered.

This great speed and the simplicity of the arrangement (the slides are just ordinary strips with the message typewritten) suggests the possibility of a wide field of advertising through this medium in which town officials, merchants and so forth, can play a prominent part.

Three Reels

The most remarkable nature picture ever made

See the air dark with millions of birds; see a river fairly choked with wading water birds; see huge crocodiles living with big birds in perfect friendship; see the land of the Pharaohs as a huge Winter resort for every kind of bird you can think of!

Bengt Berg, the celebrated Scandinavian scientist, has made a life study of the migrations of birds. Now you may see in one marvellous picture the results of years of patience. Not a person in your audiences but who will marvel at these surprising scenes.

One of the greatest mysteries in Nature is the migration of birds.

Every Spring the air is filled with feathered travellers, who, as though at word of command, start flight through space over thousands of miles and may end their journey at the Arctic Circle. In the Fall they turn back over the long and dangerous journey, heading for the sunny and welcoming South.

There is a real thrill in the train wreck and the audience shrieks with delight. The cast is just what it should be."

—Aileen Brenon, Morning Telegraph

"When Owen Davis mapped out the thrills for his old melodrama 'Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model' little did he think that people long afterward would shake their sides with laughter in a theatre like the Capitol at the sight of Nellie's hairbreadth escape in film form. The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

Industry Too Big To Be Monopolized, Declares Zukor

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of Famous Players, declared on Tuesday the motion picture business is too big for any individual or any group to monopolize it. The remark was made at a luncheon given by President J. D. Williams of Ritz Pictures in honor of Hugh D. McIntosh of Australia, both of whom were sailing the following day for England in the interest of a company which will make pictures utilizing American skill and equipment but under a British brand.

In the motion picture business, Mr. Zukor said, it is gray matter that counts, and that is something that cannot be controlled by any group or individual.

In opening Mr. Zukor took his cue from Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of the Commercial Trust Company, who declined to sit down until he had briefly paid his respects to the bonus men, qualifying and restricting his characterizations to the "vicious" type.

The Paramount chief, while declaring he personally had had no contact with them, referred to the men who charged illegal rates as "parasites of the industry, the men who have given the industry a black eye," and paid his respects to the man who enters the industry only to "fleece it and grab everything when he thinks it is time to get out and run."

Mr. Williams in introducing Mr. Zukor aroused keen interest among the score of men seated around a luncheon table at the Ritz-Carlton when he referred to the Paramount executive as the biggest man the industry had ever known and as one whom he had learned to know better in the last six months.

To Foster British Spirit

"The fact that Mr. Zukor recognizes you can't monopolize this industry is the reason why he is the biggest man in it," said Mr. Williams as the Paramount chief concluded his talk.

The speakers other than those mentioned were Robert E. Welsh, of the Moving Picture World, who on behalf of the press of the industry welcomed the guest of honor, and Mr. McIntosh. Mr. Williams referred to Mr. McIntosh as "an international sportsman, a newspaper proprietor and a theatrical manager, a man who always had been a sincere friend of Americans, and incidentally one who always had given his players and all employees a square deal."

The guest of honor said it was his

J. D. WILLIAMS

President of Ritz Pictures, who has gone to England in the interest of a company to make American pictures for Britons and under a British brand ambition to create a company that would carry the British spirit throughout the world. He believed the English-speaking race should work as a unit in picturemaking even as in the future if it came to fighting they probably would have to fight together.

Besides those named, those present at the luncheon were George Kleine, William Vogel, Elmer Pearsons, F. C. Munroe, Raymond Pawley, John Ragland, William A. Johnston, John Spargo, George Blaisdell, Thomas Hanly, Joe Dannenberg, S. George Ullman, Harry J. Cohen, Harry W. Cooper, Hawley Turner, Pete Henderson, Spyros P. Skouras and Philip E. Rosen.

A Square Shooter

"I am very glad to be here today to meet Mr. McIntosh," said Mr. Zukor. "I had the same pleasure fifteen years ago when I was introduced to the guest of honor by William Brady. I recall what Mr. Brady said to me at that time, that Mr. McIntosh was a 'square shooter.'"

Mr. Zukor remarked that in view of that first introduction he was very glad to welcome Mr. McIntosh, adding he was doubly glad to greet a man of Mr. McIntosh's reputation.

"At no time in my career in this industry," continued the speaker, "did I ever shirk meeting any one coming into it who meant to help the industry and to further its interests, whether financially, morally or with his brains, to aid in so conducting this business as to put it squarely before the public.

"I am not aware of any plans Mr. McIntosh may have in coming among us, but we will welcome any man with a safe and sound policy."

Industry Needs Finances

Mr. Zukor then paid his respects to the men who demanded 30 per cent for loans. Saying he could not speak from personal experience he characterized them as parasites.

"I would a thousand times rather say to any one, 'If you have reason to believe you can make money in this industry, if your undertaking is sound and your analysis is also, and you can do business at 6 per cent or whatever the legal rate may be, whether you are private individual or banker you are loyal to this industry, because this industry needs finances, and finances must come from sources where finances are controlled.'"

For those who encouraged the making of pictures by men illy equipped for that purpose until the latter were "up to the neck" and there was no alternative but to submit to demands for exorbitant rates of interest the speaker declared "They are the parasites of the industry, they are the men who give the industry a black eye."

Monopoly Impossible

"The moving picture industry is big enough to embrace every constructive individual or group willing to step into it and help to develop it," declared Mr. Zukor, "but the industry does not welcome any one who is just stepping in to fleece it and grab everything when he thinks it is time to get out and run."

"We sometimes hear it said that there are men in this industry of monopolistic tendencies. I want to say to you that any such thought on the part of an individual or an organization can only be developed in a mind which has not made a study of the magnitude of this industry, because if that were done it soon would be realized that it is something that is impossible."

"This industry is too big. Besides it does not deal with things material. The thought may be justified in the case of a group that desires to control the steel or oil or potash of the world, but the moving picture industry deals with brains. It is gray matter in our industry that counts, that is the most valuable. And the gray matter in our industry can't be under the control of any group or individual."

"You may convert dollars into pounds or francs or marks, and it remains the same thing. But where you deal in brains you can't centralize the control. If you do try to do it you are retarding, not advancing. There is plenty of opportunity in this industry for brains. Its destiny is more dependent on brains than on any material form."

"So we must encourage brains to come in as well as finances. The two must synchronize. It is as important to have financial genius among us, too, as it is mental. It is not necessary for me to assure you how anxious I am to extend a welcome to any one willing to come among us and lend a helping hand."

Competition Wholesome

"But we should resist at all times the entrance of parasites into our industry. We have had enough of them, and now we want to encourage wholesome efforts to put the industry before the world in its right light. I don't care whether they are in opposite camps or otherwise, because competition is wholesome, and because without it I don't think the industry would have made the strides it has made."

"I welcome them as well as any force that will help to put the industry where it belongs."

Dr. Giannini, speaking as a former San Franciscan, said Australia always had seemed near to him. He said he believed Mr. McIntosh would make a very substantial addition to the industry, that he is a man who will be well worth receiving, and that what he will do will be in the nature of a constructive contribution.

"You know I have said before I will only stand for clean doings," said the banker. "There are only a few fellows left that we have to fight, men who do no good to the industry. Join with me in smashing the bonus men in the business—and I am speaking of the vicious ones. Within the last two weeks and following my recent public remarks I have had some very threatening words said and written to me, but that is not worrying me."

Putting England on Map

"Our idea is to put England on the map as a producing center," said Mr. McIntosh. "The great empire of Britain is today smothered with American pictures. It may not be pleasant to listen to this, but in justice to the empire it should be represented rightly."

"For England there should be portrayed to the world her own ideals and policy. At the present time she is governed by American ideals."

"My idea is to be competitive as between the nations, to make British pictures with American stars and American brains, productions which will represent England and her colonies in the light they should be."

"If we can induce the men I have in mind—and they are among the best and the most patriotic in England—to come in, using your brains and our facilities we will make pictures for the United States and the empire at large."

"Motion pictures are going to be more indispensable than ever. Pictures will preserve the English language, will make the boy grow up with high ideals."

"As you know Australia is surrounded by practically—almost—billions of colored people. San Francisco is our nearest port, nineteen days by boat. Then you realize how far Australia is away from England. There always has been an affinity of thought between the western coast of the United States and our own people."

"I would not have the temerity to enter against your organizations, but instinctively I feel that we can do a great deal together if we can work in harmony and show the rest of the world that the English-speaking division of humanity can hold its own."

Sees England Belittled

"I have never seen an Englishman in the pictures portrayed as a human being, but always with an eyeglass and as a damned fool generally. When these pictures are shown to the races that are governed by whites they look upon their governors as damned fools. You can understand why we think the British people should be put on a proper basis."

"We want pictures that show proper respect for the English race, and we believe they can do much to bring about a right feeling in the world. It is the nation that can fight the best that will have the longest run."

"I have known Mr. Williams for fifteen years and always liked him. He has never made a failure in any undertaking. If Mr. Williams will put in the same work with us that he has put in here we will make pictures at a profit—we will make pictures that people will look at, anyway. There is no other man I know who could have induced me to go into this business."

"Mr. Zukor may rely on this: I have never been a parasite. I have made money, but never have I gone into a business with the sole idea of profits."

"I have been very much interested in observing and listening to Mr. Zukor. Out in Australia I had gained the impression he was some sort of an octopus, not the quiet, sincere gentleman I find him."

A TYPICAL EXAMPLE OF MR. ROTHAFEL'S TABLOID OPERA PRESENTATION

The Prologue As a Basis For Atmosphere, Relaxation and Entertainment

By S. L. ROTHAFEL

Director of Presentations of the Capitol Theatre, New York

THE evolution of motion picture entertainment since the crude, early days, has brought us to the present day development wherein the prologue has become an integral part of the picture presentation. So it has come to pass that prologues are now pretty much taken for granted.

I do not know of any general rules for prologues. Only one thing is certain. Each picture requires a different preliminary treatment, and the proper atmosphere cannot be attained unless real thought and study is given to the subject. A song or a dance preceding a production, connected by the mere superficial link of a title or a locale, does not constitute a prologue in the fullest sense of the word. Atmosphere is a delicate thing and it must be carefully developed and ingeniously sustained. Let us consider the various ways in which atmosphere may be introduced.

ONE method is to build a program around the picture. From the first number, the desired note or color is introduced. By the musical selections, the incidental film numbers—even the lighting—we introduce and sustain the atmosphere in which the audience is to find itself at the beginning of the picture.

The most usual form of prologue is that by which the picture is introduced. The magnitude or proportions of such a prologue must be gauged according to the magnitude or character of the picture. A so-called special production, with massive settings, colorful backgrounds and a wide scope, requires a prologue built along appropriate lines. An example of this is to be had in the prologue to "Rosita," which was presented at the Capitol several months ago. The scene on the stage was an exact replica of one in the picture—the public square in the Spanish city of Toledo. On a raised dais, Rosita danced for the crowd. The performance of the dancer was an individual achievement in itself, and with the singing of the ensemble, the Spanish setting and brilliant color effects, we had succeeded in the short period of seven minutes in creating a stage picture of such color and appeal that it wove its spell over the spectator and carried him at once into the atmosphere of the screen picture which followed.

Another instance of the same nature was the prologue to "The Green Goddess." We had an elaborate setting—approximating the actual setting of the temple of the "Green Goddess" in the picture. The weird chanting of the Hindu priests, the ecstatic and frenzied dancing of the temple dancers, the mystic effect of the lighting—all of these carried the audience into the atmosphere of India; there was a portent of the drama that was to be enacted.

OF course this type of prologue would be entirely too heavy for a production of the drawing room type, or a simple "program" picture. For these, a single number of milder entertainment value fills the need.

There is still another type of picture which requires more delicate handling. A production of this kind was "The Unknown Purple." Here an ordinary prologue would have been entirely out of place. The motivating feature in the picture was the unknown purple light—an intangible element of mystery. The way we introduced this atmosphere was by a special orchestral prelude in which the music conveyed a sense of the supernatural and mystic. At the same time the entire stage and proscenium was bathed in a purple light, developing with the climax of the music.

Other pictures require no prologue at all. By that I mean that if the pic-

FINAL scene of "The Festival of the Arts", a ballet of symbolism created and staged at Crandall's New Tivoli Theatre, Washington, D. C., by S. Barrett McCormick for the inaugural bill at this 2500 seat temple of the arts dedicated as an exclusive presentation house.

'The World Do Move'

And So Does the Caliber of Presentations at the Artistic Crandall Theatres

THE "prologue" and the "special presentation" are becoming matters of greater and greater concern to the progressive exhibitor of motion pictures. The public more and more is demanding them. This attitude on the part of those who buy tickets at the box office is a perfectly normal development and only another manifestation of the speed with which pictures are establishing themselves as essential elements of entertainment in the amusement lives of the most discriminating audiences.

A few years ago it was our belief—upon which our policy was based—that the public attended motion picture theatres to see motion pictures. Prologues then, usually, were spotty spectacle, denatured drama or vacuous vaudeville. The special presentation had not yet been developed. It was our theory in these earlier days that the public would rather view a good picture than endure inferior, or at best mediocre, articulate stage offerings. So we bent our energies toward securing the best pictures on the market and the resultant public response seemed to corroborate our judgment.

AS the standard of pictures gradually elevated itself and the genuinely big, artistic productions became more and more frequently available, it seemed desirable from time to time to augment their appeal by introducing the screen subject with perhaps a vocal prelude in character and costume, or possibly a pantomimic prologue of very short duration. No picture has ever been prologued in a Crandall house otherwise than to add to the effectiveness of the subject's entertainment appeal and place the audience in a receptive mood for the silent scenes to follow.

By HARRY M. CRANDALL

President Crandall Theatres, Washington

For purposes of specific description, the prologue arranged by John J. Payette, assistant general manager of the Crandall Theatres, in charge of presentations at our downtown first run house, the Metropolitan, for Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle" may be cited as providing a typical example of our method. It was a fantastic picture, based on an extravagant premise and it was necessary early to get the spectator into the proper mood. This was accomplished by placing a singer in Oriental costume, such as Harry Myers affected on the screen, in the side-tab, adjoining the stage proper, from which he sang one of Woodford-Finden's "East Indian Love Lyrics," immediately following which he had the vision of the Oriental dance done in the picture. This was visualized by an imported classic dancer. The entire prologue required less than five minutes and yet served its purpose as well as a fifteen minute "act."

Again for "Oliver Twist" we utilized both side-tab and stage to acquaint the audience with the characters they were later to see on the silver sheet. This prologue was slightly longer and took the form of Dickens creating the characters for his story in his own mind before beginning the task of writing the book. The entire "Dickens Reverie," as we call it, was in pantomime, not a word being spoken.

These widely separated and individually brief experiments with public preference brought to us the growing conviction that the picture-goers taste slowly was undergoing a process of expansion. The picture alone, unless it be unusually fine, was not so apt to pack the house as the picture with a touch or two of interpretative embellishment.

To make clear to what a complete extent the Tivoli has been made a special presentation house, the dedicatory program is herewith reproduced.

Elmer Pearson Outlines Pathe's Comedy Schedule for Coming Year

ELMER PEARSON, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., in a statement issued this week from the Pathe home office outlined Pathe's production schedule for the coming season. By the terms of contracts closed with the Hal Roach and Mack Sennett producing companies during Mr. Pearson's recent trip to the West Coast, Pathe will acquire for distribution during the new season a volume of short subject comedies and feature pictures in excess of any quantity of product ever handled before by the Pathe organization. The statement leaves no doubt that Pathe will continue to maintain its leadership in the short subject field as well as advancing materially its standing in the feature department of distribution.

"In view of the ever increasing demand for the standard of short subject and feature entertainment distributed by Pathe and the ever-widening circle of our exhibitor customers, we believe that Pathe faces the biggest year in its career," declares Mr. Pearson. "We say this with the full realization that Pathe has found the current season to be a wonderfully successful one in every way. This situation we believe is an eloquent tribute by the showmen of the country to the quality of product being distributed by Pathe and to the business methods and brand of service that accompanies the sale of our pictures.

Pictures Improve

"However, nothing seems to stand still in this business—there is a constant demand for better, better, better. As a series gets going a little, the producer feels he must make his sets a little better, better stories, better players, better direction, better photography. Our branches call for better pictures, the exhibitors demand better pictures and the public tutored to expect better screen entertainment insist upon a program measuring up to their expectations. This is undoubtedly a healthy condition of affairs, but it entails greater expenditures and calls for greater reciprocity between the various elements that go to make up the industry's financial triangle of producer, distributor, and exhibitor.

"The Pathe producers are as alive to the demands of the market for this 'better and better' quality of entertainment as we are, and have completed ambitious plans to supply Pathe during the coming season with a greater and better volume of product than ever before. While in California recently we renewed contracts with the Hal Roach Studios for fifty-two two-reel comedies per year, one series of which will include a new comedy find that we sincerely believe will prove a spectacular success in this line. We will continue to release a Hal Roach single-reel comedy every week as heretofore. Roach's feature plans for Pathe are especially noteworthy. The sensational success of his 'The King of Wild Horses' has inspired him to repeat with another novelty feature some time in the future, and in addition he will deliver two or three feature-length comedies of the standard of 'The Fighting Tylers.'

Sennett Contract

"We renewed contracts with Mack Sennett that calls for four series, numbering about forty-two two-reel comedies per year. The Sennett comedies have proved very successful box-office attractions during the past year, and we are happy to be able to inform the trade that Sennett's comedies will appear more frequently than ever before on the Pathe program, present arrangements providing for about three such comedy releases each month. The Sennett schedule provides for some especially ambitious plans for Harry Langdon. The Sennett-Langdon comedies have won decided favor with the fans, and before another year rolls around you are going to see Harry Langdon standing next to Harold Lloyd in the public's esteem.

"Pathe has provided for sufficient comedy product in addition to the Hal Roach and Mack Sennett output to supply its release program with two two-reel comedies a week. This schedule of one hundred and four two-reel comedies a year, taken in conjunction with Pathe's extensive array of single-reel comedies, short subject dramas, 'Chronicles of America' series, and novelty, cartoon, and topical releases, provides ample material to meet the demands of the short subject market for diversified entertainment during the coming season."

Sol Lesser Against 'Unprincipled Publicity'

UNPRINCIPLED publicity was denounced in a stirring address made last week by Sol Lesser, before the Western Motion Picture Advertisers, the studio publicity men who originate most of the publicity copy which goes out through the newspapers and magazines all over the world.

Mr. Lesser said "More editorials against motion pictures have been written from what editorial writers have read in the papers than from what they have seen on the screen. More fanatical crusades against pictures and picture people have been stirred up by thoughtless publicity than by the actual doings of picture people or indecencies or examples of bad taste on the screen. The time has come when 'publicity at any price' must be banned, when theatre publicity men as well as studio writers must consider carefully the reaction which might be aroused in the public mind by harmful copy, which misrepresents the pictures or the people written about.

"A striking example occurred recently in an Arizona city which I visited. A small item, written in press sheet copy, which led people to think that a certain picture was risqué, stirred up the townspeople to get the production banned in that city. There was absolutely nothing in that particular production in bad taste or censorable, but the picture never was allowed a showing. All that trouble could have been avoided by careful editing of press book copy."

Hal E. Roach, also speaking before the Wampas, declared that since moving picture production is so firmly rooted in Los Angeles, the people of the industry must convince local political and governmental elements in that community of the desire of the motion picture people to make Los Angeles an ideal community in which to live. Motion picture people, he said, "are taking a greater interest and pride in their homes and their community than ever before. It is doubtful if ever more than twenty-five percent of the pictures will be made away from Los Angeles, Hollywood and Culver City. Producing companies are cooperating with each other as they never have before along mechanical lines, in the use of players and other factors. All of these forces are at work to solidify the picture production in this community and making the possibility of large numbers of companies moving away, more and more remote as the days go by."

Frank E. Woods, representing the Actors' Fund of America, accepted the Wampas check for $1,000, given for use in Los Angeles, from the proceeds of the recent Wampas ball in San Francisco. Mr. Woods made a plea for other organizations to do the same thing, and asked that motion picture people, when they contribute their services for the benefits and affairs outside the industry, insist upon the giving of the usual ten percent of the receipts for the Actors' Fund. Mr. Woods states that the Actors' Fund now spending about $25,000 per year in the west in dispensing funds to absolutely needy cases in the profession. Hal Roach declared that it is only fair that outside organizations give a part of their proceeds to the Actors' Fund. The case is similar to that of the Assistance League in Los Angeles, which numbers in its membership many local people who exact a toll from motion picture producers for the use of their homes and grounds for locations, giving the proceeds to the League's charity fund.

Fred W. Beetson, western representative of the Hays Organization and Secretary of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, was chairman of the Advertisers meeting at which Mr. and Mrs. Fred Niblo, Bryant Washburn and Wanda Hawley, who assisted in staging the Wampas Frolic, were honored guests. All were given fitting gifts as remembrances of their services to the organization. Garrett Graham, who returned from San Francisco after dispensing money from the Wampas funds to charitable organizations there, brought a report from the Bay City welcoming the Wampas and all of the motion picture fraternity to San Francisco at any time.

PATHE ENTERS BIG DEAL FOR 'GIRL SHY'

West Coast Theatres Pay Huge Sum for Chain Theatre Rights

WHAT is considered nationally as the biggest individual deal ever entered into between the producers and distributors of motion pictures and a chain of theatres was consummated recently in the offices of West Coast Theatres, Inc.

By this deal Harold Lloyd's new seven-reel comedy feature "Girl Shy," the first independent picture to be produced by the Harold Lloyd Corporation, will be shown over the entire Southern and Northern divisions of the West Coast chain, including all affiliations in the state of California.

An advance payment of $100,000, the biggest sum ever paid for the rights to show a motion picture exclusively over one chain of motion picture theatres, makes the deal of national prominence. This sum, however, does not constitute the entire revenue which the Pathe organization, as distributors of "Girl Shy" will derive from the showings. It is estimated that the accrued rentals, following first run presentation in California cities, will exceed $250,000.

By virtue of the contract Harold Lloyd transcends every competitive star or feature as a theatrical drawing card. So impressed were executives of West Coast Theatres with the production and entertainment qualities of "Girl Shy" that they unanimously voted upon the huge $100,000 advance guarantee in order to cinch the picture for every one of their theatres.

The producers and distributors were represented by William R. Fraser, general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation; William Jenner, manager of the Los Angeles Pathe exchange; W. W. Kofeldt, San Francisco Pathe exchange; L. E. Kennedy and Ben F. Simpson, managers of the Los Angeles and San Francisco exchanges of Associated Exhibitors. West Coast Theatres, Inc., were represented by Michael Gore, president; Sol Lesser, vice-president; A. L. Gore, secretary, David Bershon; executive; Harry C. Arthur, general manager; and Joe Goldberg, booking manager.

TRUART FOREIGN SALES

Two important deals have been consummated by Truart Film Corporation whereby the South American territory was entirely closed on all their available product.

Notice of Removal

During the latter part of the week, beginning April 21, the publication offices of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW will be removed to 45 West Forty-fifth Street, New York, where on the tenth floor it will be glad to greet its friends.

In its new home this journal will have increased facilities for making the Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry.

MADGE KENNEDY PLEASES

"Three Miles Out," with Madge Kennedy, has just had a run at the Alhambra, Ogden, Utah, and the manager of the theatre, the townsfolk and the newspapers were all enthusiastic about it, according to reports to Associated Exhibitors. The Ogden Standard-Examiner's reviewer said:

"All you picture lovers of realism, thrills and the kind of story that makes you grip the seat tighter, hoping that the rescuers of the pretty heroine in great peril make haste, will receive more than you bargained for by seeing Madge Kennedy in 'Three Miles Out,' the feature attraction which held the Alhambra patrons spellbound last night. Not only is it jammed, crammed and chockful of exciting adventures, but it has Miss Kennedy in the most irresistible role she has ever enacted before the camera."

PRAISE FOR 'YANKEE CONSUL'

The opening of a run of Douglas MacLean's "The Yankee Consul" at the Victory Theatre, Salt Lake City, brought this enthusiastic telegram from Manager Carl Porter to J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors:

"Congratulations on Douglas MacLean in 'The Yankee Consul.' It's a fine story and a clean comedy. Audience was in uproar all through picture. Everyone is talking about it. It opened to big business. It was impossible to take care of the crowd, despite such strong competition as 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame,' 'Girl Shy' and 'When a Man's a Man.' There is no doubt that 'The Yankee Consul' is MacLean's best picture. As a comedian Douglas MacLean ranks ace high."

EXPECT RECORD CROWD AT CONVENTION

New York Will Send 250 Delegates to M.P.T.O. Gathering

NEW YORK STATE and Greater New York will be represented by a delegation of exhibitors aggregating close to 250 at the Boston convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on May 27, 28 and 29.

Action assuring this large representation was taken by the members of the Greater New York division of the organization, following a meeting of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce in Hotel Astor, April 15.

A committee on convention arrangements was then named consisting of Samuel Sonin, chairman; Sol Raives, Sam Moross and Clarence Cohen. This committee will arrange transportation for all theatre owners going to Boston and also fix all other details of the trip.

Word has been received at National headquarters by letter and telegram indicating that there will be large delegations of Theatre Owners at Boston from Colorado, Montana, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Washington, California, Oregon and Utah as well as from states previously mentioned in pre-convention reports.

"PAINTED PEOPLE"

8. Exit March

The program musically interpreted by the conductor

BAILEY F. ALART

Choreography by Mlle. Desiree Lubovska

The complete presentation by

S. BARRET McCORMICK.

This program is not in any sense an extraordinary compilation of program units designed to catch the public fancy for the first week only to be curtailed and emasculated until the third week nothing much of the first week's glory remains. It is, on the contrary, honestly indicative of the character of bill the Tivoli will offer fifty-two weeks a year.

To insure as great a measure of success as possible for the new undertaking, S. Barret McCormick has been retained as director of presentations; Mlle. Desiree Lubovska, internationally famous interpreter of ancient, modern and futuristic arts, as director of choreography and the Tivoli Corps De Ballet; Gene' to design and execute the costumes. In other words, we are so convinced of the timeliness of the new program policy in our own territory that we have gone to great expense and devoted time, thought and effort to the perfection of an organization of artists and artisans of sufficient size to build our productions without the aid of imported help.

It may be of interest to the industry to know that 52 persons participated in the Tivoli program reproduced in this article in addition to those pictures on the screen. A ballet of 25 took part in "The Festival of the Arts," created and staged by Mr. McCormick.

Ten years ago, we would have scoffed at the idea of prologues and special presentations. Today—well, perhaps I have made our position clear.

The times move!

Arkansas M. P. T. O. Convention Greatest In Organization's History

ANOTHER brilliant Arkansas convention went into history at Little Rock on April sixth and seventh when the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas concluded the seventh semi-annual get-together with a banquet at the Hotel Marion which completely eclipsed all previous affairs of the organization.

Many talented and prominent speakers helped in making this the outstanding event of the organization's history. Most prominent of these was the eloquent Charles Hillman Brough, twice Governor of Arkansas and a leading Chautauqua figure. Dr. Brough was in magnificent form and charmed his hearers with a well chosen address on the undeveloped opportunities of the screen.

Virgil C. Pettie, another prominent Arkansan, delivered a timely talk. Several Senators and Congressmen, including the only Exhibitor-Senator in the state, Walter Rainey of McCrory, were present and made short talks.

The Arkansas convention of this year was conspicuous for the complete harmony which prevailed. A number of St. Louis, Dallas, Memphis and Little Rock exchange managers were present, as well as a host of salesmen, and all voiced their praise for the manner in which the convention was conducted.

This being a mid-year convention, there was no election of officers.

Resolutions were passed endorsing the administration of Sydney S. Cohen; thanking Will Hays for his assistance on the Admission Tax fight and urging his aid in the music tax matter; condemning the renting of film to non-theatrical institutions; and extending the good will of the Arkansas unit and its officers in ironing out the differences that have arisen

CHANGES IN WARNER WESTERN FRANCHISE HOLDERS

A slight re-alignment in the franchise holders for Warner Brothers' Classics of the Screen took place last week when a deal was consummated whereby Frank Barmettler, a prominent Denver publisher, took over the Denver office at Kwaluty Pictures, distributors of the Warner product.

The Denver office, under the new arrangement, becomes an individual exchange covering the territory consisting of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

L. T. Fidler, a well known Middle West exchange executive, has been installed as manager and by thus concentrating on this particular territory more efficient results should be obtained.

L. K. Brin who formerly operated the Denver branch of Kwaluty pictures in conjunction with his main office in Seattle, will continue to handle the Warner franchise for the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana and the new arrangement will enable Mr. Brin to devote his personal attention to these four states.

Paine has been appointed district sales manager in charge of the Middle West, acting as special representative out of the home office. Mr. Paine will supervise the Selznick forces working out of Minneapolis, Omaha, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Chicago, Indianapolis and Kansas City.

between various state units and the national body.

A. S. Hill, superintendent of public instruction in Arkansas, addressed the convention in the afternoon. He has pledged the full support of the screens of the state in his educational programme and expressed extreme pleasure at securing so valuable an ally.

The effective work of the M.P.T.O. of Arkansas prevented the imposition of a five percent admission tax by the State Legislature. This was largely accomplished through the effective work of Eli Whitney Collins, the president, and Senator Walter Rainey. Collins, Hauber and Lick were appointed delegates to the National Convention in Boston.

Colonel Harry Cole, of the M.P.T.O. of Texas and Gideon Howell, were visitors.

NO KANSAS DELEGATES TO CONVENTION

Sunflower Exhibitors Say They Are Not Interested in Convention

NO delegates to the national convention of the M. P. T. O. A. have been named by the Kansas state organization and, according to a consensus of leading exhibitors, none will be.

Since the break between the Kansas association and the national body Kansas has been devoting its interests solely to building up its own organization and co-operating with officials of other state organizations. The general attitude along Kansas City's movie row is: "We are not interested in the Boston convention or Cohen."

It is doubtful if preliminary reorganization work of the M. P. T. O. Western Missouri unit is completed in time for the naming of national delegates, leaving both Western Missouri and Kansas not represented at a national convention for the first time in several years.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Kansas body in Kansas City, April 21, plans for a membership drive will be arranged and recommendations of the ways and means committee discussed. The membership goal is 350 managers of six and seven-day a week houses. According to C. E. Cook, business manager, the association now is in better financial condition than ever before in the history of the organization.

BRISBANE'S EDITORIALS WILL APPEAR ON SCREEN

Arthur Brisbane, whose editorials in the Hearst newspapers are known to millions of readers, is now interested in the production of motion pictures. The highlights of Brisbane's "Today" editorials will be put on the screen by Robert Thornby, well known director, and Arthur Shaughnessy. The text will be accompanied by plastic illustrations to add force to the cryptic saying of the famous writer.

Efforts have been made for some time to interest Mr. Brisbane in motion pictures for it was felt that his support back of the motion picture industry will add extra dignity and strength. When it is known that he reaches millions of readers daily the power of his pen can be understood.

Release will be made weekly by the new company and later it is likely there will be two releases each week. Preparations are being made for a showing of the first film.

'LINCOLN' TO BE DISTRIBUTED BY FIRST NATIONAL

"Abraham Lincoln," the picture which has been the sensation of the trade for several months, is announced as a First National picture. Speculation as to its distribution channel was set at rest on April 11, when the contract was signed between Al and Ray Rockett, the producers, and Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The production has been hailed as an artistic and dramatic sensation by the entire trade and daily press and is generally conceded to be one of the most important pictures ever brought to the screen.

First National's decision to distribute "Abraham Lincoln" is in keeping with its policy to handle productions of only the highest grade, according to Richard Rowland, production manager, who said that the release date has not as yet been determined. The picture will be backed by an expensive exploitation campaign in all parts of the country.

M. P. T. O. A. OFFICERS SEE PRESIDENT COOLIDGE

Sydney Cohen Extends Invitation to Attend Boston Convention

EVERY ounce of official energy in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is now being excited in a definite and decisive way to make the big national convention of the organization in Boston, May 27, 28 and 29, the crowning event in motion picture history.

To consummate this high purpose, national president Sydney S. Cohen and members of the national convention committee called on President Calvin Coolidge at the White House in Washington, April 10, and extended to him a formal invitation to attend the Boston convention.

President Coolidge received the members of the committee in a very cordial way and was introduced to each one by Congressman Homer P. Snyder, of Little Falls, N. Y., a firm friend of the theatre owners and one of the President's official intimates.

The scene was one long to be remembered as the official head of the greatest nation in the world met with the representatives of one of the most potent publicity and demonstration mediums known—the motion picture screen.

Mr. Cohen thanked the President for the courtesy extended to the theatre owners, the favor shown them in a definite way before and since he assumed the chief magistracy of the nation.

The President was favorably impressed with the situation. He expressed his gratification over the advances made by the motion picture business, said he was aware of the screen service being so freely and patriotically tendered to the government by the theatre owners and hoped that this would be extended as far as practicable so that every form of official effort would experience the advantage of its progressive influence.

Speaking specifically in the matter the President said: "Mr. Cohen and gentlemen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, I thank you for the courtesy of this invitation to attend your convention in Boston. I wish I could assure you now that I would be able to attend. I know you will find much to interest you there and prove of advantage to you in many ways. I will give this matter consideration with reference to my engagements and will be pleased to advise you soon of my decision. The motion picture is a real necessity now in American life. It is one of the greatest service mediums in the world and you are doing great work for the American people. Your very generous offer to the government of the use of your theatre screens to advance constructive public programs is indeed very much appreciated and you have done much along these lines."

After the meeting with the committee in the White House offices the President and theatre owners were filmed on the White House grounds by the different screen weeklies during which time President Cohen rededicated the screens of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to the service of government and people.

ture itself suggests no outstanding atmosphere, it is far better not to attempt any by forcing a prologue. In that case, the other units of the program can help to share the entertainment value. On such programs we have had elaborate presentations of a ten to fifteen minute duration. The light operate and comic operas—such as "The Fortune Teller," offer a wealth of material to choose from, with a result that is wholly satisfying and entertaining.

It is not necessary, however, to rely on presentations of such an elaborate nature. An orchestral or a dance interlude, followed by one of the excellent short subjects which are now available can be made to round out a splendid program.

I have said there are no general rules which I can lay down. We move on from year to year and I find we are strong to do better things and actually doing better work. Two things, however, are essential contributions on the part of the exhibitor. They are thought and imagination. Audiences have come to expect better things. And they expect the program which is offered them to be carefully thought out in every particular—not haphazardly thrown together in whatever way circumstance will permit. Perhaps the audience will not know just why they are not satisfied, but they will know they have not been treated in good faith. Imagination is one of the most important factors in the success of a program. Excite the imagination of your audience—by suggestion, a snatch of melody, a flash of a picture—and you have given them what they have come to seek—rest, relaxation and entertainment.

INDEPENDENTS' DAY HERE SAYS ARTHUR KANE

Producers Can Devote Their Attention to Better Productions

WEIGHING less than when he went to the Pacific coast, five months ago, and glad of it, Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, returned to New York last week. Besides passing several months in Los Angeles, Mr. Kane paid brief visits to Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha and other cities in the Middle West and he is chockful of enthusiasm over the business situation as he found it everywhere.

"Theatres both on the Pacific coast and in the Middle West are having a very good season indeed," said Mr. Kane. "Production in all studios in Los Angeles has been put on a much firmer foundation in the last six months than during the previous year. Profiting by the experiences which practically all the producers had with the high cost of pictures for this season's market, they are now controlling expenditures much better and have been for the last few months.

"This makes very certainly for stability in the whole industry. It does not mean a cessation or even a lapse in fine product for the market, but rather, for less of a burden upon the distributive and exhibition ends of the business, and with logically improving results to exhibitors themselves.

"The position of the independent producer is distinctly favorable," Mr. Kane continued. "He is making most of the outstanding hits that are being registered today. The cause of this is not hard to find. In controlling only a few productions each season, and as a rule working on only one picture at a time, the producer, is able to devote intensive, individual attention to each and every particular attraction. The result is that the aid and assistance which he gives even to skilled directors and actors, when he is a showman and knows the business of showmanship, counts heavily in the finished product.

"The day of the skilled producer who centralizes his time on one picture is rapidly approaching, if not already here. No matter how competent stars and actors may be, most of them need the show sense of a practised producer to guide, restrain or enlarge upon their conceptions, as the case may be.

"Such picture makers as Douglas MacLean, who is a producer thoroughly understanding the business of production, as well as a fine actor; Harry Rapp, J. K. McDonald and others who might be named, show in their product the marked advantage of concentrated individual application of the particular attraction in hand, and with only one picture at a time to think, scheme and plan for."

'FLOODGATES' IS BOOKED IN MANY KEY CITIES

Lowell Film Production, Inc., announce the closing of what is said to be one of the largest and most important booking contracts ever negotiated in the Independent field for their production "Floodgates." This contract calls for indefinite runs in six of the important key cities and according to John L. Ruppsell, President of Lowell Productions, demonstrates that the Independent market is in a healthy state and can support good independent productions which come up to the standard set by the first run houses.

The contracts, which were negotiated by J. Charles Davis, 2d, for Lowell Productions call for early runs in the Randolph Theatre, Chicago; Kinema Theatre, Salt Lake City; Rivoli Theatre, St. Louis; Olympic Theatre, Buffalo; Cameo Theatre, Pittsburgh, and Cameo, San Francisco.

As already announced contracts were closed for showings in Aschers Merrill, Milwaukee, and the Strand Theatre, Louisville and the Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, Ky. All of these contracts bear early dates and the bulk of them will open in the first week in May.

WALKER REPEAL BILL KILLED 67 TO 64

Many Motion Picture Bills Defeated During Legislative Session

Albany, N. Y.—Of the eight or nine motion picture bills of various sorts and descriptions ranging all the way from those calling for the repeal of the present censorship law, to those relating to miniature motion picture machines, just one bill managed to survive and is now in the hands of Governor Alfred E. Smith for consideration during the usual thirty-day period that follows each session of the legislature.

This bill, which is a Murphy measure, is included in the 700 or more bills which were passed by the Legislature during its final hours. The bill seeks to amend the general business law of the state in so far as it relates to the manufacture and use of film of a nitro-cellulose base, and removing present restrictions on its manufacture and use.

The censorship repeal bills were defeated in one, two, three order, on April 14 and 15.

In the Senate, the Walker repeal bill was passed by a vote of 26 to 24, and then sent over to the Assembly, where it was defeated at 5 o'clock the next morning by a vote of 67 to 64, three Republicans voting for the bill and two Democrats against it.

The four bills relating to the admission of unaccompanied children to the motion picture theatres were also defeated. All in all, it was not a successful session in so far as motion picture measures were concerned.

THEATRE OWNERS OBJECT TO SCHOOL OPPOSITION

Kansas Exhibitors Claim School Showings Hurt Business

TWO meetings between representatives of the Kansas City Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association and a committee of the Parent-Teacher Association, concerning the showing of pictures in public schools, have brought no definite agreement.

Many of the schools are equipped with projection machines and have been giving regular Friday night performances and, having no taxation, have been proving a nuisance to exhibitors in neighborhood districts.

Headed by A. M. Eisner, president, members of the Kansas City exhibitor organization appeared Monday before the board of education and requested that Friday night performances be limited to three a year. D. M. Pinkerton, president of the school board, did not favor the plan, saying the schools were equipped with projection machines which, if not used, would be worthless. Mr. Eisner pointed out that Parent-Teacher associations in the various schools could better co-operate with his association in planning benefit showings of pictures at neighborhood theatres.

A meeting of the exhibitors then was held with a Parent-Teacher committee but no agreement was reached, despite the fact that several members of the Parent-Teacher body asserted they could plainly see the viewpoint of the exhibitors. Because of studies, Friday night is the only possible night for shows at the schools. It also is the big business night for suburban theatres, but school performances have been "cutting in" on the attendance. Another meeting probably will be held soon.

ARTISTIC PRESENTATION

For artistic design and effect the presentation of Famous Players "The Ten Commandments" at the Cohan Theatre, on Broadway, ranks near the top. The cast and billing are stencilled on the pillars with strong illumination behind instead of projected. The presentation is both novel and beautiful.

THEATRE OWNERS FORM ALLIED BODY

Insurgents Will Work Independent of National Organization

A MEETING of the theatre owners special committee, which was formed recently at French Lick, Ind., was called by Chairman W. A. Steffes at the Congress Hotel in Chicago on April 8 and 9. The meeting resulted in a decision on the part of state presidents present to recommend to their respective organizations the formation of the "Allied State Organizations."

The jurisdiction represented were Minnesota, Michigan, Kansas, Indiana, Texas, Illinois, North Carolina, Virginia, District of Columbia and North and South Dakota.

The organization is to be an association of states. The state presidents will select a chairman at each meeting, which will be held every sixty days. W. A. Steffes was selected first chairman and H. M. Richey secretary. The next meeting will be held in Morehead City, North Carolina, on June 11.

The organization sent S. A. Handy, of Kansas, to Washington to represent it on the copyright amendment.

Will H. Hays has been requested to call a conference on the uniform contract and a resolution of thanks was voted for his assistance in putting forth his efforts in the admission tax campaign.

Those present at the meeting were H. A. Cole, of Texas; W. A. Steffes of Minnesota, North and South Dakota; J. R. Deniston, J. C. Ritter and H. M. Richey, of Michigan; R. R. Beichele and S. A. Handy, of Kansas; Frank Rembusch and William Connors, of Indiana; Glen Reynolds and Ludwig Seigel, of Illinois.

The new organization will operate independent of the M.P.T.O.A., as the organizers feel that the method of frequent meetings between presidents of state motion picture theatre owners associations can accomplish more and keep in closer touch with the theatre owners' needs than can a national organization operating as an independent unit.

The formation of the Allied State Organizations, coming as it does just prior to the annual convention of the M.P.T.O.A., presents possibilities for some interesting results.

WARNER SALES CHIEF ENDS LONG TRIP

Sees Marked Improvement in Picture Prospects for 1924

SAM E. MORRIS, general sales manager for Warner Brothers, returned last week to the home office after a quick trip which however, covered the entire country from coast to coast in the north and middle West sections.

Mr. Morris's trip was made primarily to take up immediate releasing plans for the latest and greatest production from the Warner studios, "Beau Brummel," and his task was not so much the problem of securing first runs as deciding which first run house to select in each territory.

This visit out into the "territory" afforded Mr. Morris a good opportunity to renew old acquaintances among exhibitors and also to pick up some first-hand information on general business conditions and particularly the manner in which the product of the Warner organization was being received and handled.

"I found," said Mr. Morris, "many direct indications as to the trend of the exhibitor and public in what was most desired in screen entertainment, obtained some invaluable constructive criticism, and noted a general spirit of optimism for the future. With all due modesty I can confidentially state that never before have I known of a product which has so consistently met with the approval of every type of exhibitor, from the owners of the biggest circuits down to the man in the little cross-roads village, as the eighteen Warner Brothers' Classics of the Screen.

An important straw in showing which way the wind blows was the unanimous opinion, especially in the smaller communities, that too much emphasis on the sex angle of any production is detrimental."

Splendid reports from the Hollywood studios of uninterrupted production and the purchase of world rights to new stories is the message of inspiration which Mr. Rock will deliver to his sales forces.

'SCARAMOUCHE' PROLOGUE

This striking prologue was arranged by the management of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, North Carolina, for the engagement of Metro's "Scaramouche." An actor, dressed in the period of the French Revolution sang French songs and gave a brief outline of the French history of the time action of picture takes place.

Old Lady Astor Says

LLOYD INGRAHAM has been engaged by Metro to direct Viola Dana in "The Beauty Prize." The story is described as fast moving and of a type that Mr. Ingraham has directed with unvarying success. As to the latter part of the statement we are in full sympathy. We believe it absolutely from our knowledge of him and our acquaintance with him. We would disbelieve anything that is suggested to the contrary. Mr. Ingraham is of the real human sort, most companionable and with a wide understanding of the ways of the world.

HARRY CHARNAS of Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Detroit and the Ohio territory generally, dropped into New York for a week-end April 12. If anyone has an idea the Independents are down in the mouth they should converse with this exchangeman. He radiates optimism. It is not difficult to understand why he succeeds.

WORD comes from the Ufa-Decla Company in Berlin that Emil Jannings will not come to the United States. He has closed a contract with Ufa for a series of pictures, preparations for the making of which are now under way. The appearance of Mr. Jannings in an American picture would have been something to look forward to. Nevertheless it is a matter for congratulation all around that he is to play in pictures regardless of where they are made. He is an actor of unusual personality and has created a place for himself which is unique.

JOHN LOWELL RUSSELL, the star and producer of "Lost in a Big City," went over to Reading, Pa., last week to sit in on the opening of his picture in the Carr & Schad Theatre, The Arcadia. Mr. Lowell also made a personal appearance at the Alhambra in Reading, taking along Baby Ivy Ward. The attendance, which was heavy the first night, increased on the second and third with the result of a hundred-foot line-up in the rain.

J. E. STOREY, general sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is off on a tour of the middle west. He is taking along his field glasses and will make a careful examination of conditions. Also he will visit many theatre owners. The expansion of Pathe business has made necessary the securing of larger quarters for various branch offices. One of Mr. Storey's tasks will be establishing these new exchange quarters.

ARTHUR S. KANE, president of Associated Exhibitors, is back in New York after an absence of several months in Los Angeles. In fact he remained away so long that we were beginning to think we had lost him. This son of Kansas is too good a New Yorker and citizen generally to be spared to the west coast. That particular spot in the map already has taken from this side of the country quite a sufficient number of regular fellows. Mr. Kane reports that producers in Los Angeles are now controlling expenditures and profiting by past experiences with high costs. He reports that this action makes for stability and he is right.

ELMER PEARSON, the v. p. and g. m. of Pathe, is back from a flying visit to the coast, bringing with him a contract for fifty-two two-reel comedies a year with Hal Roach and at the Mack Sennett shop the Pathe chief signed for four series of two-reelers totaling forty-two for the year. Mr. Pearson is strong for Harry Langdon, the new comedian. There's a lot of others of the same mind.

DAVID WARFIELD, who as yet has held aloof from the screen, was a recent visitor in Hollywood, where he was the guest of honor at a special presentation of Jackie Coogan's Metro picture, "A Boy of Flanders." It was in an imitation of Warfield that the boy Coogan attracted the attention of Charles Chaplin. He then was forming in his own mind the story of "The Kid." You know the rest.

THOMAS MEIGHAN, accompanied by Booth Tarkington, Victor Heerman and Paul Sloane, have been spending a few days at Sing Sing. Somewhat unnecessarily we have been assured that the call was of a purely social character. In the same breath we are told that the visit was in connection with the filming of Tarkington's story, "Whispering Men," which is a screen original. The purpose of the visit was the absorption of atmosphere. Sing Sing is said to be one of those places where a little of that goes a long way.

SYD. WALKER, known as "Old Bill" in moving picture circles, stopped off in Canada, April 8, on his way to the United States. It is said Mr. Walker will take up work in this country. He was accompanied by Jack Harding, the well known stunt man of the English picture industry. The former first came to the attention of American picturegoers as "Old Bill," a character created by Bruce Bairnsfather.

ED A. SCHILLER, general representative of Loews' Inc., is now a father-in-law. His daughter, Elizabeth Mae, was married April 14, at the Biltmore to J. Byron Akins of Atlanta. Following a honeymoon at Atlantic City the couple will go to Atlanta, where they will make their home.

HARRY REICHENBACH is back from abroad. He has had a most pleasant trip visiting many of the European countries and crossing the Mediterranean into Africa. He missed the T. N. T. dinner, but says there are a number of things he saw which must have been fully as funny.

LOUIS V. BROCK, well known in the export division of the industry and now connected with the foreign department of Associated First National Pictures, will be married in June to Helen V. Starr of 370 Riverside Drive, New York.

PLAYING with Colleen Moore in "The Perfect Flapper," which is now being photographed at the First National Studios under John Francis Dillon, will be her brother, Cleve. It is the youngster's first appearance before the camera.

WILLIAM A. ("BILL") JOHNSTON, sitting in at a recent trade luncheon, responded to a suggestion that the industry was one of shifting bedfellows by passing on one that had come to him: "Publicity makes strange bedfellows and strange bedfellows make publicity." Tom Hanley butted in to inquire if we had heard it said there must be a good showman over at the Broadway, where "The Galloping Fish" was playing Holy Week.

Screen and Monopoly

WHEN Adolph Zukor said on Tuesday that the motion picture business is too big for any individual or group to monopolize it he touched a subject that for several weeks has been more or less in the minds of exhibitors and producers alike.

The president of Paramount has sensed the feeling the same as have other men in the industry, and possibly felt that his name was not entirely unconnected with an impression which if more or less intangible nevertheless was present.

Mr. Zukor was a showman before he was a producer. He realized that if he would address the industry as a whole no better stage could be set than one which contained "among those present" representatives of the motion picture business press.

While Mr. Zukor spoke extemporaneously nevertheless his remarks indicated that the whole subject had been much in his mind and that he had given it careful consideration.

It was only last week one of the prominent independent distributors declared the situation confronting the industry was really serious because of the first run embarrassment, due to the fact that "three companies now practically control the trade."

"Give me the first runs and I will snap my fingers at the others," declared this film man. "Three companies now control so many theatres in so many cities that other companies can get a booking only when one of the others has a picture so rotten that while it will be paid for it will be put on the shelf and an outside production will be used but will not be paid for, regardless of how good it may be."

Another independent distributor, discussing the coming amalgamation or merger of Metro and Goldwyn, took an exactly opposite position from his competitor. His viewpoint was that with a narrowing circle of distributors the exhibitor would give an increasing "break" to the independents as an offset to any tendency to centralize.

Mr. Zukor in his address did not indicate any particular department of motion picture activity in which by reason of the dominance of gray matter it would be impossible for a monopoly to be created—his language showed that he was thinking of all of them.

With the distributor who said if given the first runs he would snap his fingers at all the others there will be many who will take strong issue. There are those who will say if given the others they will sign over to any one the first runs.

Whether or not Mr. Zukor's remarks tend to allay any concern that may prevail in the trade nevertheless it is assuring to many to be told that in the picture business "gray matter is the big thing."

School and Theatre

THE controversy between the Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the Parent Teachers Association of Kansas City again brings into the limelight a condition which long has been a source of irritation to exhibitors in many places.

The obstacle to an agreement between the two bodies in Kansas City following two conferences is that Friday night is the time most available for pupils to attend the theatres. Also it is the night or one of the nights when business is good.

A. M. Eisner, head of the theatre owners of the city, has urged upon the Parent-Teachers body that much may be gained through co-operation in planning benefit showings of pictures at neighborhood houses.

In some sections success has followed the plan of inviting the local body interested in what we may describe as "non-theatrical" entertainment to assist in the selection of a program for one night a week at the local theatre.

The idea is worth a sincere trial. It well may follow that once the "outsiders" get accustomed to a theatre, even once a week, the practice may become permanent and new patrons will result.

British Pictures

IN his talk to his fellow-diners Tuesday, Hugh D. McIntosh of Australia uncovered in his interesting way one of the dominating reasons for the concern with which Britishers everywhere view the dominance of American pictures.

American films, Mr. McIntosh declared, make of the Englishman an object of derision, with the result that races other than white under the rule of Britain look upon their governing nation as one to be belittled.

For the extending of motion picture studios under the control of Englishmen there could be no stronger incentive than this. The complaint of Mr. McIntosh should be given careful attention by American producers. We believe the situation to be overstated by him, as could be demonstrated by allusion to definite titles and characters, but there is a distinct basis for it.

At the same time it may not be forgotten that Americans have been justly and unjustly lampooned and harpooned by Britishers, before the days of the beloved Charles Dickens—who wielded something of an "axe" himself—as well as after.

The Exhibitors' Round Table

A Small Man in a Big Way

The old slogan, "Know your patrons," has been more than casually observed by W. Paul Bowlin, manager of the Missouri Theatre, Mountain Grove, Mo. Few small motion picture houses in towns of 2,000 inhabitants can boast of a fifteen-piece orchestra. Yet, that is exactly what the patrons of Mountain Grove are enjoying. Little more than a year ago Mr. Bowlin became manager of the theatre and it did not take him long to discover that his patrons liked music. Hence, an orchestra of eight pieces was increased to fifteen, including a piano, two cornets, three saxophones, a base horn, two alto horns, a marimbaphone, three violins, a cello, drums, and bells.

But, wisely enough, Mr. Bowlin did not take money from his pictures and transfer it to the orchestra, much as his patrons desired good music. Which boils down to the question; "How does he do it?" The musicians, although capable enough, are not an expensive lot. Unnecessary overhead expenses have been eliminated and enough additional patronage is attracted by the orchestra to make the theatre a paying proposition. That is the answer.

THE FRUITS OF A LIVELY SHOWMAN'S EFFORTS

This attractive and unusual prologue for "The Darling of New York" was conceived and executed by George V. Holloway manager of the Hamilton Theatre, one of the Keith chain of theatres in New York.

Educational Merits a Scoop

What looks very much like a scoop for the Educational Film exchange, was the record hung up last week by Manager J. A. Gage, of having an Educational subject in every theatre in Seattle where motion pictures are shown, with but one exception. There's no drive on, either! This is a strong argument in favor of the short subjects, being so widely discussed today. Gage is a real hustler. Through his own efforts he secured a full page, with photographs and interesting text, in the magazine section of the leading Sunday paper, on the first of the "Secrets of Life" series, which he tied up with the advertising of the Strand Theatre, where the subject was being played, in a 15-inch one column block letter ad, directing the readers' attention to the article in the other section of the paper.

The Big Little Feature

CONSIDER THE SHORTS

DO you, Mr. Exhibitor, choose your program with care or do you resort to the catch-as-catch-can method? Do you try to arrange your program with an eye to perfect balance or do you trust to luck that your feature and short subjects will blend? It will pay you to consider your short subjects and give them the consideration they deserve.

A few years ago there was little to choose in the short subject field. There was the slap-stick comedy and the blood curdling serial but times have changed and the short subject now offers a variety of entertainment that is worthy of your study.

For instance, if you have a heavy melodramatic feature you can break the strain with a polite comedy. If you are showing a comedy feature, such as "The Yankee Consul," "Safety Last" or "His Darker Self," a short subject drama or educational short should be shown to give balance. With a tragic picture as "Beau Brummel," a fast moving comedy can be used to good advantage. The newsreel, of course, is never out of place in any program.

There is not an exhibitor who has not, at one time or another, seen a sickly feature saved by a strong, red blooded short subject. The short picture is not to be treated as a poor relation. It is a full fledged member of the family and is entitled to be treated as such. Many times it will save anaemic members of the family and keep father from bankruptcy through too many funerals.

If a short subject is good enough to show your patrons, it is good enough to be given your consideration. It is no longer a filler. It is entertainment just as much as is your feature. Don't neglect it because it is short. Napoleon wasn't much for size!

'REALM OF SPORT'

1 reel

This picture is a Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge and contains a little of everything. It shows water in various flowing forms from the garden hose to Niagara Falls. The study is interesting.

The marines come in for their share by showing them at drill and signal practice with the heliograph instruments.

In the realm of Sportville is shown pushball, skiing, aquaplaning and boxing.

There is nothing to make this subject stand out prominently. It is quite ordinary and should be used with short comedy to fill out a program. It will not stand alone.

A WONDER HORSE

In Pathe's "King of Wild Horses," this intelligent animal takes the leading part. He jumps a wide chasm and swims the rapids. He defies capture.

'GREEN GROCERS'

1 reel

Slim Summerville and Bobby Dunn furnish the amusement in this one reel comedy. The action takes place in a grocery store and although there is no plot, there is plenty of action and several new stunts are injected which add life to the picture.

The picture deals with the trials and tribulations of grocery clerks in a small town. The delivery of a sack of flour to the home of a beautiful damsel furnishes the theme, and a wild auto ride is the climax.

'GOING EAST'

2 reels

This is one of Lloyd Hamilton's best short comedies and that is saying something. It shows as much care in preparation and directing as the average feature. A sleeping car is the scene of the greatest action and many of the stunts are side-splitting.

Lloyd decides to leave home and travel east. As he is about to get into his berth, a woman in the next berth asks him to permit several of her children to sleep with him. Five youngsters crawl into the berth and start eating crackers. Lloyd's expressions during the party are good. At last the children go to sleep and a detective boards the train with two convicts on their way to Sing-Sing. Lloyd is deputized to help guard them and more action ensues. Finally he finds a skunk along the track and brings it into the car, under the impression that it is a silver fox. The trainmen cut his car from the train and leave him on a siding in sole possession of the sleeper.

'OUT BOUND'

There is no lost motion in this picture. Sid Smith and Cliff Bowes keep the action running from the first click to the last. The action is started by Smith who becomes a truck driver. He backs the truck against a house and timbers projecting from the truck enter a window and pick up a bed upon which Bowes is sleeping. The truck backs to the edge of a high cliff and leaves the bed suspended in a perilous manner.

Most of the action centers around the cliff scene and the comedy is fast moving and funny. The truck is a self dumping type and faulty mechanism raises and lowers the bed over the cliff. Smith and Bowes are finally dumped over the bluff and land in a water hole.

This is one of the "Secrets of Life" series of microscopic pictures by Louis Tolhurst. "The Lady Bird," which is not a bird, but an armoured insect that devours orchard pests, is the subject of this chapter. Mr. Tolhurst puts his microscope into play and reveals the habits of this strange insect.

The Lady Bird feeds upon scale in orchards and it is through the untiring work of this insect that scale has been kept under control. The Lady Bird, in the caterpillar stage, consumes 40 orchard pests each hour and the microscope shows the caterpillar at work.

The winter quarters of the Lady Bird are shown. They hide beneath twigs in a canyon in the mountains and freeze solid during the cold weather and come to life with the first rays of the summer sun.

The "Secrets of Life" series are proving very popular and this latest of the series is among the best.

'PRETTY PLUNGERS'

2 reels

If your patrons are partial to bathing beauty comedies this one will please. There is hardly a scene in which there is not a girl in a bathing suit. The scenes in the swimming tank are excellent, not only in regards to feminine beauty, but by the use of slow moving pictures which show high divers and stunt swimmers in action. The camera catches the action with wonderful clearness and will prove instructive to swimmers and divers.

This is one of the few pictures of bathing beauties wherein the beauties actually get wet. The cast is made up of aquatic experts and their tricks are a revelation.

This comedy is far above the average and shows time and care in the preparation. Many novel stunts are introduced and it really hits high water mark.

You will make no mistake in booking this one.

'GET BUSY'

1 reel

"Snub" Pollard has discovered a new way to make money. He, with his friend, are members of the army of unemployed. They land in a small town and are given a half hour to find work or they will make little stones out of big ones at the city jail. "Snub" becomes a life guard and his friend creates business by pushing innocent bystanders off the pier and "Snub" saves them.

It is not a bed of roses for the fun-makers, however, as much of their time is wasted in pulling non-paying victims from the briney deep. After an exceptional rescue in which they receive no credit, they end their careers by jumping into the ocean.

"Snub" Pollard is funny in this one. There are many original angles to the picture and clever titles help put it over. It is a good comedy for any program.

'FLICKERING YOUTH'

2 reels

Harry Langdon, Sennett's comedian, never had a better vehicle than "Flickering Youth." It is one of the funniest short pictures in months. There is a well defined plot and plenty of action.

Harry is engaged to a sweet young thing and buys a ring for her. Before going to her home to present the ring he stops in a barber shop where he shows the ring to a rough female barber. He permits the barberess to try the ring on her finger and she then claims him as her own. A party is held at Harry's home to celebrate the occasion and all the lady's barber friends attend. It ends in a rough house and a ride in the patrol.

Harry is arrested for breach of promise and in court the disappointed barberess relates some fanciful scenes which she claims were enacted. They show Harry as a city slicker who deserts the poor young farm girl. However, it ends happily and Harry marries his sweetie.

This picture is exceptionally good. The titles are funny and the situations are excellent. Your patrons will like this one.

'ALICE'S WILD WEST SHOW'

This is a new combination cartoon and live character feature arranged by Walt Dinsey and is a very clever arrangement for producing unusual situations. The character, a little girl, fits into the cartoon surroundings and acts with cartoon characters. There is very good proportion and great possibilities.

"Alice's Wild West Show" opens with a scene wherein all the characters are real and switches to Alice's adventures in the West, where the cartoon background and characters are introduced. It shows the child chased by pen and ink Indians and the many narrow escapes before she finally makes her escape.

In "Alice's Day at Sea" This portrays water scenes in which the youngster mingles with the denizens of the deep, and the whole arrangement seems very real.

'Highbrow Stuff'

2 reels

If you don't laugh at Will Rogers in this one there is something wrong. In "Highbrow Stuff" he certainly scores big. This picture is one of the satirical series being made on actors of renown. In this he takes the part of an English actor who has been playing Russian stuff in a highbrow theatre. His work as a Russian is good but when he signs up to play in the movies he reaches the heights.

His acting before the camera is so bad the director attempts to make the scenes rough enough to cause him to break his contract but he resigns himself to everything and finally wins out.

The picture opens with a Russian family scene in which cubists have been at work. The tables and chairs all have peculiar angles and the walls are done in crazy fashion. Rogers creates a laugh the minute he appears, dressed as a Russian peasant, with a flowing beard.

In the studio scenes he is a scream. He goes through his scenes in a mechanical manner which arouses the wrath of the director. A few huskies are brought into play to beat up Rogers but he handles the situation nicely.

The picture ends in a wild horseback ride through the studio in which Rogers clings frantically to the horse until dismounted in a pool of mud.

Everyone will like this picture. It is safe booking for any theatre.

This is an average single reel funster. There is nothing in the picture to make it stand out. The usual slap-stick is used to insert action, yet there are some good laughs when Earl Mohan gets into action.

The picture deals with a prize fight in which Mohan's manager offers $100 to anyone who can last two rounds with the demon. There are plenty of ambitious mitt artists willing to swap punches. Mohan's manager uses the old mallet soaking stunt to good advantage and it is good for a few laughs.

There is nothing original in the picture. It is rough and tumble from start to finish but it will make a good program filler.

John Reeves, steel magnate, wagers with his son Chester that he can earn twenty dollars a week and live on it. He procures work in the office of William Hart's steel plant. Against her brother's wish Hart's sister adopts a little boy. Hart evens up by adopting John Reeves as his father. Reeves foils James Pattison's plot to ruin Hart. Chester also makes good as a workman and wins Hart's sister. The father reveals his identity and takes Hart as a partner.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A NOTABLE example of what brilliant results can be achieved with a plot of light construction, when skilled direction and clever acting are combined in equal proportions! For here is a simple story turned into comedy-drama of A1 quality, fit for the screen of any theatre, big or little, and warranted to run up a winning box office score.

In his last film vehicle, "The Green Goddess," George Arliss made an undeniable artistic hit. But one may confidently predict that "Twenty Dollars a Week" will enjoy greater popularity than its predecessor because of its simplicity, its freedom from alien atmosphere, its delicious humor and that crowning touch of human interest which appeals so eloquently to a majority of motion picture patrons.

As might be expected when two such distinguished artists as George Arliss and Taylor Holmes join forces, there is an abundance of really delightful character sketching in evidence and an air of everyday-realism pervading the whole production which convinces while it charms. Common sense tells you that it would be a most unlikely thing for a wealthy magnate of established reputation and discreet age to indulge in such a freak as John Reeves is represented as doing. But it seems quite all right on the screen, thanks to the fine art of the players and the able manner in which Director Harmon Wright handles his subject.

The problem of living on a small salary is one of surpassing interest to the average man or woman and it follows that the film's title will draw like the proverbial sticking plaster. Old man John Reeves solves it to his own satisfaction on a weekly stipend of twenty iron men and incidentally discovers a plot to ruin his easy-going employer, brings his financial knowledge and worldly wisdom to bear on the situation, saves the day for William Hart and incidentally works matters into a most exciting climax.

There's a lot of fun injected into the march of events by the frolicsome antics of the energetic kid, Arthur, which drive the impressionable William Hart nigh to the verge of nervous prostration, and Taylor Holmes' interpretation of the latter character stands out as the very acme of natural, side-splitting comedy. As to George Arliss' work, all that is necessary to say is that it registers as a genuine Arliss treat, 100 per cent amusing and rich in those subtle bits of side-play which are so artistically effective and impossible of imitation by the average actor.

Edith Roberts wears a number of exquisite gowns which are sure to arouse the envious admiration of the women folks and registers as a very sweet and fascinating heroine. Little Joseph Donohue, a most promising juvenile, does extremely well as the boy Arthur. The support has been carefully selected and is in every way worthy of the principals.

You will make no mistake in booking this feature and exploiting it as a comedy-drama of unusual merit. Play up George Arliss and Taylor Holmes, two names to conjure with in the amusement world. Also make it plain that "Twenty Dollars a Week" differs altogether from any other picture in which Mr. Arliss has appeared and offers a new and delightful contrast to his other film roles. The title ought to draw, especially if you start a newspaper discussion as to whether it is possible to exist on such a slender sum per week as twenty dollars.

Shirley Dangerfield	Barbara Bedford
Billy Dangerfield	Raymond McKee
Frank Langley	Sam De Grasse
Dreka Langley	Rosemary Theby
Dr. Trask	Tully Marshall

When her husband commits suicide Dreka Langley leaves her new-born baby with a family in China and falls in love with John Dangerfield, a married man. The two live in the Chinese underworld and Mrs. Dangerfield obtains a divorce. Years later, Dangerfield reforms and adopts Billy, the boy deserted by Dreka. Billy is sent to an American college, meets and loves Dangerfield's daughter. His supposed half-caste nationality is a bar to their marriage, which is removed when Dreka, before dying, identifies Billy as her son. Dangerfield wins back his wife and all ends well.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE is a wealth of barbaric coloring in this picture, which more than lives up to its title in depicting a riot of unleashed human passions swirling against Oriental backgrounds, is intensely melodramatic, well directed and presented by an exceedingly capable cast.

Its box office value depends on the exhibitor's knowledge of what his patrons want. Showmen catering principally to the family trade may possibly find it a trifle too strong for their patrons' taste, yet there certainly exists a demand for just such sensational productions in some localities, where it is pretty sure to reap a luscious financial harvest.

The theme isn't a particularly agreeable one and a morbid note is sounded at the very beginning of things, when Dreka's husband commits suicide, the echo of which continues through the entire six reels, until banished by a snappy climax. But there's no denying the strength of the emotional episodes, nor the artfully maintained suspense and these things go far in gripping and holding an audience's attention, although the moralist would be rather puzzled to dope out any shade of an instructive lesson from the story, unless it be that long continued residence amid Asiatic surroundings doesn't tend to improve white folks to any noticeable extent.

Among the big scenes are those in which Dreka stabs her lover and sets fire to the squalid dive in which they are living. Billy Dangerfield's horror when he is led to believe that he is a Chinaman and unworthy of the girl he loves, his rescue of his mother from a watery grave and the furious combat between the lad and the Chinese thugs during which Dreka is slain. All of these incidents are well filmed, skillfully staged and lead up to a finish in which the sun shines at last and the shadows are scattered for good.

The settings include many excellent Chinese interiors, that of the monastery where John Dangerfield seeks temporary seclusion from his stormy past, being especially effective. There are many fine exteriors, with bits of native life shown in neat long shots and close-ups and superb lighting prevails.

Dramatic honors go to Wyndham Standing for his sincere, appealing characterization of John Dangerfield, the man who yields to the lure of the tropics, but finally redeems himself.

It isn't a picture for children, but if your clients like this sort of thing, the film ought to make money for you. Where possible, a Chinese prologue should be staged. Wyndham Standing, Tully Marshall, June Elvidge and Barbara Bedford are names worth advertising.

FILM OF MANY CONTRASTS

*'The Breaking Point' Combines Western Atmosphere, Society Romance

THE BREAKING POINT. Paramount Photoplay. Author, Mary Roberts Rinehart. Director, Herbert Brenon. Length, 6,614 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Judson Clark (Richard Livingstone) ..	Matt Moore
Beverly Carlyle	Nita Naldi
Elizabeth Wheeler	Patsy Ruth Miller
Dr. David Livingstone	George Fawcett
William Lucas	John Merkel

Believing that he has killed the husband of Beverly Carlyle, an actress with whom he is infatuated, Judson Clark flees, is taken ill and loses his memory. As Richard Livingstone, physician, he succeeds in New York and becomes engaged to Elizabeth Wheeler. Years later he is recognized from the stage by Beverly. The real culprit confesses the killing of Beverly's spouse. Judson finds happiness with Elizabeth.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THE outstanding quality of this film is the variety of contrasts it offers. You don't often get Western atmosphere, society backgrounds and a murder mystery served up in a feature, but "The Breaking Point" has 'em all, and Director Herbert Brenon has made a fairly entertaining picture out of these ingredients. This despite the fact that the plot hinges on what is getting to be a well-worn angle in scenario land, loss of memory and the assumption of another personality by the hero. The action moves swiftly and the chances are that the attraction will roll up a tolerably decent box office score in most theatres.

The action begins in New York, showing a theatre interior, and then switches abruptly to a little Western town. There, in the semi-darkness of a ranch house, two rivals for the love of a fascinating actress are brought together, a shooting occurs, and the hero flees, thinking that he has killed a man. His illness and loss of memory follows, and ten years later he is seen as Richard Livingstone, physician, where he is recognized by the woman whose beauty caused all the trouble in the first place. Then comes his return to Wyoming and the clearing up of the problem.

The shooting episode is uncommonly well staged and Judson Clark's flight through a snowstorm registers as a powerful bit of realism. His second escape from the sheriff is another situation alive with thrills and sensational appeal. Through it all a good deal of sympathy is aroused for the hero and the girl to whom he becomes engaged while yet unaware of his double life. Beverly's recognition of the man who is supposed to have murdered her husband and afterward perished in the snow, takes place while she is playing a leading part in a New York show, and this is also an effective dramatic touch, although of a very different kind from the blood and thunder nature of the Wyoming incidents.

Matt Moore portrays the chap with the mixed identities and does it extremely well.

Miss Naldi wears a number of gorgeous gowns which will win the envious admiration of feminine patrons, and looks haughtily handsome as the philandering actress, Beverly Carlisle. Patsy Ruth Miller is a sweetly charming Elizabeth, and smooth, evenly-balanced support is given the principals by the remainder of the company.

The photography is 100 per cent effective. The theatre shots are beautifully filmed and the Western locations offer some great out-of-doors views.

The name of the author should be played up in your advertising and tie-ups arranged with book stores on the strength of Mary Roberts Rinehart's story from which the picture is derived. Stress the double identity angle, due to the loss of memory, and draw attention to the fact that the film action includes both Eastern and Western settings. Matt Moore, Nita Naldi, Patsy Ruth Miller, George Fawcett and Edythe Chapman are all well known to the fans and should be mentioned.

IS BULLY WESTERN FILM

'The Silent Stranger' Brimful of Action and Thrilling Stunts

THE SILENT STRANGER. F. B. O. Photoplay. Author, Marion Jackson. Director, Albert Rogell. Length, 5,040 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A BULLY good Westerner, which should prove a valuable box office asset in all theatres where pictures of this kind are popular. None of its contemporaries could boast of more zippy action, thrills and near neck-breaking stunts than "The Silent Stranger" offers, and few present such a compact, well developed plot, which moreover, gets off the beaten trail and has a spice of originality in it.

It is unquestionably the best vehicle yet utilized for the starring of Fred Thompson, who outdoes all his previous efforts in the athletic line, displays cat-like agility, rides like a champion and never spares himself throughout the entire five reels. Silver King, that singularly beautiful and sagacious steed, who has earned a front rank place among the screen's four-footed actors, shares drawing power honors with his master.

The hero makes his first appearance as a deaf and dumb chap snooping about in apparently aimless fashion, thereby winning recognition among the folk of Valley City as "The Silent Stranger." They never suspect that he is really a United States Secret Service man, engaged in running down the thieves who have been making free with Uncle Sam's mail bags, and the mystery which surrounds him is rather cleverly kept intact until he has achieved his purpose.

The story possesses a good many novel angles, not the least of which are the canny tricks played by Silver King, whose intelligence is something to marvel over. How the kids will enjoy this stuff, and for the matter of fact, grown-ups as well! It's all frank, straight-out melodrama, replete with dash and ginger, meant to entertain and succeeding admirably.

Fred Thompson's horsemanship is beyond hostile criticism, he rides as though he were a part of the animal he bestrides, indulges in perfectly miraculous jumping feats and fights with the joyous abandon of a Bengal tiger. His escape from the bandits and the scene in which he holds up the entire gang are episodes alive with vibrant action and as thrilling as they make 'em. The love interest is well maintained and a satisfactory climax attained.

Hazel Keener registers as a very charming heroine, George Williams provides a sympathetic character sketch of her dad, Bud Osborne plays the sinister Sleeman convincingly and the support as a whole is excellent. The photography is rich in impressive exteriors, there are many fine long shots and closeups, and the lighting is adequate.

You can safely exploit this as an unusually good Westerner. Play up Fred Thompson as appearing in the best picture of his career, stress the wonderful performances of Silver King and mention Hazel Keener's good work. If there is a demand by your patrons for lively melodrama "The Silent Stranger" will surely please them.

'TRUE AS STEEL'

HAS POTENT LURE

Offers Familiar but Interesting Theme, Convincingly Developed, Cleverly Acted and Well Directed TRUE AS STEEL. Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Photoplay. Author and Director, Rupert Hughes. Length, 6,244 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mrs. Eva Boutelle	Aileen Pringle
Frank Parry	Huntley Gordon
Mrs. Frank Parry	Cleo Madison
Ethel Parry	Eleanor Boardman
Harry Boutelle	Norman Kerry
Gilbert Morse	William Haines
Miss Leeds	Louise Fazenda
Jake Leighton	Louis Paine
Commodore Fairfield	William H. Crane
Mr. Foote	Lucien Littlefield

Frank Parry, middle-aged, successful manufacturer, goes to New York. There he becomes infatuated with Mrs. Eva Boutelle, a handsome business woman. He offers to secure a divorce, if she will do likewise, and marry her. The temptation is strong, for Mrs. Boutelle is fascinated by him. But she remains true to her marriage vows. Parry returns home, remorseful and determined to remain loyal to his faithful wife.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE is every reason for believing that "True as Steel" will attain a high measure of popularity and prove a powerful box-office magnet for any exhibitor who books it. The theme isn't exactly new, lately we have become extremely familiar with the heroine whose success in the business world is only equalled by her ability to fascinate male contemporaries with physical charms of potent allure.

But ladies of the above mentioned type are still good drawing cards for the screen, especially when, as in the present case, utilized in conjunction with a story charged with melodramatic energy and yet outlining what impresses the spectators as a bit of actual life. Such pictures possess particular interest for most feminine patrons in view of the fact that so many of them play their own part in the business world. The reflection—"why that might happen to me, or somebody I know," naturally arises in such instances as an office romance develops in a film. And, of course, the men folks get interested in their side of the question.

So Rupert Hughes, in his double capacity of author and director, made a canny choice when he produced this love idyl with a commercial setting and hero and heroine who nearly, but not quite, tumble over the precipice of passion. The quality of suspense is well maintained, you are never able to guess just what is going to happen, at times it seems as though the sprightly Mrs. Eva Boutelle will yield to the fervid appeals of Frank Parry, who is perfectly willing to divorce his wife and wed her, provided she shakes her own husband loose. But she never shakes, her the final meeting between the pair, which results in the lady resolving to remain "true as steel" to her spouse, is a splendidly handled situation, sure to make an audience "sit up and take notice."

When Gordon returns home, determined to make the best of things and knows that he still retains his wife's affection, which by the way, will strike the average person as a whole lot more than he deserves, he finds that his daughter Ethel has taken up a business career and intends to stick to it, despite her parent's disapproval. So the tale ends with a certain amount of anxiety generated in his mind as to Ethel's future. It isn't a gloomy finish, nor a conventionally "happy" one, and in this, as well as other things, Hughes shows that he refuses to be bound by straight movie tradition.

Money has not been spared in the production of the feature. The mountings are elaborate, gorgeous interiors are in evidence, that of the New York cabaret being unusually striking, good photography and lighting complete the picture's artistic charm, the Gotham exterior shots deserving particular praise.

Aileen Pringle scores heavily in the role of Eva Boutelle, a part in which her emotional talents and beauty are displayed to the best advantage. Huntley Gordon plays Frank Parry, the middle-aged husband and erstwhile lover with convincing sincerity, Cleo Madison is an appealing figure as the neglected wife, and smooth, well balanced support is given the principals by other members of the cast.

When exploiting the feature play up Aileen Pringle and refer to her recent sensational hit in the leading feminine role of "Three Weeks." Other worth-while names are Cleo Madison, Huntley Gordon, Eleanor Boardman, Norman Kerry, Louise Fazenda and Lucien Littlefield. Stress the angle of the woman in business and the temptations to which she may be subjected from the personal standpoint. And remember that Rupert Hughes is an author of international reputation and has a big following.

Such catch phrases as—"Good steel may bend, but won't break"—"Loyal in the Face of Temptation"—can be used advantageously in conjunction with the film's title, to provoke public curiosity and draw patrons theatreward.

'HURRICANE HUTCH' IN STUNTS GALORE

William Steiner's 'Surging Seas' Abounds in Daring Deeds

SURGING SEAS. Produced by William Steiner. Distributed by New-Cal Film Corporation. Directed by William Steiner. Length, 4,800 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bob Sinclair	Charles Hutchison
Edith Stafford	Edith Thornton
Charles Stafford	George Hackathorne
Lionel Sinclair	David Torrence
Edwin Sinclair	Earl Metcalf
Hansen, the Mate	Pat Harmon

Bob Sinclair, resenting the stern domination of his father, had left home to make his own way in the world. His younger brother, Edwin, secretly inspired many of the misunderstandings and quarrels between Bob and his parent. Bob subsequently returns after making his fortune, only to find himself in a maze of difficulties, most of which rise out of Edwin's embezzlement of his father's funds. Edith Stafford, Bob's sweetheart and a ward of Lionel Sinclair, enters into the game to save her brother from the bad influence of Edwin, as also Bob's reputation, who is accused of burglary and attempt to kill in a subsequent fake robbery staged by Edwin to cover up his embezzlements. In the end, after a series of thrilling adventures and dare-devil stunts by Bob in order to escape the police until he can produce the proper evidence which would clear his name, the truth out, and Edwin meets his just deserts, while Bob gets the girl.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

FOLKS who enjoy a lively picture, where heart interest and a love theme are subordinated to the really amazing dare-devil exploits of a man who might best be described as one of nature's irrepressibles, will find "Surging Seas" particularly satisfying.

This photoplay finds Charles Hutchison, more familiarly known to his admirers as "Hurricane Hutch," drawing on his full bag of acrobatic tricks, in which jumping from windows many feet above the ground, climbing telegraph poles, taking high dives into the briny without so much as a preliminary thought for the value of a brand new suit of clothes, and such like antics, figure prominently.

From the looks of him "Hutch" would seem to be more properly adapted to the brawn and muscle tussle of the mat rather than to the hair-raising leaps in midair for which he has a real predilection, but the spry, agile feats of the acrobat are no little part of his accomplishments.

"Hutch," as Bob Sinclair, the black sheep of the Sinclair family, who prefers the rigors of the tropics to continual dissension with his stern and exacting father, is the dominating force throughout the unraveling of the story. One feels things stir and take on new life the moment he edges into a scene.

Edith Thornton, as Edith Stafford, Bob's sweetheart and ward of his father, lends the sort of verve and charm to the tale which brings it into the realm of a love story. However, there is not much attempt at love-making or suspense from that angle, the picture depending on the dare-devil stunts and escapades of the smashing dashing "Hutch" for its appeal.

The scene in which our hero runs amuck a sloop manned by eight ruffians of a type modeled after man's general impression of the missing link, finds "Hutch" at the high pitch of his fistic accomplishments.

How he does give and take—mostly give. And how the red-blooded are going to pulsate with instinctive primitive emotions to his flailing fists, his agile legs, and indomitable courage!

In this last is the showmen's cue for exploiting the picture. Rather than bill it as a love story, the exhibitor should elaborate on the fact that he has a picture which for downright action, mile-a-minute-thrills and ticklish situations has all the elements for which the thrill chaser craves. And what most emphatically should not be forgotten is the name of Charles Hutchison, or "Hurricane Hutch," the hero of many serials, which should be played up in prominent fashion.

ENTERTAINMENT FOR ALL

'Between Friends' a Very Satisfactory Film Especially Suited to Neighborhood Houses and Small Town Theatres

BETWEEN FRIENDS. Vitagraph Production. Story by Robert W. Chambers. Directed by J. Stuart Blackton. Length, 6,930 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

David Drene	Lou Tellegen
Jessica Drene	Anna Q. Nilsson
Jack Greylock	Norman Kerry
Cecile White	Alice Calhoun
Quair	Stuart Holmes
Guilder	Henry Barrows

Jack Greylock, the lifelong friend of David Drene, a sculptor, elopes with Jessica, David's wife. Remorse compels Jessica to end her life. David does not learn the name of the man and maintains his friendship. David becomes bitter and cold. Five years later Greylock falls in love with Cecil White, a model who loves David and poses for him. At this time Drene learns that Greylock was the man who ran away with his wife and plans revenge using the girl as a foil. Greylock agrees to kill himself to save the girl. At the hour of his death he feels David calling him and he goes to him. The friends are reunited and David and Cecile are left to their happiness.

By HENRIETTE SLOANE

ARMED with an unusually strong cast of noted stars and provided with a plausible and adequate story, J. Stuart Blackton set about making "Between Friends" and accomplished, as a result, a very satisfactory and decidedly entertaining photoplay which should provide the average audience with a very pleasant matinee or evening. There is nothing remarkable about the picture but it hits the entertainment mark squarely and gives promise of being a box office attraction.

With a deft hand the director has added some unique touches which do much to elevate the picture. The opening shot does not reveal the wife and the friend in a loving embrace but much more subtly hints at the situation by showing the hands of the man seeking the woman's. Thus the story immediately hits its pace and without further elaboration, the couple are shown eloping together.

By a series of flashbacks, fade-ins and fade-outs the audience is gradually told the entire story—the devotion of the husband, his anguish at losing his wife, his trust in his friend, the unsatisfactory relationship between the wife and friend, and ultimately the death of Jessica. The whole is briefly yet effectively told and the audience is in on the details.

The rest of the story is alive with romance, thrills and suspense. From the moment David pronounces the sentence on his friend and demands his life for that of his wife, the film moves with rapidity and suspense. Here again the director has resorted to a rather clever device. Instead of showing what happens during the ensuing two months he indicates the passage by the turning leaves of a day to day calendar, and foreshadows the approach of Christmas eve by outward signs.

The photography is good, the scenic effects are pleasing, and the interior shots excellent. Moreover, the title suggests a wide field of exploitation. It can be used by merchants in tie-ups of all kinds. One merchant who should be particularly interested is the man handling statuary and paintings.

'The Dancing Cheat' Is Lacking in Appeal to Critical Audiences

THE DANCING CHEAT. Universal Photoplay. Adapted from Calvin Johnson's Story: "Clay of Ca'Lina." Director, Irving Cummings. Length, 4,727 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Brownlow Clay	Herbert Rawlinson
Marie Andrews (Poppy)	Alice Lake
Bobby Norton	Robert Walker
Mose	Jim Blackwell
Eddie Kane (Dender)	Edwin J. Brady
Downs (Moron Mike)	Harmon MacGregor

Brownlow Clay, member of an old Southern family, runs a square gambling house in Tia Juana. In a cafe he meets Poppy, dancer and wife of a crooked gambler named Kane. When Clay refuses to respond to her advances, Poppy, enraged, enters into a scheme with her husband to blackmail him. Kane finds her in Clay's apartments and demands hush money. Poppy, ashamed of the part she is playing and genuinely in love with Clay, turns on her spouse. With Kane out of the way Clay and Poppy face a happy future together.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

BOTH of the principals in this picture are well known to the fans and the prestige of their names invests "The Dancing Cheat" with a certain box office value. But the story is shaped along cut-and-dried, ancient lines and carries such a heavy burden of excess "hokum" that it registers as nothing better than an ordinary program attraction and will not appeal to critical audiences.

So far as atmosphere is concerned there's nothing to complain of. Heaps of colorful local backgrounds are in evidence, showing the whirl of adventurous life across the Mexican border, where gambling is in full swing and men and women carouse, fight, flirt and generally speaking, have a sufficiently hectic time of it. The settings are good and the photography attains a degree of uniform excellence.

It's a risky experiment to start a picture off with a heroine who doesn't catch the audience's sympathy right from the beginning of things. You can build up sympathy for a hero all right, moulding him from something pretty close to the villain mark into a regular fellow, but the fans insist on the woman in the case possessing at least a quality of magnetism which atones for whatever misdeeds she may be guilty.

Now Poppy, the girl whose trials and tribulations are set forth in "The Dancing Cheat," fails in the latter respect. In the picture's early stages she merely gives one the impression of a dame who is willing to go the limit in order to achieve her aims. Unable to ensnare Clay's affections at first, she deliberately chooses to play what police authorities term "the badger game" in conjunction with her wretch of a hubby, just for sweet revenge's sake.

It's an illustration of the old adage—"hell hath no fury like a woman scorned"—and doesn't show up the heroine in a particularly charming light. Of course she relents, suffers remorse and double-crosses her husband instead of Clay, and it all comes out happily at the finish. But it leaves you wondering whether the hero is altogether lucky in securing such a mate, or if it was worth while eliminating the husband.

Herbert Rawlinson plays Brownlow Clay fairly well. Alice Lake throws a lot of energy into her impersonation.

Your best plan in exploiting this film is to play up the names of Herbert Rawlinson and Alice Lake, as both have a large following. Tell your patrons that the action centers around the gambling resorts across the Mexican border and a tale of love, jealousy and attempted revenge follows. But don't go too strong in praising the story.

JESSE J. GOLDBURG 'HITTING ON HIGH' WITH NEW FILMS

Independent Pictures Corporation Heads Broadcasts a Message of Co-operation With Exhibitors

MOTIVATED by the kind ideals that have always won success for the executive in any business, Jesse Goldberg, skipper at the helm of the Independent Pictures Corporation enterprises, announces his new type of Westerns, in which Franklin Farnum figures properly.

The sudden popularity of the new series of Franklin Farnum pictures is undoubtedly due to the manner in which Mr. Goldberg has stipulated the elements be accorded their proper relationship to each story in hand. The essential elements of rapid and heroic action for example, interspersed with daring feats of horsemanship with a story whose locale is in the midst of beautiful and typical scenery of the west are all embraced in this series, but the change from the old order of things is the prime feature for which these screened stories are noted.

Mr. Goldberg, whose personal supervision of these stories involved everything from the choice of the stories, the writing of the scenario, the casting and direction, insisted that the steady diet of gunplay, murder and chases, to which the public has been fed since the beginning of western productions should be altered by a greater attention to the story and a portrayal of incidents that had some foundation in fact and a more detailed attention to the delineation of characters.

Results Speak for Themselves

THE results have proven the wisdom and foresight of the producer for in five of the eight productions not a gun is fired and not an assault with weapons or a murder is committed, not a bed-room scene is embraced in any of these photoplays and yet they contain incidents of extreme suspense and physical combat such as was a daily incident of the old west rising out of conquests of either love or gold.

In the making of these attractions, wherever the story involved a period of early American history, the files of the public library were consulted and books recording the early trials and struggles of the pioneers of the west were committed to intense research in order to secure absolute fidelity to detail and fact.

'Hokum' Obliterated

THE results revealed upon the screen an altogether entrancing tale with "hokum" obliterated, a tale well calculated to enthrall and entertain and furnish its lesson in sacrifice, devotion and bravery; the three elements that have appealed to the men and women of the land, not forgetting the boys and girls, from the time America was in the making.

High enthusiasm is evinced at the Independent offices for the new Helen Holmes series, attractions which though containing stunts galore, hair-raising situations and unusual incidents, will revolve about stories of social life and society and which will be peopled with persons of fine clothes and manners.

These stories will be sensational only in so far as they deal with sensational incidents in life, and will adhere to the usual formula of popular photoplays with respect to love interest, heart interest, pathos and comedy.

It is promised that these productions will be more than just program features. J. P. McGowan, supervising director, is enthusiastic not alone over producing an unusual series of attractions, but also over the fact that he is permitted to once again direct Miss Holmes, who was under his personal supervision in the noteworthy railroad serials made by him for Universal.

THESE pictures, stills of scenes (above) "Courage" and (the one beneath) "Caliber 45," represent a new type of Franklin Western in which genuine heart interest, and character delineations are superseded by gunplay

IN "Crossed Trails" and "A Border Intrigue" interior sets and emotional acting as impressive as any seen in the regular society type of drama is a feature of these new Westerns

IN keeping with the extensive plans of production of Independent Pictures Corporation, Jesse J. Goldberg, its president, has laid out a campaign of trade paper and newspaper advertising and publicity that is an unusual change from the policy heretofore pursued by most of the independent producers as well as by Mr. Goldberg's own company.

Mr. Goldberg expressed the opinion that advertising is as essential to the final returns to be realized from productions whether such returns are directed to the producer, the distributor or the theatre owner, as the very productions themselves.

MR. GOLDBURG stated—"In my travels throughout the country I was continuously met with statements from exhibitors, tising is concerned. However, something more than mere intentions have already materialized, these being more or less concretely evidenced in the quality of press books that are issued with the late Independent Pictures Corporation productions. One has but to run briefly over the press book material to realize that they contain a wealth of data which comes under the head of "Advertising Aids."

A TWO FISTED TENDERFOOT" a Franklin Farnum western, pregnant with title-interest possibilities, is adequately covered in exploitation and advertising suggestions by its press sheet

THE WILDCAT," starring Robert Gordon, has a quality of title interest which is not lost sight of in the press book on that picture. Valuable advertising aids are offered.

'we want to play Independent productions but we don't know where to get them.' Statements from state right exchanges—we want to buy your pictures but how do we know about them—if you don't advertise them and besides that we cannot advertise in trade papers, and exhibitors expect their notifications through that source so in order that we might realize our just returns, it is necessary that the producer or national distributors include in either his negative cost or sales price, a sum sufficient to allow of his advertising in the trade; publications.'

NOW, when the advertising cost is distributed among the various exchanges of the United States it is not as staggering a sum as it would otherwise appear to be. We cannot expect our goods to move unless we shout about them from the 'house tops.' The house tops in this instance are publications of every description (including trade papers) reaching into every little rural nook and cranny of America. Whatever we say about pictures in our advertisements, if true, establish a good will that cannot be measured in dollars and cents and if false, has its own detrimental reaction.

HENCE Independent Pictures Corporation, since it is in the state right production and distribution of motion pictures practically without limit, will, from henceforth, advertise fifty-two weeks in the year. When business is bad that is an additional reason to advertise; when it is good, then we certainly can afford to advertise."

WHICH in no unmistakable way explains the spirit behind the Goldberg intentions in so far as aiding the exhibitor by adver-

THIS shows the particularly live eye-catching type of newspaper advertisements offered the exhibitor in conjunction with the showing of "In the Spider's Web." Exploitation suggestions are by no means missing.

IN "Crossed Trails," for example, a story by James Ormont, featuring Franklin Farnum and directed by J. P. McGowan, one is immediately impressed with the striking array of posters for lobby display, hand-colored title cards, a series of attention getting catch lines for teaser and other herald advertising. A list of accessories shows cuts all ready for shipment on single and double column newspaper ads, two 22x28 lobby cards, eight 11x14 lobby cards, an action trailer, two one-sheets; one three-sheet, one six-sheet, two slides, black and white stills, advance stories, prepared newspaper reviews, and last but not least an appropriate music cue sheet. Surely, utility and service personified.

THE press book on "In the Spider's Web" is particularly alive with striking newspaper ads, for which cuts are shipped exhibitors on request. Eight distinctive lobby cards, 11x14, comprise a set that appear "all to the mustard" so far lobby dress is concerned. A full page of exhibitor helps tells the showman how to "get behind this big thriller and reap a box-office harvest."

A TWO-FISTED TENDERFOOT," another Farnum Western, one needs little imagination to judge the far-reaching possibilities that the title interest in this picture can achieve. Jesse Goldberg, however, has left little to the imagination. It's all there in back and white, how to appeal to the public through the lure of printers' ink. In find time to personally supervise productions and to keep himself abreast of the ever varying and changing tastes of the public, such supervision will, in the end, result in a box-office attraction of merit that will show upon the screen at least the value of every dollar on the negative cost.

MR. GOLDBURG briefly outlined to the Advertising Aids Editor his method of procedure. He said: "I pick the story from the angle first, of literary merit and its adaptability to visual portrayal; second its exploitation value. I lay as much stress upon the story as I do upon any other operation of production work. I try to avoid the hackneyed, the commonplace and the palpable, and all too evident desire of some authors to adhere to what they term the fundamentals of dramatic production. Then in the cast; while of course I am guided to some little extent by the reputation of those who seek parts in the production, I look essentially first, for proven ability; second, for the physical make up of the actor with respect to type.

THE sets are constructed with an eye essential to its use to the scenes which are to be played in it and not with respect to how much money they will either cost or how much money can be saved. Then I stick by the camera and the director and in the cutting and titling, my nose is always to the grindstone. In the preparation of the advertising matter I give as much thought and labor to that as I do to the actual filming of the picture."

And there we have the business philosophy of Jesse J. Goldberg, as also the spirit which is behind his efforts for better films.

EXHIBITOR co-operation is never so well manifested on the part of a producer as through the medium of the pages of his press sheets. In this respect Metro takes its position among the high, for without question the exhibitor helps it offers in the shape of accessories, ad cut and mat service and other sundries comprise the work of the ablest in the field.

EXHIBITORS Trade REVIEW
By GEORGE T. PAXON

THE human interest element is the prevailing quality of this picture which, well directed, thoughtfully and artistically, provides six reels of very satisfactory entertainment. It captures the attention of all exhibitors, big and little, and holds it to the box office target through in the center.

There is just enough sentimental coloring to the middle of the picture, and the subsequent career under the care of a stern but kind-hearted old master mariner, is such the tender feelings of an audience. That and nothing more. Metro Picture

Pipe Organs and Program Presentations

The Reminiscences, Observations and Prophecies of One Whose Life Is Dedicated to the Improvement of the Pipe Organ as a Medium of Entertainment

By RUDOLPH H. WURLITZER

Vice-President of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE widespread continued use of the pipe organ and the wonderful success of this instrument as a theatre presentation aid, has established for it a place in the theatre equal in importance to that which it holds in the church. Although differing somewhat in tonal characteristics, the music of the theatre organ is just as beautiful and impressive as that emanating from an instrument designed for church worship. Moreover the master builders of these instruments have made wonderful strides in the improvement of their tonal characteristics, with the result that organs are particularly suitable for theatre presentations. They are more than ever before orchestral in tone, and equipped with many marvellous novelty effects.

A great many years have passed since the writer first discovered a theatre using an organ as a presentation aid. The theatre had just been opened in a store building on Madison Street between Dearborn and Clark Streets, Chicago. It was one of those pioneers which even in those far-off days was struggling toward "bigger and better" presentations. What a difference between the "moving pictures" then and the super-features of today! Then they were marvellous—but atrocious, absolutely mechanical. Many consisted merely of a group of Amazons marching about and somebody cracking a slap-stick as they changed the direction of their parade. There was no plot. Comedy was the vogue. It consisted, like as not, of two athletes working together and knocking off one another's heads, then picking them up and replacing them. The brave little theatre referred to had a big street sign reading: "The Home of the Organ," and inside was a pipe organ. The picture was one of the ocean surf. Waves rolling in one over the other. It was colored, and although one of the "flickers" of the day, it was really attractive. Its presentation was enhanced a hundred-fold by that ancient organ which was playing "Over the Waves." It was so much better than the usual tin-pan piano, and the "movie" piano-player who pounded out whatever came to his finger-tips. To the writer this seemed the beginning of better music for motion pictures—the genesis of presentation.

From that day organ builders realized the opportunity to place their instruments in motion picture theatres. They recognized that the church type of organ specially constructed for religious work lacked the tone characteristics essential to theatre presentation. They labored. The fruit of this labor was an orchestral organ getting in the flutes, oboes, clarionets, strings and novelty effects.

The investment that the big theatre people have made in organs is little short of staggering. In most instances the money expended on the organ itself is four or five times greater than the cost of all the rest of the equipment put together. When Balaban & Katz opened their big Tivoli Theatre in Chicago, all of the staff personnel was furnished with books describing the different theatre equipment, enabling any employee to intelligently respond more affluent theatre men are using not only the organ, but also the very finest of symphony orchestras. The symphony orchestra will be playing and the organist will come in at the latter part of the program to relieve the musicians, and play right along with the orchestra. Using tone characteristics identical with those used by the orchestra, the organist continues to play the same theme, or in the same trend of music as the orchestra leaves the pit for its rest. Unless one watches closely, the substitution is often made without discovery. When the orchestra again returns to the pit, it picks up the theme where the organ leaves off, and thus the music goes on continuously without any apparent break.

Lobbyology

One Man Symphony

MUSIC is an important part of program presentation. Most picture theatres do not support orchestras. They rely on the pipe organ. The impressive grandeur of its music is unexcelled.

In the finger tips of your organist lies the ability to increase presentation effectiveness by the margin between just "getting by" and "going over big." Feature him and his instrument. Both will respond nobly.

Cue your music to the requirements of your attractions. Have your organist submit suggestions for organ recitals or novelty organ concerts. Sow the seed of better presentation and you will reap the harvest when you count the house.

to any query made by the public during the first weeks of inspection. The greatest number of inquiries were in regard to the great Wurlitzer and the organist.

Pietro Yon, the famous organ virtuoso, relates an experience that occurred to him while playing in one of Stanley's theatres in Philadelphia. He had been engaged for several weeks to give an organ recital of fifteen or twenty minutes duration twice each day. The crowds at the theatre were astounding, and he asked the management whether they were brought by his playing or by current pictures. The response was that people came to hear him and his wonderful organ.

THE theatre organ of today produces a tone so similar to the real orchestra that it is sometimes almost impossible to tell when the orchestra leaves off and the organ begins. Music has been recognized as such a valuable feature in the presentation of pictures, that the larger and

DURING the last few years there have been developed several feature organists who have proven wonderful drawing cards. These men become most versatile in releasing melody from their instruments, and with the assistance of slides thrown upon the screen, they are capable of putting on a very interesting program. This example may be emulated by any organist possessing sufficient talent and interest in his vocation to give the matter of presentation real attention. We hear the word "genius" frequently mentioned and are as frequently reminded of the great man who defined it as an "infinite capacity for taking pains." If an organist of only average ability will take enough pains, he can evolve programs which will soon earn for him the title of genius.

The great orchestras are the musical aces of the palatial showhouses which dot the big cities of the world. These hippodromes are the frosting upon the cake of picture presentation, but the cake itself, the substance of the world of photo-play presentation, is the myriad of modest motion picture theatres providing enlightenment and entertainment to the millions who throng the by-ways.

For these the symphony is beyond reach, but the music itself is the thing that counts, and this is attainable by every showman whose theatre boasts an organ. The grandeur of theme, the richness of tone, the capacity to play upon the emotions, the ability to beautify and augment the presentation of the program, are all within the grasp of any enterprising show-businessman. The day has dawned when the picture man must present a well rounded program, or receive the "thumbs down" sign by which the ancient Roman populace signified death for a gladiator in the arena.

The future of the motion picture theatre consists not alone in offering the public the best entertainment obtainable in the silent drama, but in presenting its attractions with musical background provided by symphony orchestras and pipe organs. The picture theatre must be the home of all that is finest on the screen, and the center of all that is best in music.

WHEN a Man's a Man—he wears the trousers, might have been a caption for this Harlem window tie-up on the Principal Picture. But the display card reads: "When a Man's a Man He Dresses the Part."

PLENTY of Harlem windows helped to create a buying urge for "When a Man's a Man", when the Principal Picture played Loew's Victoria Theatre. This is a display in the big window of Harlem's largest department store.

Teamwork Characterizes Successful Exploitation Campaign on 'When a Man's a Man' at the Victoria

AN exploitation campaign that was a "wow" made the showing of "When a Man's a Man" a record breaking event at Loew's Victoria Theatre which is located in the Harlem section of New York City.

The picture is presented by Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, and released through First National. The campaign was a co-operative affair in which both Mr. Lesser and Marcus Loew, the famous showman who heads the Marcus Loew Enterprises, participated. Many unusual and effective tie-ups were originated which will be utilized in the various sections of the country where the picture is shown.

The initial step in the Victoria campaign was a prize essay contest in the New York Evening Journal on "When a Man's a Man." Thousands of efforts were submitted, and this and other newspaper tie-ups attracted widespread attention. The Harlem Home News, a local publication, asked girls of the section to describe their ideal men. Both descriptions and photographs of the ideals were printed in layouts.

Neither was the great value of civic co-operation overlooked. The Harlem Board of Commerce was hooked-up with the picture in a drive for both Board members and ticket purchasers, and both theatre and Board were thoroughly satisfied. In addition to the fifty foot banner shown in the picture above, two thousand cards stressing community spirit were distributed among Harlem's biggest businessmen.

Throughout West 125th Street, the Broadway of uptown, window displays were profuse. The largest department store in the section surrendered its windows, as did several of the Liggett Drug Stores, clothing stores and in fact all sorts of shops galore. The feminine angle was not neglected, for, as one women's apparel shop proclaimed, "When a Man's a Man, He Wants His Wife Well Dressed."

A touch of atmosphere was arranged when Captain Walter O'Grote, formerly a Texas Ranger, a member of the A. E. F., and one of the riders in the picture, was retained to parade through Harlem streets in full Western regalia, astride one bronco and leading another bearing one of the famous enlargements of Harold Bell Wright's book. The animated booklets that paraded Fifth Avenue and Broadway are too well known to need mention. They drew crowds promptly upon appearance.

The campaign proved tremendously successful, and decisively demonstrated the worth of widespread exploitation in augmenting the box-office value of any picture.

Although the picture has been exploited from every possible angle, the name of Harold Bell Wright, the widely read author of the book, is invariably featured. Wright has an enormous following, and as Principal Pictures holds the screen rights to his stories, it is important that this picture, and those to follow, be identified in the public mind with the name of the author.

When the picture opened practically simultaneously at the Cameo Theatre, New York, the State Theatre, Los Angeles, and the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, there was absolute uniformity of exploitation action. In New York some five hundred window display tie-ups were effected, a large photo-play edition of the novel was placed on sale all over town, and thousands of sheets from ones to twenty-fours plastered the city.

The result was that the picture played to exceptional business from the beginning, and its popularity seems to wax rather than wane in all sections of the country. Which is as it should be in a case where the exhibitor is accorded such fine co-operation.

HEAVY rain failed to cut attendance at Loew's Victoria Theatre showing of the Principal Picture based on Harold Bell Wright's novel. Note the elaborate marquee and lobby display.

AN EGYPTIAN PROLOGUE FOR 'THE SONG OF LOVE'

To the orchestral accompaniment of "The Egyptian Ballet," Manager Milton Feld, Newman's Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., staged a dance prologue in a harmonious setting when he played the First National picture featuring Norma Talmadge. The girls are all local talent from a neighboring dancing school.

Effective Prologue to 'Hunchback'

THROUGH the courtesy of Manager Frank King, of the Community Playhouse, Meriden, Conn., we offer a prologue to "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which was originated and effectively used when Mr. King played the great Universal. Any exhibitor may achieve the same pleasing effects by following instructions.

Drop in one, black, draping up each side of center. Large bronze bell, hung so that it will swing, hanging exact center in one and a half. Picture screen up stage with black curtain hanging in front and masking entirely. Prologue opens in profound silence and darkness. Every light in house including exits out at end of regular orchestral overture. Start of prologue. Bell heard tolling. Draped drop in one slowly opens showing bell slowly swinging. Green baby spot falls on bell very faintly. After about six tolls reciter enters through cut in the back draped drop, dressed in white Dominican monk's garb. Comes down center to edge of front drop and stops. Faint amber spot from above covers him. Bell stops tolling and reciter, with dramatic emphasis, recites the following lines.

This is a story of the long ago
Of Esmeralda, Clopin, Quasimodo,
A story of the time when sore oppressed,
Men nursed a spark of hate within each breast,
Till, fanned by rack and torture, into flame
This spark burst forth, in sight of Notre Dame.
This is the story of a human freak
Too deaf to hear, too wise, sometimes, to speak.
Deformed in body and bedwarfed in soul
He lived among the bells and made them toll
To call the folks to worship in God's name
Within the sanctuary of Notre Dame.
Rebelloin—ruin—death—are written there
Yet with each peal the bells sent up the prayer
That all the tyranny and hate should cease
And men should live as God intended them
In love with peace
So runs the story of the long ago—
But times have changed—Quasimodo
And all the other characters have passed
But joy and peace have come to reign at last.
So we present to you—kind Sir—Madame—
The story of the Hunchback of Notre Dame.

As reciter exits draped drop closes. Choral effects on victrola heard back of screen—singing Mozart's "Gloria" from "Twelfth Mass." Bell and draped drop are taken into flies. Picture opens with exterior of Cathedral shown on black background for a second. Black background is taken away leaving picture on proper screen. Victrola still continues to play during interior scene in Cathedral at end of which orchestra lights are thrown on—victrola stops—and the regular musical score follows.

MOTION PICTURES SHOWN IN MOVING TRAIN

They put across another one in England—one which was read by every Britain, Scot and "West Britain" who saw a newspaper. There was not a paper from the London "Times," dignity personified, to the most picaresque sheet in the Isles that failed to pay its tribute to an exceptional bit of "cinema" publicity work.

"The Flying Scotsman," England's most famous passenger train which occupies a niche corresponding to that held by our "Twentieth Century," hauled a special coach fitted up as a "Cinema de Luxe." "Black Oxen" was shown for the benefit of the travelers on the "out" trip, and coming back "Ashes of Vengeance" was screened for their delectation. Some twenty-five representatives of the London press made the journey to York, where the coach was detached from the "Scotsman" and hitched on to the return express.

The train was covered with posters and placards, and the cinema special probably enjoys the distinction of being the world's most photographed car. The feat of converting England's train into a motion picture theatre created wide comment among the trade and the public as well as in the press. It is now planned to run a motion picture coach attached to the special express trains at stated intervals. The attendant publicity has proved most beneficial to both the First National attractions shown, and the London and North Eastern Railroad states that the stunt was worth five thousand pounds to the road.

'THE WHITE SISTER' APPEALS TO ITALIAN POPULATION

Certain pictures hold more than usual appeal for particular classes of people, and occasionally there is an opportunity to arouse the interest of an entire group of Americans who are separated from the old world by but a few years, or at most a generation.

Such an idea suggested itself when Metro's "The White Sister" played the Majestic Theatre, Utica, New York. The city has a large Italian population and the film holds special attraction for that nationality. It was made easy for the sons and daughters of sunny Italy to understand that they would like the picture by telling them so in their own language. Circulars and cards in Italian were widely distributed where they would do the most good, and advertising copy was inserted in the Italian language paper.

The result was that fully thirty per cent of the big business to which the picture played was drawn from the Italian population of the city.

At each showing there was a gratifying demonstration. The number of Italians who have since become regular patrons indicates that the theatre has won many new friends by going to the trouble of meeting them half way.

GIRL USHERS PREFER TROUSERS TO SKIRTS

During the week usherettes at the Liberty Theatre, Spokane, Washington, wear black sateen trousers, but for Universal's "Lady of Quality" they wore white flannels as shown. Manager Ray Grombacher declares that four years' experience has shown that the girls prefer trousers for appearance and ease.

Fool Proof Cue Sheet

On another page the thought of Rudolph H. Wurlitzer, the famous manufacturer of the more famous organs, is made available to you. He speaks among other things of the great value of properly cueing the musical part of your program. A picture with a perfectly fitted musical background, is as much improved as the appearance of a man by well tailored clothing.

Inappropriate music can make a shot depicting heart-rending sorrow appear ridiculous—can change pathos to bathos. For instance, suppose the hero was dying, and the music struck up "Good-bye Girls I'm Through." Not so good, eh? Yet just as ridiculous things have happened.

The old cue sheets gave merely the names of suggested numbers, and, like as not, the desperate organist or orchestra leader found that his library contained about twelve of forty selections. The remainder may have been familiar to him by some other name, he may never have heard of them, or he may have known the air but could not for the life of him recall just how the darned thing "went." He was just out of luck, that's all.

These are a couple of the things that gave an old time "big time" leader and showman an idea which is proving invaluable as an aid to effective musical presentation. M. J. Mintz patented his brain-child prodigy under the name of the "Thematic Music Cue Sheet," and it met with instantaneous success. In addition to the name of the selection, several bars of the strain are given. Thus if the air itself is not in the library of the musician, at least the mood is cued, and if substitution is necessary a tune conveying similar atmosphere may be chosen without difficulty. Musical setting is rendered "miss-cue proof."

The "Thematic Music Cue Sheet" is a part of the press material on practically every picture, and is available at all exchanges. Your music man will thank you for making sure to get one on each attraction you present.

Officer! Call a Cop!

What would you think if you saw a big truck touring about town loaded to the guards with cases bearing stencils of the old three stars, the XXX, and other almost forgotten insignia? What would you do if there was a sign on the rear of the conveyance reading: "Just Received a Big Shipment of Peter Dawson Scotch from Three Miles Out"?

You'd do just the same as we would—follow the truck. If you had dashed after the one that recently cruised the highways of Schenectady, New York, you would have ended up in front of Bill Shirley's Strand Theatre. There you would have found a dozen cases stacked up, and a real old-time barkeep pulling corks. Then just as you pranced toward him, wiping your lips in anticipation, you would have seen the twenty-four sheet announcing Associated Exhibitors' feature "Three Miles Out."

Well, that's all. Except of course, that the Strand had 'em standing at eight o'clock and jamming at eight forty-five on a Friday night.

Baby as Prize

The St. Julien Theatre, Toronto, Canada, got in the papers and also in a bit of a jam when it offered a prize of a "real live male baby" in a guessing contest. The house was crowded with those wishing to take a chance on getting a baby, and on the final night the prize was delivered in a sack to the winning girl. It was a little pig—the kind from which they make those much advertised sausages.

Some sore-head, instigated a prosecution of the theatre on a charge of cruelty to animals, but the case was dismissed.

Essay Contest Boosts Receipts

With the support of the school heads in the city, the Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., sent out notices of an essay to all its patrons, and advertised in the local papers that prizes totalling $50 were to be distributed to the first four winners on a "Scaramouche" essay. School children were particularly asked to participate and teachers were instructed to bring the contest to the attention of the pupils.

The only rule was that each contestant in submitting an essay was to enclose the ticket stub to the Grand stating when he had viewed the picture. The judges were the principals of the two high schools and George Jacobs of the Grand.

Atmospheric Prologue

A beautiful ten minute prologue was presented by Manager Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre, with "The Marriage Circle."

Eight dancers, nine singers and three instrumentalists were used. The number was programmed as "Viennese Impressions," and included "The Old Refrain," (a very effective number) sung by the Mark Strand Ensemble, "Paradise," an instrumental number—violin, cello and accordion, "Vienna Beauties," a dance number by eight girls, and "Auf Wiedersehn" sung by the ensemble with interpolated dances.

The setting—piazza of a country home, showing a set consisting of a house, two trees and some rustic furniture, with vines twining through arbors on each side.

'Triumph' Triumph

Through an arrangement between Paramount and the Adsealit Corporation of New York, an announcement of Cecil B. De Mille's "Triumph," will be placed in millions of American homes during the months of April, May and June.

This tie-up, one of the most far-reaching ever effected, is accomplished through the use of automatic tape-sealer machines placed in department stores and other retail mercantile establishments in all the principal cities of the country. The gummed sealers, each carrying an attractive advertisement of "Triumph," are used instead of twine in the wrapping of packages.

By the terms of the contract with Paramount, a circulation of four million sealers a month is guaranteed, making a total of twelve millions for the three-months period. The exploitation thus afforded is particularly timely inasmuch as the picture is released this month.

No Tickee—No Washee

The bizarre Oriental decorations that adorned the Victoria Theatre, Philadelphia, during the run of First National's "Thundergate," gave coinage to the description "Chinese Cabaret."

The entire front of the house was strung with Chinese lanterns. Swaying cards held on strings fluttered above the heads of entering patrons. Chink lettering was in evidence all about, and around the entrance were Oriental character cut-outs and stills from the picture.

A few tables were visible, and the whole atmosphere of the novel Chinese cabaret was carried out. It got good publicity.

Sixth and Seventh?

The managing director scanned the list of recommended films submitted by the theatre manager. His eye rested on Paramount's "The Ten Commandments." With an air of finality he passed judgment: "'The Ten Commandments,' eh? Well book two of 'em and if they get across close for the other eight."

ARTISTICALLY STAGED STYLE SHOW PROVES POPULAR PROLOGUE

The Paramount picture "A Society Scandal" seemed to Manager C. B. Stiff an appropriate production to preface with a fashion revue. So when the Gloria Swanson photo-drama played the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., a vogue view was offered. The girls and gowns were all good to look at, who have not yet seen the picture will agree with the critic or with the many satisfied.

AT the initial showing of a picture you may secure some good advertising copy by having your audience vote on the merits of both the film and the star.

Distribute ballot cards marked either good, fair and bad, or percentages ranging from one hundred to fifty. The results tabulated will give you something to say in the papers regarding the opinion of your critical "first night" audience. Don't overlook a bet by forgetting that guessing and voting contests are "tried and proved" methods of arousing and sustaining the interest of patrons.

WHEN the Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Oregon, played the Roach Pathecomedy "Two Wagons—Both Covered," the management cashed in on the popularity of filmdom's "poet lariat," Will Rogers, who stars in the laughable burlesque on "The Covered Wagon." In this case the short subject received greater attention in the newspaper advertising than did the feature picture.

* * *

IN England "Black Oxen" was ingeniously linked up with the present popular interest in the subject of the Steinach theory of rejuvenation which has had such wide press publicity. Scientific possibilities of eternal youth always stir interest. One way might be to tie-up with a newspaper by securing and printing the scientific opinions of physicians on the subject generally, and whether it would actually be possible for a woman to regain her youth as does the central character in the picture.

* * *

THAT "The Meanest Man in the World" is not an exhibitor is proven by the bulky response we got to our appeal for live stuff originated by you boys. Thanks, fellows. Keep on swooping box-office boosters with other exhibitors everywhere through the Exploitation Editor.

CLIFF LEWIS, the good fellow who directs publicity for the Syracuse Strand Theatre Company, comes across with four good ideas. In a tie-up with The Evening Telegram he secured a thousand lines of free advertising in four days. This was a contest to determine "The Meanest Man in the World," in which newspaper readers submitted stories of their experiences with members of the one-way fraternity.

Then an arrangement was made by which every reader inserting a classified advertisement during two days received a free ticket to the Strand. The Telegram ran a quarter page announcement featuring the Strand and its attraction, "Boy of Mine."

Now it happens that the city administration is "dead sot" in prohibiting the parking is "dead set" in prohibiting the park-day. "No Parking" was the one prevalent thought with car drivers. The merchants, cab companies and motor car owners are fighting the issue tooth and nail, but nevertheless any car found parked draws a yellow tag from the John Laws. So "Brain Boy" Lewis attached yellow tags to all parked cars. They read "NO you will not be hindered from PARKING your auto after 6 P. M. when you attend the Strand." Did they read the tags? Did they come to the show? Could you use some pre-war stuff? The answer is the same to all three queries.

Suppose you came back to your hotel and the clerk handed you Ramon Novar-

JUVENILE FEMALE IMPERSONATOR

Looks like Beatrice Sylvia—but it's Jackie. Recognize him? He's disguised as a girl in part of Metro's "A Boy of Flanders," from Ouida's novel.

EVERYONE is susceptible to flattery in the subtle form of having his opinion sought and valued. Everyone likes to see his name in print, and almost everyone believes in his ability to write and in his good judgment as a critic.

Then why not arrange to have some prominent citizen of your community review your feature each week? Select a different prominent person for each picture, and chose one who "matches up" as well as possible with the film. For instance, should the feature be a Western, pick a man who has some familiarity with the way they do things in the great open spaces.

Use the criticism in your newspaper advertising, announcing at the same time that next week's feature will be reviewed by Dr. Blank, or whomever you have selected. Should the critique be adverse, ask the public whether it agrees with the reviewer.

SURPRISE 'em sometimes. Instead of telling how wonderful is each succeeding program come out occasionally with something along this line: "The show this week seemed only fairly good to us—although it knocked 'em dead in New York and Boston and was a wow in Chicago." This thought may be expanded in a diversity of ways, but the appeal for the people to come and judge for themselves always gets across.

THESE days one may procure every kind of insurance imaginable from life to rain. Why not a Happiness Insurance?

Advertise that you guarantee happiness. If your current attraction fails to please, a statement to that effect made to you at the box office will suffice to secure a ticket for the next picture. Or gather some copy by having any one dissatisfied write in giving reasons for the displeasure. The letter may be printed with the usual question as to whether those ro's card, would you read what was written across it? Every hotel guest in Syracuse (and contrary to that story you know, Syracuse is a pretty big town) received the sleek sheik's ticket with the message "Sorry you were out. But you can see me tonight in 'Thy Name Is Woman' at the Strand." They did. So did a topping majority of the three thousand householders who found the cards at their residences.

Cliff says he's going to have some great stuff for you boys pretty quick.

Tried and Proved Pictures

New Flowers from Old Gardens

RAKING one's head for an idea to make the show pay is the fore-runner to making hay while the sun shines. In Tried and Proved Land the sun shines very much on the proverbial order made famous in England. It never sets on the box office potency of the film thoroughbreds in question, at least not while the showman is busy with his idea rake.

So, while wandering about in the showmen's garden, let us consider those film flowers whose very fragrance forecasts the shekel-earning power that tests the box-office till to the bursting point. How—even in the December of their years—to make the old faithful flowers bloom anew, is the question.

Dropping the metaphor, a prologue in keeping with the latest in presentations, to introduce the older but Tried and Proved picture, is the thing.

The combination of an up-to-date, atmospheric prologue with a Tried and Proved attraction is really irresistible to contemplate and one which should find favorable consideration by every showman concerned with preventing malnutrition of the box office. We call it irresistible for two main reasons—although there are a host of others;

BREATHES there a showman with soul so dead

*Who never to himself has said
While the sun shines I must rake hay,
But, oh, for ideas to make the show pay!* —EKIM

one, because a prologue in any case, when properly presented, helps put the audience in sympathy with the bill to follow—in other words, it is a mood builder. Two, because a Tried and Proved picture is in its very nature something that incorporates the essentials which motion picture lovers crave.

THUS, combining an up-to-the-minute prologue with a Tried and Proved Picture gives you a program that bids fair to "pull down the house" and establish you in the minds of your patrons, as a showman who steps off the beaten path in order to satisfy.

Make not the error of considering Tried and Proved Pictures simply old films bidding for new life, and therefore not worth the time and thought which an innovating presentation warrants. The man who thinks along such lines is running tangent to the path that leads to the showman's pot of gold.

Like Shakespeare's tragedies and the operas of the old masters, Tried and Proved pictures are those that have survived the tarnish of public criticism and are pregnant with immeasurable possibilities for live, modern, presentation and treatment.

DUCK the path that leads to a brown taste in the public's mouth by paving the way with an applause-winning prologue. There are various methods of framing up interesting and innovating presentations representing slight outlays of expense. Dancing tableaux comprising local talent, with a prize given for the best dancer, is one way. Local amateur dramatic clubs offer a fertile source for material. In the larger cities, the music publishing houses offer vocalists free. The vocal performance can be maneuvered with managerial ingenuity which will result in a coherent relationship to the rest of the bill, and so forth.

Summing up, Tried and Proved pictures can bring you the geese that will lay golden nest eggs of profit at your door. But the noble flock have to be kept bright and happy by the deft, artistic entertaining touches, which nothing like a good prologue presentation affords.

"The Darling of New York"

Juvenile crook drama Released by Universal
BRIEF: In order to protect themselves and perhaps collect a large ransom, a gang of gem smugglers steal little Baby Peggy and use her as a foil to their plans. She is cast in with a gang in New York's lower East Side and goes through a great number of harrowing experiences before she is finally restored to her family.

BECAUSE of her popularity in the short subject pictures in which she was appearing it was thought wise to place Baby Peggy in feature films. The prediction was fully justified. The child star became an immediate sensation. She hit the bullseye squarely and established herself as a pulling star.

Since the release of this film, the youngster has made several others, each one of which has added just that much more to her popularity. There are people now who are waiting to grab at the opportunity of seeing those of her pictures that previously passed them by. That is why the wise showman will now book or rebook, as the case may be, "The Darling of New York." And especially is it a good hunch, since it provides untold exploitation possibilities.

The stolen gems have been secreted in the clothes of the little rag doll which Baby Peggy has with her at the time she is kidnapped from the Italian pier by the gem smuggler. This fact centers attention on the doll which you will find a very profitable exploitation device. You can arrange with several toy stores, stationers and drug stores in your vicinity for a window display of Baby Peggy dolls which have already become immense favorites with the kids. Pictures of the little actress, posters, and an attractive arrangement of the dolls will do much to give publicity to your showing.

The dolls may also be used by you directly. Announce in your ad columns that every performance there will be given away at your theatre a large Baby Peggy doll to the holder of the lucky number. Each patron upon purchase of a ticket will receive a number. Duplicates will be retained at the box office. Then some one in the audience will select one of these at random and the holder of that number will receive the doll.

Don't ever pass up a chance for some free advertising in the news columns of the local papers. Here's a stunt that should certainly get you some of this coveted space. Arrange to run a contest for the children of the town offering a prize for the child who could double for Baby Peggy. The contest will be decided through pictures which will be published daily or in the Sunday edition of the paper.

This sort of thing has been done before for adults but it is a new gag for babies and is sure to arouse a general interest which the paper will be forced to recognize.

"The Wanters"

Domestic drama Released by First National

BRIEF: A wealthy young man becomes enamored of his sister's maid and the attachment gives rise to a series of problems which lead from one interesting incident to the other. As the story traces its course it points out the moral that everybody wants what the next man has and is never quite satisfied with what he himself has. It is a delightful romance which works out to the satisfaction of the players and the audience.

THE title alone is an exploitation opportunity, that sets a fast pace for the showman who likes to originate and develop concealed ideas.

With memories of "The Dangerous Age" the picture can be exploited on the basis that John Stahl has gone a step forward and backward in the filming of domestic relations. He has gone forward in filling his story with action, humorous touches and dramatic situations.

In the present instance he has gone backward, in comparison with "The Dangerous Age," by depicting the romance of courtship and marriage rather than middle-aged life.

There is a display of lavish gowns, which makes a fashion show appropriate. There is an idea of the old Cinderella theme in the lady's maid who wanted to be beautiful just once.

At first blush the logical emphasis would fall upon newspaper advertisements. A "Wanters" Club could be formed. Work it out along the lines of an employment agency, from this angle:—

"For the Protection of the Wanters Club: we believe that hard work is the solution for everyone who is unhappy through wanting what the other person has. All those who are interested in joining such a society should address"

Any industry that is a big employer of labor ought to co-operate in such a movement to help it find suitable employees.

We also suggest a series of teaser ads:—

"Who Are the Wanters?"

"What Do the Wanters Want?"

"Who Made the Wanters?"

"Are You One of the Wanters?"

This can be amplified later by the statement that "The Wanters" are those dissatisfied people who are always wanting what the other fellow has. The theme can be made the subject of a newspaper essay contest: "How I keep happy," "What I Want Most," "Some Things Other People Have I'd Like."

A series of cartoons illustrating "Whats Wrong With This Picture" idea tied up with the caption, "The Wanters Want to Know" would fill the bill admirably for a teaser campaign.

And when one considers tie-ups, "The Wanters" presents a title that can be applied to any article of merchandise. It is a buying signal for those who want the best quality in everything. You might even be able to arrange for a co-operative ad with several of the merchants and the local newspapers. A single page or a double spread could be arranged for under the title "The Wanters Want." The pages could then be divided up into ads to please the desire of the individual advertiser and gain him full satisfaction.

'Three O'Clock in the Morning'

Flapper Story

Released by C. C. Burr

BRIEF: Returning home with some friends after an all-night party at an inn, a young girl incurs the wrath of her parents and determines to leave home. She finds earning her own living as a cabaret dancer not all that people suppose it to be and she faces many unpleasant affairs before she finally sees the light, repents, and marries the man she loves.

HERE is a picture that has been booked practically one hundred per cent state right and giving satisfaction everywhere it is shown. It happily strikes the public taste and has such a wide appeal that it has done splendid business for small and large house exhibitors.

Portraying the part of the modern girl and her love of all night parties, her independence and her indiscretions, Constance Binney makes a winsome heroine in this fast moving film whose name was suggested by the popular song hit, "Three O'clock in the Morning." Naturally the first thought to exploitation would be in this connection.

Arrangements have been made with Leo Feist Inc., publishers of the song, for a nationwide campaign to back up the showing of the film with displays of the music and it will be a simple matter for you to arrange with the local music shop for a window linking up the picture with a renewed sale of the song. The music has been popular for many months now but is one of the few pieces of current music which still persists. There are still many customers for the sheet music as well as for the phonograph records and music rolls, all of which can be combined to make a very advantageous display.

Take the "Three O'clock in the Morning" proposition to the all-night restaurant and give him this suggestion: In his window he could display a large sign reading: "At 'Three O'clock in the Morning' as well as any other time in the day or night, we are prepared to give you the finest of food and the best of service. After the theatre stop here for a midnight supper. See 'Three O'clock in the Morning' now playing at the.....Theatre."

The name of the production can be graphically impressed on the passerby and your regular patrons, by virtually covering every space in your lobby with large cardboard clock dials with the hands set at three o'clock. These might be plain or fittingly decorated with sketches which tie-up with the subject matter of the production.

'His Children's Children'

Domestic Drama

Released by Paramount

BRIEF: Indulged by wealthy, heedless parents, three young daughters of a modern father and mother grow up into indolent, pleasure loving creatures, selfishly seeking only their own enjoyment. A financial disaster almost breaks up the entire family but just at the critical moment the good in each rises to the rescue and happiness is restored to all together with a more stable sense of responsibility.

HIS Children's Children" is the story of the follies of modern sophisticated society and the home life of a mother and father who indulge in wasteful pleasures and heedlessly permit their children to pursue their vagrant and ruinous fancies. The scenes do not originate from Hollywood sets but are authentic pictures photographed in New York, the place of the story.

How three daughters are brought to a realization of their dangerous foibles and reclaimed, makes the story one of exceptional interest to all women and presents numerous publicity possibilities.

Your most fertile commercial tie-up can be accomplished with the neighborhood book store. "His Children's Children" in book form had a tremendous sales success and still has a great field. With scenes from the photoplay in window card form and a number of copies of the book, the shop owners can arrange an appealing show window. Place in a conspicuous position, a card urging the public to read the story of "Arthur Train's great novel showing now at the.....Theatre."

If you contemplate newspaper advertising, stress the moral lesson to be learned from the picture. A good hunch might be to play up a line like this: "Parents—you owe it to your children to see this picture; the story of a family from the first generation to the third, of human happiness—human weakness—human strength."

In your ads appeal to the women readers. If possible secure space on the woman's page. That the story deals with the home life of ordinary people, and uses as a theme the relation of children to parents in these modern times, is a big selling point to women whose largest interest is in their home and children.

The picture elaborates the folly of reckless expenditure of money. Some advertising value to the banks lies in this fact. Tying up with your picture they can advocate the wisdom of sane banking and carefully considered investments as well as expenditures.

'Reported Missing'

Comedy Drama

Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Richard Boyd has been left the Boyd Shipping Co. as an inheritance, but he is a young man entirely on pleasure bent and he takes no interest at all in the business. An Oriental shipping magnate is anxious to get the fleet and he persuades Boyd to give him an option on it. At this point Richard's sweetheart intervenes and makes him promise not to let the option go through. The Oriental captures them both hoping to hold them until after the option expires but the ship is wrecked and they escape. In a battle at home Boyd kills the Oriental leaving his own path clear to marry the girl.

THE humor of "Reported Missing" is genuine with the result that it gets the laughs. Moreover, the film is sufficiently sprinkled with a quantity of tense situations and real thrills to make the comedy parts even more obvious. Some of these include a race between a hydroplane and a hydroaeroplane, a rough and tumble fight in the villain's house, a series of comedy scenes, and elaborate gowns worn by Nita Naldi and Paulin Garon, the flapper.

The reward proclamation will serve in the exploitation of this film as a keen interest arouser. On every available conspicuous space tack up signs reading: "Reported Missing. Richard Boyd and Pauline Dale. Five hundred dollars reward for information leading to the whereabouts of these two."

Then when the picture appears at your theatre replace these signs by others telling that the missing persons have been recovered and may be seen any afternoon or evening during the week of.....at the.....Theatre.

There have also been prepared, to simplify exploitation, a number and variety of novelties which will broadcast the title of the picture, and impress it on the consciousness of the public. These include a pair of goggles and a nose flap on which is printed the name of the picture, the stars, the date of showing and the name of the local theatre at which it is showing.

There are also novelty folders and throw-aways available and these are sure to delight the kids and please you with their pulling power. Perhaps the best way to distribute them is to get several small boys to go from house to house.

'Wild Bill Hickok'

Western

Released by Paramount

BRIEF: In order to subdue the lawless gang of bad men who are molesting the inhabitants of Dodge City in Kansas and making the place almost unbearable, there is formed a peace committee composed of citizens of the town. Wild Bill Hickok becomes the leader and as such he gets into innumerable tight places from which he has difficulty in extricating himself. But backed morally by an inspiring love he emerges on the top and is the savior of the town.

THIS story of a member of the committee of peace men who are ever on hand to subdue the lawless gang of bad men who inhabit Dodge City a "hard" town in Kansas, is the real he-man type of tale. There is a love element but it is of small account. It is by no means one of the real selling points of the picture.

Instead you should harp on the virile element of the film which concerns the lives of the stalwart frontiersmen. The tie-up that this phase presents is with the sporting goods store or the local shop dealing in army and navy goods. Stills from the picture would make excellent background for a display of heavy boots, warm sweaters, serviceable coats and the like.

The name of Bill Hart is decidedly valuable as an audience getter and for this reason you should get his name in every conceivable locality in your vicinity, advertise it big in your ads and make it prominent in the lobby display.

There is an historical element which enters into the film. The time of the play is the Civil War period and fine characterizations of general Sheridan and Custer, also Lincoln, appear in the story. Armed with this you have good reason for approaching the public schools enlisting the aid of the teachers in recommending the films to the children. You might find it worthwhile to offer cut rate tickets to the children issuing them through schools. You know kids are great talkers and if the picture gets across with them they'll take the glad news to the folks at home.

'The Cleanup'

Comedy-Drama

Released by Universal

BRIEF: Monte Bixby's grandfather leaves him only a dollar in his will and fifty thousand dollars in cash to each citizen of the little town in which he lived. His sweetheart jilts him, as the whole town goes money mad. Crooks arrive to get in on the "clean-up." Monte decides to save the people in spite of himself, and he enlists the aid of his grandfather's former secretary. He succeeds and then finds out that the will was only a hoax to teach him the value of money.

THE fact that the story is simple, yet highly entertaining, and features Herbert Rawlinson in the leading role is probably partially responsible for the fact that this picture has been well attended at small town and neighborhood theatres. It is an admirable picture to fit the average program and given the proper exploitation it will make money for exhibitors who have not yet run it.

This picture lends itself very well to an effective mail campaign. Get a list of the members of clubs and other social or business organizations that are frequented by responsible people and send a brief, well worded letter to each person. Have the substance of the letter read something like this:

"If a man took the pages of our telephone or local directory and left a fortune to every one named on them, what would happen to this thriving town? The answer to this problem is given at (your theatre)"

The title and the nature of the picture suggests innumerable commercial tie-ups that can very easily be arranged. In this connection it will be a simple matter to interest the live-wire merchants in a double truck newspaper advertisement. Each dealer can stage a "Clean Up Sale." Follow the usual line and run your advertisement across the top of the double truck or boxed in the center of the advertisement.

The stores can also have window displays in which the phrase, "The Clean Up" is used and the picture tied up with stills.

Exhibitors Trade Review,
Knickerbocker Bldg.,
42nd Street and Broadway, New York.

Gentlemen:

For some unknown reason I have not received my copy of your most valued paper in three weeks. I am wondering if this is our fault or if the fault is with you.

It might be possible that my subscription has run out, in such case please advise me of same and I will rush check to you for renewal. I will also ask that you please be kind enough to RUSH me the last three copies, as I really more than enjoy them and do not care to miss a single copy.

Thanking you in advance and with kindest regards, I am

Very truly yours,

Durham Amusement Co., Inc.

(Signed) DON NICHOLS, Mgr.

"I do not care to miss a single copy." That is the way every keen, progressive showman feels about the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW. Not only does he miss the pleasure he gets out of reading it but from the point of view of business he actually can't afford to miss any of them.

There is no other trade paper in the field that gives its readers so many constructive ideas and such a variety of suggestions. Every department is a real showmanship department in the sense that it tells the exhibitor how to buy his pictures and sell them to his patrons at the greatest profit to himself.

No wonder this showman is put out when he fails to get his copy. He knows what he is missing. If there is anyone else who is not getting his issue regularly every week we want him to notify the New York office immediately. We realize how much it means to let one week go by without the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

About Theatres— New and Old

SEVERAL new moving picture theatres are projected for Winnipeg, Manitoba, during coming months. The Parkview Theatre, Portage Avenue, which was destroyed by fire last January, is to be rebuilt at a cost of $90,000, according to announced plans, the new house to be on a more modern and more elaborate plan than its predecessor.

H. Gernberg, proprietor of the Palace Theatre, Selkirk Avenue, Winnipeg, is securing a site for a second theatre, he has announced, and will erect an attractive neighborhood house at a cost of $30,000.

Mr. Blainstein has made arrangements for the erection of a moving picture theatre on Stafford Street, Fort Rouge, a suburb of Winnipeg, which is to cost $60,000, construction to start near the end of April.

* * *

The Model Theatre, Danforth Avenue, Toronto, one of the older theatres in the North Eastern section of the Ontario Capital, has been improved by the installation of the latest type of projection equipment, including two De Luxe Motiograph projectors and a Superlite Gold E-Ser Screen. The De Luxe machines have glass enclosed mechanism, motor release clutch, pilot light device, adjustable reel-end alarms and the direct connected motors. The installations were made by J. H. Coleman of the Coleman Electric Company, Toronto, distributor of the equipment.

* * *

F. G. Spencer, who operates a chain of 21 moving picture theatres in the Maritime Provinces of Canada, has concluded arrangements for the erection of a handsome new moving picture theatre on Charlotte Street, St. John, N. B. Mr. Spencer has secured a large site opposite the new "Admiral Beatty" Hotel which is well under construction. The new theatre is to be of large proportions.

* * *

The Princess Theatre at Luling, Texas, is being enlarged and seating capacity increased.

* * *

Acquiring of a long time lease of the old Lake Cliff Casino at Dallas, Texas, has resulted in the buildings being remodeled and turned into the finest motion picture studio east of Los Angeles, Calif., and within a short time the James P. Simpson Company will be operating upon a large scale and turning out western films to the trade.

Julius Levy has commenced the construction of a new theatre at Brady, Texas, to cost about $40,000. It will be fireproof and ornamental in design, and will have a stage for road shows. The theatre will seat about 800.

* * *

The Liberty Theatre at Marietta, Okla., is being improved and a stage for road shows added. A new pipe organ has been installed.

In order to make room for road shows and vaudeville, a stage and dressing room have been added to the Linwood Theatre, Tarkio, Mo. The capacity of the house is 464. Finishing touches are being put on the Marlborough, Theatre, a suburban house of Kansas City, this week and the opening probably will be next week. The new house will seat 1,000 persons.

DENVER PLANS MAGNIFICENT PHOTOPLAY TEMPLE

A new motion picture theatre, costing $1,000,000 and vying with the most famous cinema houses in the country in size and equipment, will be built in Denver, Colo., within the next year, according to an announcement made by Homer E. Ellison on his return from New York this week. The theatre will be built by the Mountain States Theatre Corporation, of which Mr. Ellison is the president and in which Jessie L. Lasky and Adolph Zukor and other officials of the Famous Players-Lasky, which comprises the Paramount organization, will have an interest.

The site has not been selected, but there are several which the company are considering, according to Mr. Ellison. It is expected that this matter will be settled within the next ninety days and work will begin immediately.

BENNETT FILM RENOVATOR MERITS PRAISE

George H. Bennett, inventor and manufacturer of the Bennett Film Renovator, issues a catalogue which is as edifying as it is interesting, concerning his products and the service he renders to clients.

According to Bennett his machine can be operated by any inspector, cleaning about forty reels per day and at the same time turning out two-thirds of a day's quota of inspection.

The Bennett Film Renovator is described as an automatic machine needing no attention after being properly threaded and the motor started. It is propelled by a one-eighth horse power motor that is inclosed in a cast iron box and connects to any light socket with attachment plug and armored cable. It requires a floor space of 18x22 inches.

There are no sprocket wheels, no buffing wheels, no revolving dryer and only two belts. By virtue of its automatic speed change, each foot of film gets an equal treatment.

The Bennett Film Renovator concern invites inquiries from all those interested in the product, following which particulars will be furnished of a nature which it is claimed will cement the closer relationship between manufacturer and inquirer. The firm may be addressed at Argentine Station, Kansas City, Kansas.

NOVELTIES STIMULATE PUBLIC INTEREST IN FILMS

Every exhibitor must have, at some time, found that there is great publicity value to be gained from the use of novelties which directly or indirectly exploit the film he is showing at the time. Every exhibitor who has given an eye to observing through what medium his advertising receives most attention, must have noticed that whereas the ads on handbills, heralds and the like, are often read, they are thrown away immediately after. Not so with novelties. Give any man, woman or child some little novelty, either useful, ornamental, or merely amusing, you will notice he will pocket it, show it to others and often make it the subject of conversation, remarking on its uniqueness or its cleverness.

Consequently, exploitation through the medium of novelties has become very general which in turn has created a demand for things that are unusual and interest arousing. The Weshner Davidson Agency who manufacture novelties of all kinds have gotten out some remarkably successful things that have done much to bring patrons to see the picture advertised.

For instance, the exploitation of Harold Lloyd in "Dr. Jack," by means of Dr. Jack's stove pipe hats made a great stir. The kids went wild over these very inexpensive trifles which they wore in the streets for days.

SIDE LINE TO AID PROFITS

If you are looking about, with the idea of utilizing space and making your profits larger it would be worth your while to get the advertising literature of the Holcomb & Hoke Manufacturing Company, Indianapolis, Ind. They manufacture the "Butter-Kist," corn popping machine and advantages of use in a theatre lobby are obvious, as people like sweets of some sort, while attending the performance.

PERFECTED PROJECTION WORK

It is well to bear in mind that the projector is quite as important as the picture. The Precision Machine Company of New York, carries various hand-driven and motor-driven machines which are being perfected and revised right along, to produce the utmost in projection work. The machine has an exclusive shutter-setting device and sprockets cut on specially designed precision tooth-cutting machines.

Our Gang Comedies

Two Reels

Countless Times They've Saved the show!

Hal Roach's little rascals are actually bigger box-office attractions today than nine-tenths of the feature stars.

The kids are wild over them; older persons chuckle, giggle and roar at them; and exhibitors are sending in more favorable reports on them to the trade papers than are received on any other two reel comedies.

Time and again they have saved the show for exhibitors. They'll do the same for you.

BOYS TO BOARD (Pathe), (two reels). Although this is a good comedy, it is not as good as GIANTS VERSUS YANKS or CHAMPEEN. If they see Our Gang once, you can't pay them to stay away. Try it and see. The film was in good condition.—H. B. Lindblad, Grand, McIntosh, Minn.

CHAMPEEN (Pathe), (two reels). We will recommend these Our Gang comedies as 100 per cent to any showman. The film was in good condition.—Noreen & Fried, Rex, Hutchinson, Minn.

COBBLER (Pathe), (two reels). This one is no different from the rest of the Our Gang comedies. They are all good. The film was in good condition.—H. B. Smoots, Lowell, Little Falls, Minn.

DERBY DAY (Pathe), (two reels). Our patrons are asking for more Our Gang comedies. They are wonderful. The film was in good condition.—M. D. Gowan, Orpheum, Ortonville, Minn.

FIRE FIGHTERS (Pathe), (two reels). This is a very good comedy which pleased our patrons 100 per cent. Our Gang comedies are all good. The film was in good condition.—K. Raddatz, Opera House, Drake, N. D.

FIRE FIGHTERS (Pathe), (two reels). This Our Gang comedy absolutely is a knockout. They can't make them better. These comedies are the best on the market.—M. D. Gowan, Orpheum, Ortonville, Minn.

OUR GANG COMEDIES (Pathe), (two reels). These comedies are always good and can't be beat. They get many good comments from patrons. The film was in good condition.—N. Fisher, University, Minneapolis

OUR GANG COMEDIES (Pathe), (two reels). These are the best two reels on the market. Every one is good. The film was in good condition.—Fred Beecher, Orpheum, Sioux Falls, S. D.

OUR GANG COMEDIES (Pathe), (two reels). We have used about a dozen of these to date and haven't had a bad one. They will hold up a poor feature, for they've done it for us.—C. N. Bontecou, Grand, Howard, S. D.

WHAT'S IN THE AIR

STATION E. T. R. broadcasts its Special Lobbyology Number. A program of showmanship spice and inspiration for putting extra dollars in the theatre coffers. This is made doubly possible by the introduction, for the first time in the history of film business papers, of a complete and comprehensive section of National Tie-Ups. Names made famous through national advertising and trade prestige bring the weight of all their influence to bear in giving the showman free exploitation for Warner Brothers' screen classic "Beau Brummel."

In Hartford, Conn., there is a theatre named the Capitol, which has gained an enviable distinction and patronage through its unique program of Lobbyology. On page 14 is an account of the methods by which the house has gone "over the top." Read it—then go thou and do likewise.

Speaking of Lobbyology, there are more than a score of sound, selling sentiments in "Salesman Extraordinary—The Lobby," by Irving Lesser, Vice-president of Principal. Read it on page 15.

STAND BY for next week's Special Producers Number. Tells you all about attractions scheduled for future release. Takes you back of the scenes of the producing companies' plans, so that you can know what is in the cards for you the coming season.

No less distinctive than the one which makes its auspicious start in the present issue will be next week's National Tie-Up Section. It will center around Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's splendid picturization of the famous Rex Beach story, "Recoil." Many opportunities for high-power, free advertising will be offered. If you have any concern for your position in the showmanship world, you'll run to meet the postman, when he delivers Next Week's Special Producers Number.

The Name That Represents
 'The Last Word in Good Taste'
 'BEAU BRUMMEL'

YEARS AGO—during the reign of King George III in England—there lived George Bryan Brummel. Disappointed in love, he decided to break a few hearts himself. To accomplish his peculiar task, he turned fashion plate and eventually became the authority on "Good Taste." Today the name "Beau Brummel" still stands for just that. In the Warner Brothers' Screen Classic version of the story, John Barrymore aptly suggests the last word of good taste exploitation in plenty of national tie-up ideas.

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

Bankers Are Most Friendly To Industry, Says Dr. Giannini

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

THE denunciation by Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky, last week of the excess bonus men, the "30 per cent. parasites," has aroused anew interest in the whole question of the influence upon the industry of practices which openly have been charged as "unsound banking."

Exhibitors have manifested more or less concern in the situation by reason of the possible reaction of these charges in the form of increased rentals as a result of higher production costs.

The remarks of Mr. Zukor were made after Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of the Commercial Trust Company, speaking at the luncheon given by J. D. Williams, president of Ritz Pictures, in honor of Hugh D. McIntosh of Australia, had declared that "there are only a few fellows left that we have to fight, men who do no good to the industry."

Must 'Sell' Associates

The speaker invited those present to join with him in smashing the bonus men in the business, the "vicious ones." He went on to say that following his remarks at the recent T. N. T. dinner he had received threatening words, but declared they did not worry him.

When the doctor was seen this week he told of five men who had visited him since the dinner mentioned and asked him to advance money on a proposition in which the only tangible asset was a story.

Informed that such action was impossible the men invariably replied that they would be thrown into the hands of the "bonus sharks." The doctor expressed his regrets, but pointed out that in a bank there were certain protections thrown out by law under which it was necessary for accounts to pass the scrutiny of cold-blooded examiners, clearing house and national.

Also before loans were made it was necessary for the official handling the matter to "sell" his associates and his board of directors, to convince them that the request, if granted, would result in a safe investment.

When the doctor was asked to outline just what he considered a banking proposition in a matter of motion picture production he said it was customary to loan 20 to 25 per cent. Into this, of course, there enters the personal equation.

If the borrower represents a going concern, if his company is headed by men of ability as well as of integrity, if the organization is one that always has met its obligations and has working capital paid in, if it is not a continuous borrower but on the contrary occasionally shows a clean slate, then the size of the loan may be increased according to the surrounding circumstances anywhere from 5 to 25 per cent. additional.

Dr. Giannini laid especial emphasis on the "personal equation" saying that in banking as in everyday business in other lines, integrity counts heavily.

Not a Reformer

"I am not a reformer," said the doctor. "Neither do I care to be so regarded. But while my family are and have been bankers I was educated in medicine, and you can understand that a part of that education was the driving in of professional ethics.

"But there are ethics in the banking business — and among the things that are proscribed is the loaning of money on insufficient collateral.

"For a long time there was a feeling among financial men that the motion picture business was one involving unusual risks, but I repeat what I have said before, publicly as well as privately, that when there are applied to the motion picture business the same rules that are laid down for other trades it is no more hazardous than is any other industry. It is simply a case of exercising the everyday selective processes."

Dr. Giannini told of the changed and changing attitude of bankers toward the motion picture as a business. When the doctor came to the town, a stranger, he found the industries which contained what were considered the more desirable banking customers were controlled by their own banks.

Looking over the field he noted there was none for the motion picture. Having a good working knowledge of the industry by reason of his California connections he concluded to specialize, as it were, in the concerns he knew were controlled by their own banks.

Antagonism Lessening

That was a long time ago. In the intervening years he has seen a lessening of the initial antagonism toward the industry. He has seen it shift from open opposition to the point where the every-day bank director will scrutinize a picture proposition with the same mind that he will bring to one from another industry.

In fact, he has seen bank examiners scan motion picture entries without frowning.

Joseph M. Schenck is a director of the East River Bank of New York, of which Dr. Giannini also is president, and of the Bank of Italy, with 70 offices in Los Angeles and San Francisco and throughout California.

When Mr. Schenck first became a director a number of the motion picture men demurred, saying their business would be thrown open to the inspection of a competitor. They were assured by the doctor that might be true, but also they would have on the board of directors of the institution a man who knew the business of production and who could aid in the favorable consideration of worthy applications.

Cecil De Mille a Director

Nicholas Schenck, a brother of Joseph M., is a director of the Commercial Trust in New York, and Cecil B. De Mille is a director of the Commercial National Bank of Los Angeles, an institution affiliated with the Bank of Italy.

Dr. Giannini declared that much of the "grief" experienced by producing companies in the past could be ascribed to the "excess bonus men," the "vicious" ones, whose exactions had threatened the existence of some organizations and with others had put them out of business.

"Of course," said the doctor in conclusion, "you may say the producers in these cases were willing partners, but that doesn't mitigate the offense of the 'bonus boys' as it looks to me."

Clancy's 'Corner' on Lobbyology

In Which a Lobby Became an Institution

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

HAVE you heard of Clancy's "Cozy Corner?" Sounds like the name of a theatre or a hole-in-the-wall chop house, or perhaps even a boarding house. But in this case it is none of these. The cozy corner, or to be more precise, the "Corner" is what J. F. Clancy, skipper at the helm of Poli's Capitol Theatre of Hartford, Conn., calls his lobby.

Mr. Clancy is not the only person who calls this lobby the "Corner." Most folks in the community, and in fact, the whole city of Hartford have this pet name for Mr. Clancy's famous lobby pretty well established in their minds.

To give a graphic illustration of what the "Corner" means to local movie goers we shall quote Mr. Clancy: "Sitting opposite me in a restaurant a few days ago were two girls. Upon finishing their lunch one turned to the other and said, 'Where will we go?'"

"I'll tell you," remarked her companion, 'Let's go down to the Capitol and see what they've got in the 'Corner.'"

When one allows the substance of this last remark to filter through one's mind, one inevitably comes to the conclusion that the "Corner," or Clancy's lobby, to be literal, is endowed with a significant personality all its own. The history of this lobby is an interesting one. In 1920, when the Capitol was first opened, this "Corner" was part of a mammoth lobby, set aside by S. Z. Poli for a candy booth.

One day a representative of the Hartford Electric Company called on Mr. Clancy with an idea. He wanted to tie up with a picture—Mary Pickford in "Suds." He exhibited a national magazine devoted to the lighting industry which contained a story of how an electric lighting company of Denver had achieved a great amount of publicity for a certain electrically driven washing machine. He wanted to put one of these machines in Clancy's lobby.

THE idea seemed at first repulsive to Clancy's artistic instincts, but the ever lurking spirit of showmanship came to the surface and Clancy quickly conceived of an idea of presenting this lobby innovation in an artistic fashion. He had the "Corner" boarded over and his scenic artist paint a kitchen setting for a background and the washing machine placed in the center.

Water and a liberal supply of soft soap were fed into the machine and pretty soon the whole was a Niagara of downy, lathery bubbles, which at a certain point, toppled over, and started a myriad of bubbles anew. The machine attracted so much attention that the corner in which it was displayed became an institution in connection with the Capitol's advertising of its coming attractions. Since then there never has been a week that the "Corner" has not contained something of an advertising character in connection with a future program.

AS an illustration of how widespread has been the interest in Clancy's "Corner" it would be particularly apt to mention the following incident. A few weeks ago the enterprising showman was asked to deliver an address before the Hartford Advertising Club on "Theatrical Advertising." Hartford is the insurance center of the world, and as a result is a big national advertiser. The members of the club are, to use Clancy's term, more or less "hard-boiled" when it comes to the considerations of advertising. At the completion of the address the president of the organization asked Mr. Clancy if he would care to be interrogated by the members. Clancy assented.

Fully 75 per cent of the questions submitted were in relation to the Capitol's lobby displays, which invariably were referred to as products of the "Corner."

J. F. CLANCY

Manager of Poli's Capitol Theatre of Hartford, Conn., who made his lobby as famous an institution as the theatre. His slogan is "Lobbyology Plus."

Mr. Clancy's philosophy of Lobbyology is best summed up in his own words: "To my mind a theatre lobby is to the showman what a window is to a wide awake, up-to-date merchant. The more attractive he can make his window the greater the number of people who are going to stop and inspect his merchandise. The lobby is the showman's showcase."

"With us, at the Capitol, it is a tremendous asset. We do not go in for false fronts. We keep our displays artistic by giving a proper attention to the details of realism and human interest, just as an author considers such details in molding characterization or plot."

THE 'Corner' has had stills duplicated in oils, which proved very effective. We have used wax figures from department stores to illustrate our pictures. We have built mechanical effects, like a boat sailing up and down the waves to illustrate, 'On the High Seas.'

"A lobby can be a thing of evil if allowed to disintegrate, as many of them do, or it can be made a tremendous asset for good, with the proper aforethought, attention to detail and study that all worth-while things require."

Which is a specific "mouthful" of facts that carries no uncertainty as to what is in back of this enterprising exhibitor's mind.

Exploitation in its subtle sense receives its due share of application. This was evinced with specific concreteness when, during a school holiday week, Clancy played Mary Pickford in "Pollyana." His best bet was to interest school children. He had drawn up a picture in the character she played, printed it on paper with rules and regulations for a contest in which the child who drew the best sketch would get a prize.

He secured permission of the school board to hold the contest in the drawing rooms of the school. Every teacher chose the five best sketches from her particular room. The principal of the school chose the ten best from those which all the teachers had picked and then a committee of citizens chose the three best from these. He had, also, every teacher send all the drawings to his office and he had them mounted on cards for his lobby display.

Every child that had drawn a sketch was so anxious to have its mother and father and sister and brother see the sketch, that the display in his lobby was a sensation for a whole week.

That typifies the Clancy kind of Lobbyology Plus.

THE Rialto Theatre of Enid, Oklahoma, was on its figurative toes, selling the Principal feature through the unquestioned lure of lobby display. The box-office till gave eloquent proof of the efficacy of the use of Lobbyology.

FORTY-SECOND STREET has its opinion of the value of cut-outs over the marquee, as evidenced in the dress of the Cameo Theatre when it played Principal's "When a Man's a Man."

Salesman Extraordinary--The Lobby

By IRVING M. LESSER

Vice President Principal Pictures Corporation

IF Sigmund Freud, the noted psychoanalyst, ever tried to delve into the whys and wherefores of motion picture lobbies and lobby displays he would find himself confronted by most interesting problems.

For back of the lobby display is the psychology of dragging people into your theatre; and back of all of that is the art of understanding human emotions. Our commercial life in every field demands of the business man that he possess the ability to sell an idea. And that applies everywhere, from the pack peddler to the Captain of Industry.

But it applies particularly to the motion picture theatre owner. He shows a picture for one, three or seven days or two weeks or more. Within the allotted time that the feature is to run he must make all he can out of it. To a certain extent he is dealing in "perishable goods." For after he puts a picture on once he rarely is able to show the same picture again. He must get his crowds and get them in a hurry. Moreover, he must hold them; for unless a man owns a transient house he wants to build up regular patronage.

Bearing all of these points in mind it necessarily follows that an exhibitor can't afford to aim blindly in arranging one of his most important adjuncts to drawing crowds—his lobby. Every showman knows that most of his motion picture patrons to-day go "shopping" for entertainment. Mr. and Mrs. Smith and the kids decide to attend a picture show. When they leave the house they have no definite theatre in sight, although they may have looked over the ads in the newspapers or Mr. Smith or Mrs. Smith may have seen some billboards which attracted their attention.

They stroll down the street, pause in front of a picture house and look over the lobby display. If it is a good one they probably go in; if it lacks punch they may be inclined to look further.

So it's up to the exhibitor to make his lobby a magnet for passersby. Getting back to the psychology of lobbies let's consider the following points as bearing on the mental make-up of Americans.

DECENCY—Every American who works and bears his or her responsibilities in life possesses a strong love of decency. Suggestive or vulgar drawings or phrases have a repellant effect on the average American mind. There may be a few sections in which erotic displays attract crowds; but the exhibitor who is in the business to up-build for himself doesn't want that class of patronage.

TRUTH—Old General Hoakum passed away with the ten-cent circus, the patent medicine barker and the gasoline torches. The public may have liked to be bunked in Barnum's day, but today it lives up to what Abraham Lincoln said about fooling all of the people all of the time. It simply can't be done. Your picture patron wants to know the truth about your show before he goes to see it. You can tell it to him in gaudy language and coloring; but the goddess of truth must be smiling in the lobby.

LOVE—It makes the world go round. All the world loves a lover. But he or she must be the right kind—the ideal American type. The American heart is as big as the firmament and as honest as the sun. There is nothing an American likes better than heart appeal. For instance, take the good old melodramas that preceded motion pictures; take also the pictures that have had the greatest success. In every one of them you find simple stories with strong heart appeal.

JEALOUSY—The green-eyed monster stalks everywhere and is found in every home. Your public likes to study it.

HATRED—Another despised creature. Everyone wants to know more about it and no one ever will understand it.

REVENGE—The hero and the heroine must have it and the villains must be foiled or Mr. and Mrs. Smith won't sleep well that night. This is simply an American trait.

HUMOR—It must be clean, devoid of suggestiveness or any hint of vulgarity.

Now then, taking all of these traits and passions in a group you find that they supply you with the material for every lobby display you have had and

THE manager of the Broadway Theatre in Winston-Salem, N. C. knows psychology, hence the baseball score board on the marquee to attract attention to First National's "Painted People"

A DANCING figure of Gloria Swanson makes an excellent lobby cutout as proven by Manager Hart of the Palace Theatre in El Paso, Texas, where he employed it for Paramount's "Zaza," BRIGHT lights and flying pennants made everyone in St. Paul, Minnesota, know that Universal's "Hunchback of Notre Dame" was playing at the Garrick Theatre.

A painted papier mache front can make your entire house look different. That is how this unusual effect was achieved to draw crowds to Vitagraph's "The Man From Brodneys" when it played at the Rialto Theatre in Wenatchee, Wisconsin.

‘Variety Is the Spice of’—Lobbyology

Old Lady Astor Says

HOWARD DIETZ, whose picture appears in this issue, during his four years as director of advertising and publicity for Goldwyn, has engineered many national advertising campaigns as well as prepared oodles of copy for the business papers. He has written articles for Advertising and Selling Magazine. For recreation he has under the pseudonym of "Freckles" penned excellent verse which has appeared in "colyums" of Don Marquis, F. P. A. and other New York newspaper celebrities. Before entering the motion picture business he was for several years a reporter on the New York American. It goes without saying he is a member of the A. M. P. A., and it may be added he is one of its shining lights.

AL H. WOODS will sail shortly for England, where he will complete arrangements to open the new Capitol Theatre in London, on which he has a fifty-year lease. The theatre will be ready July 15. It is situated in Piccadilly Circus and will contain 2,500 seats. The theatre's policy will resemble that of the New York Capitol and Strand, and will be the first American plan picture theatre in the British metropolis. It is intended to install a forty piece orchestra.

JOHN HARRISON LEVEE is a newcomer in the home of M. C. Levee, the chief of United Studios at the west coast. The arrival tipped the scales at six pounds. His elder is quoted as saying, "If he wants to be President of the United States I will not stand in his way, but he will not be a movie producer, director or actor." This is the same old story. It is the aim of every father to keep his offspring as far away from his own profession as possible.

P. A. PARSONS, advertising manager for Pathe Exchange Inc., is receiving the sympathy of his friends on account of the sudden death of his father, C. L. Parsons, who passed away last week at his home in New Jersey.

SYD WALKER, famous for his characterization of Old Bill in the stage and film production of Captain Bairnsfather's creation, is in New York. Accompanying him is John Harding of International Productions. The two Englishmen have been entertained by well known players and are looking forward to a month's visit on the coast. Mr. Walker is on a hunt for information seeking to find out how Americans do it in their home studios. Those who meet him will find him an all around good chap. Incidentally he has in his record one of the most successful runs in the history of the English stage.

HENRY MORTON, proprietor of three picture theatres in Winnipeg—the Park, Monarch and Gaiety—has been paying a visit to his mother in Boston. Meanwhile the Manitoba exhibitor is taking a bit of a vacation.

LOIS WILSON has returned to Hollywood after a stay in the East for more than six months. Before going south to be featured in a Hodkinson picture Miss Wilson completed her characterization of the Queen in "Monsieur Beaucaire," in which Rudolph Valentino will be starred for Famous Players. Miss Wilson may play in many pictures. It is doubtful if ever she will register a more thorough hit than she did in "The Covered Wagon." After her work in that her fame is secure. It may be added the same may be said of several of her fellow players.

EMIL E. SHAUER, director of the Foreign Department of Famous Players-Lasky, is entertaining three visitors from abroad. They are William C. Winship of Mexico City, district manager of the Paramount organization in Mexico and Central America; Clarence C. Maragon, branch manager at Guatemala City, Guatemala, and Ary de Lim, a member of the sales staff of the Paramount office at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. These are the last of seven foreign representatives who have been called to New York by Mr. Shauer for a conference regarding the enlargement of Paramount's foreign business.

ERNEST R. BYCK, although deaf and dumb, is said to be making a real success as an exhibitor in Tannersville and Haines Falls in the Catskill region in New York State. Mr. Byck is about to open a third house at Hunter. He makes his own bookings, and according to film salesmen is as shrewd as they make 'em. Mr. Byck has an advantage over his brother exhibitors in that being deaf the salesman is shut out of many a pretty yarn. Likewise being of an untalkative disposition the salesman has no excuse to prolong the conversation.

WILLIAM A. BRADY is well known to many exhibitors as well as other followers of the amusement business. Mr. Brady has talked to exhibitors on several occasions, some of them heated, at national conventions. If his friends the theatre owners could have seen him Sunday night at the Greenroom Revel playing the part of King Lear they would have been surprised. The stage and screen producer appeared in all the panoply of kingly robes and flowing locks and beard. He read his lines with the fire and the precision of an old-time Shakespearean player. He was given a remarkable demonstration at the conclusion of his "turn."

CHARLES KNICKERBOCKER has been transferred from Kansas City to Minneapolis by the Hodkinson Company. Another change in branch executives is announced by Hodkinson, which is engaging Herman Stern, former Universal manager at Des Moines, to take charge of the Omaha branch.

RICHARD BARTHELMLESS stated prior to the release of "The Enchanted Cottage" that he believed he had made something different. Very likely everyone who has seen this fine production will agree that he has. Not the least interesting of the novel picture is the remarkable change in the appearance of Mae McAvoy in the make-up of a girl of plain features. She is hardly recognizable in the part, and very few indeed will be aware of the identity of the player until the picture is well under way. Mr. Barthelmess deserves credit for his courage in undertaking the subject, which has a fine and wholesome theme. Here's hoping that it pays out, and certainly it deserves to.

Metro-Goldwyn Merger Makes Strongest Unit In Picture Industry

METRO PICTURES, Goldwyn Pictures and Louis B. Mayer Company, April 18, formally merged their immense holdings into an amalgamation which will also include the distribution of Cosmopolitan Productions. The combined company will in point of magnitude, influence, and physical scope be the peer of any other film organization in the world.

The negotiations which have been in progress for some time were initiated by F. J. Godsol, President of Goldwyn, and were completed with the signing of papers by the principals.

The name of the merged corporation will be Metro-Goldwyn Corporation. In addition to F. J. Godsol, Edward Bowes, vice-president of Goldwyn, will be on the board of directors and actively associated with the Amalgamated Company, as will also Messmore Kendall and William Braden. Louis B. Mayer will be vice-president in charge of all production activities.

The consolidation is intended to eliminate waste in production, to make bigger and better pictures at less cost, to furnish better service to exhibitors, and to accomplish a tremendous saving in distribution. The merger will in no way submerge the Goldwyn Company or eliminate or curtail its producing and distributing organization.

Goldwyn executives and the Goldwyn organization will be retained throughout. This statement, issued by Marcus Loew, is a flat denial of various unfounded reports that Goldwyn would disappear from the field after the merger with Metro.

The amalgamation brings to the support of the Metro-Goldwyn Company the immense Loew chain of theatres and the large number of houses which Goldwyn at present controls throughout the country, the most important being the Capitol Theatre, New York.

Goldwyn owns a half interest in the Capitol, the other half interest being owned by More-dall Realty Corporation, of which Messmore Kendall is president and Edward Bowes vice-president and managing director.

The policy and personnel of the Capitol will remain absolutely unchanged. Also included in the deal are two theatres in Los Angeles, the California and Miller's; theatres in Seattle and Tacoma, Washington and Portland, Oregon, of which one-half is owned by Goldwyn and one-half by W. R. Hearst; also the Ascher Circuit of houses in Chicago and adjacent territory, comprising more than twenty theatres in which the Goldwyn Company owns a one-half interest.

MARCUS LOEW

The Goldwyn Studios at Culver City, covering (40 acres), among the largest and finest studio properties in the world, is also included in the merger, and will be the producing center of the combined companies.

Mr. Loew, in commenting on the amalgamation and explaining the status of the four companies in the merger, added:

"The motion picture business is going through a stabilizing process and is working itself out on sane economic principles. Through combining our forces in the best interests of all parties to the merger, Metro, Goldwyn, Cosmopolitan and Louis B. Mayer Company are going a long way in the right direction. In order to obtain the greatest efficiency and economy in production, such a step was inevitable.

Every other business has experienced the same difficulties in its beginnings, and has come to realize the economic necessity of centralization. In the railroad business, for instance, this was brought about by the Union Pacific, the Southern Pacific, the Central Pacific and the Illinois Central, who gradually achieved the amalgamation of all the western roads. They were centralized, as they are today, yet all retain their individuality.

"The merger will accomplish mutual savings that will react to the benefit of the exhibitor, and through the exhibitor to the public, which is what we wish to bring about."

Marcus Loew's position as the heaviest theatre owner in the country will be greatly strengthened.

The combined organization of Metro, Goldwyn, Cosmopolitan and Mayer will have for release the coming season, as a result of the merger, such immense productions as "Ben Hur," now being filmed in Italy by arrangement with A. L. Erlanger; Rex Ingram's "The Arab," recently filmed in North Africa; Marshall Neilan's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," now being completed; and Eric Von Stroheim's "Greed," which has been a year in the making.

Other well known directors for the new amalgamation will include Clarence Badger, Reginald Barker, Frank Borzage, Charles Brabin, Edward Cline, Alan Crosland, Scott Dunlap, Emmett Flynn, Hobart Henley, E. Mason Hopper, Rupert Hughes, Robert Z. Leonard, Fred Niblo, Harry Rapf, J. Parker Read, Jr., Victor Schertzinger, Victor Seastrom, King Vidor, Robert Vignola and others.

Mayer Production Head of Merged Companies

LOUIS B. MAYER, newly elected vice-president in charge of all production activities of the amalgamated Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, who will have associated with him two of the best known executives in the industry, Irving G. Thalberg and Harry Rapf, has arrived with his staff at the California studios of his company and assumed charge of the numerous producing units at work there. Production plans being laid are the most extensive in the history of the combined organizations.

Irving G. Thalberg, who has been with Mr. Mayer the past year, was formerly director general of the Universal Company. Harry Rapf, one of the best known independent producers in the industry with a long record of consistent box office successes, was releasing under the Warner banner just previous to joining the Mayer forces. He will make three productions for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Recognized in the industry today as one of the most constructive forces in motion pictures, and as the ablest authority on production, Mr. Mayer has an exceptionally broad understanding of the industry as a whole. An exhibitor before he turned producer, with heavy theatre ownings in New England, he was in the closest possible touch with the public. It was this intimate contact with the movie-going public, the opportunity to study what it did and did not want, the things it would or would not patronize, that inspired Mr. Mayer to become a producer "on his own."

Like more than one celebrated magnate in the theatrical or film world, Louis B. Mayer came to America as a Russian immigrant at the age of two. In St. John, New Brunswick, where his family settled, he became at the age of fourteen the head of a marine wrecking firm whose business was salvaging ships.

History is silent on the motive that turned the future producer to other fields of action, but it is recorded that his first movie venture was as owner of a theatre in Haverhill, Mass. This was in the days when "The Birth of a Nation" was setting the world on fire. Mr. Mayer, with keen forethought and business daring, determined to warm his own hands in the blaze, and acquired the New England rights to the big Griffith picture.

The small fortune he amassed from his venture provided him with the means to embark on production of his own, and he rapidly gained prominence as the most important independent producer in the industry. By such current box-office and artistic successes of the past season as "Thy Name Is Woman," "Women Who Give," "Pleasure Mad," "The Eternal Struggle," and "Strangers of the Night," Mr. Mayer solidly established himself as one of the most farsighted showmen in the business.

One of Mr. Mayer's first directors when he engaged in producing was "Mickey" Neilan and the story goes that Mr. Neilan's mounting expenditures in the customary film habit, nearly gave the ambitious producer "cold feet." It is an interesting coincidence that the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer merger brings the two men together again in their former relationship, for Neilan is directing "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" for Mr. Mayer's company. Further, Mr. Mayer announces that on the completion of "Tess," Mr. Neilan will direct other Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures, in which Blanche Sweet will also be starred!

AT LAST 'MAH-JONG'

Every little while W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, puts over a new one and now he announces what no less an authority than Mr. Jules Mastbaum, President of The Stanley Company of America, says is so good that he paid the highest price for it ever paid for two reels for The Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, where it opened Monday.

"The Mysteries of Mah-Jong," produced for Arrow Film Corporation by Norman Jefferies, an expert in the 3000 year old Chinese game, is a treat for the advanced Mah-Jong player as well as the beginner.

What they play with, how it is played, what not to do, how to score and some clever comedy on how it is done in some of the "best circles," keeps the audience interest at top notch, while the titles give every one a laugh.

COMPETITION IN SCHENECTADY

There is the stiffest kind of a fight going on these days for patronage in Schenectady, N. Y., between the State, Strand and Albany theatres, owned and controlled by the Farash Company, and the Barcli, which is owned by R. V. Erk, of Illion. For instance this week sees "Strongheart" at the Strand; "Sporting Youth" at the Albany; "Shadows of Paris" at the State, bucking "The Marriage Circle" at the Barcli, and "A Boy of Flanders" at Proctor's. Later on "Girl Shy" will be used at the Strand in bucking "The White Sister" at the Barcli, at which admission prices will be increased.

Books and Pictures

ONE night last week we picked up a book and read it for a couple of hours. After sticking it out for a hundred pages the book was laid down in despair. It was a new book, too, published in 1924 as the exasperating Roman numerals certified—a first run, so to speak.

So suddenly was it borne in on the reader that he was wasting his time that the book was laid down while its bored victim was in the middle of a chapter.

Taking a drink—of water—we went to a bookcase and looked for—what is your guess? Why, to be sure, for something that was Tried and Proved, for a message that had something to recommend it other than a place on a shelf.

That reminded us of the pictures, it's so different. When we enter a theatre we are set for the show unless we see fit to walk out on it. We can't turn around to a shelf and select something more to our liking.

What was the book selected? Why, "Arabian Nights"—no, Mr. Fairbanks need not write—one which we were assured in the beginning was "translated and arranged for family reading." Maybe it was, but not enough to hurt a great deal.

Anyway, we continued reading into the "wee sma'." We read stories we had read before, but they were so fascinating they were like new.

And so it is with pictures: If they have withstood the gaffs of time there must be in them an appeal which cannot be denied.

When in doubt as to the quality of a subject which you know has been in circulation for a considerable period ask one of your brother exhibitors as to his experience with it.

If his word backs up what previously you had reason to believe to be the fact—that the picture is "the goods"—and your clientele has not had the privilege of seeing it, then it is Tried and Proved.

The next thing to a fine new picture is a fine picture.

Paramount Will Recognize Exceptional Work of Sales Employees

FORMATION of the Paramount 100 Per Cent Club and the provision for group insurance of salesmen, head bookers and exchange advertising sales managers, were outstanding announcements made by General Manager S. R. Kent at the divisional sales convention of the Paramount department of distribution which closed a three-day session at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York, April 19.

As stated by Mr. Kent, the Paramount 100 Per Cent Club will be a continuing organization with changing personnel and will be made up of eighteen salesmen who, because of their character, deportment and efficiency are deemed best representative of Paramount in the field. This group will meet yearly as a council, will sit in on sessions of the company's executives and by the exchange of ideas will be able to advise on the operations of the company from the viewpoint of the men in the field. Promotions in the department will be made from the 100 Per Cent Club.

In addition to these advantages, each member of the club will receive an annual bonus of $750 and a paid up life insurance policy in the Equitable Life Assurance Society for $3,000. The first year a salesman becomes a member of the club the life insurance will be for the term of two years. If the salesman qualifies for a second year in the club, the policy will run for five years.

According to the group insurance plan, each salesman, head booker and advertising sales manager who has completed six months of continuous service is insured on a straight life policy for $1,000.

The policies, which are issued by the Equitable Life Insurance Society and are non-assignable, were distributed at the convention by Mr. Kent and are dated March 1.

Each policy-holding employee is given a quota to fill during the fiscal year ending April 30, and should he be successful in filling this quota he has his insurance increased to $3,000, to be in force throughout the succeeding year. The insurance is carried free of any expense to the insured, as long as he remains in the employ of the Department of Distribution. In case of total disability through injury or disease the full amount of the insurance will be paid in cash installments starting six months after the submission of proof of disability.

In a signed letter incorporated in each policy Mr. Kent said:

"I trust you will recognize in this arrangement an effort to give a concrete manifestation of a very genuine interest which I feel in all of 'Paramount' in the world of motion pictures and at the same time of maintaining in our department of distribution a real human family where men are interested as much in the helpful effort of one for the other as in achieving dollars and cents results. This is only a step toward what will be possible if we all continue in the future with the same spirit of loyal co-operation and industrious effort which has been exhibited in the past."

The home office convention delegation, which includes Adolph Zukor, S. R. Kent, George W. Weeks, John D. Clark, E. E. Shauer, Mel Shauer, G. B. J. Frawley, M. H. Lewis, Philip Reisman, C. E. McCarthy, A. M. Botsford and A. O. Dillenberg, left New York April 19 for Chicago, where the second of the series of divisional conventions was in session at the Drake Hotel Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, with Divisional Sales Manager George W. Weeks presiding. Wednesday night the delegation entrained for San Francisco, where the West Coast convention will be held next week.

SELZNICK FIGURING ON NEW DISTRIBUTION

Plan to Take Output of One of the Largest Producing Companies

ARRANGEMENTS are now nearing completion for the acquisition by the Selznick Distributing Corporation of the output of one of the leading producing organizations in the industry, according to an announcement from the Selznick office.

Negotiations for the addition of these important productions to the Selznick list of future releases have been going on for some time, and they are now believed to be in such shape that a definite detailed statement will be possible shortly.

The producing company in the negotiations has under contract a number of notable stars, and has film rights to stories which have been outstanding successes in book and play form. The addition of its product will be line with the plan of the Selznick Company to acquire high-grade product.

The Selznick releases for the next six months comprise an important array of features. Those already known include "The Passionate Adventurer," being made in England under the supervision of Myron Selznick, with an American cast including Alice Joyce as star and Marjorie Daw as a featured player, and several other specials in preparation with prominent artists starred.

"Missing Daughters," a melodramatic special, has just been acquired by Selco Pictures, Inc., for release within the next month.

"White Shadows," starring Betty Compson in a dual role, is also on the list for Spring release.

Stars of the first water are no rarity on this Spring and Summer release list. George Arliss is the star in "$20 a Week," a distinctive comedy drama which has been praised highly by the trade reviewers.

"Roulette" a current release, has twelve featured players. Completing the Spring list are "Daughters of Today," a Rollin S. Sturgeon production of modern youth having its fling; "Flapper Wives," written and produced by Jane Murfin, and "Pagan Passions," with Rosemary Theby, Wyndham Standing and Tully Marshall.

NEW YORK'S GOLF TOURNEY SET FOR JUNE 4

The Spring Film Golf Tournament will be held on Wednesday, June 4, at the Sound View Golf Club, Great Neck, Long Island.

From the interest aroused in preceding tournaments the committee in charge feels that the forthcoming event will establish a record for large attendance. This will be the sixth film tournament held. At the first there were 60 players and at the last event 244 sat down to dinner. These figures are interesting only because they demonstrate the interest which has been aroused by these successful affairs.

The committee in charge consists of E. K. Gillette, Motion Picture News; Felix Feist, Joseph Schenck Productions; Abe Warner, Warner Brothers; George B. Gallup, Associated First National, and Danny of The Film Daily. Checks may be mailed to any of the committee.

HOBART NOW PRESIDENT OF DISTINCTIVE

Jefferson Seligman Chosen Member of Board of Directors

HENRY M. HOBART was elected president of Distinctive Pictures Corporation at the annual meeting held Tuesday night, April 22, in the offices at 366 Madison Avenue. Mr. Hobart was one of the organizers of Distinctive and has been in charge of all production.

Earlier in the day a meeting of Distinctive stockholders was held, at which Jefferson Seligman, of the banking firm of J. & W. Seligman & Company, was added to the Board of Directors. The board is now constituted as follows: Mr. Hobart, Charles S. Hervey, Winthrop Aldrich, Jefferson Seligman and Richard Whitney.

Mr. Hervey was re-elected treasurer, Richard Whitney was named as assistant treasurer, and Cornelius H. Miller was elected secretary. Announcement of Distinctive's future plans will be made in the next few weeks.

Mr. Hobart was with the International Film Company before he organized Distinctive.

BRITISH FILM MEN ARE VISITING HERE

Syd Walker and John Harding Will Study American Methods

SEARCHING for American players and play material for production in London and Berlin, Syd Walker and John Harding of International Productions, Ltd., 19 Charing Cross Road, London, arrived last week in New York and are stopping at the Hotel Algonquin.

Prior to embarking in International Productions, Ltd., Mr. Walker was well known in England for his creation of the character of Old Bill in the film and the stage production of Bairnsfather's famous comedy type.

Mr. Harding has served in the British film industry for 10 years as executive director and artist. Together they had the vision of plays made in foreign lands but utilizing American production talent.

After two weeks in New York, Messrs. Walker and Harding will go to Hollywood where they will spend approximately a month studying American production methods. Mr. Walker, incidentally, will call upon his old professional colleague, Charles Chaplin, who appeared with him in the Karno production "Mumming Birds" long before Mr. Chaplin attained his present fame.

Upon their arrival in Manhattan, Messrs. Walker and Harding visited the Fox Studios and were impressed with the remarkable efficiency under which this great plant operates.

Release through a prominent American distributing firm is being arranged and a definite announcement covering the complete activities of Messrs. Walker and Harding on this side will be issued on their return to New York from Hollywood in May.

EASTMAN COMPANY MONOPOLY, SAYS TRADE COMMISSION

The Eastman Kodak Company has announced that it will fight the order of monopoly filed against it and others, by the Federal Trade Commission.

The investigation launched against the company by the Trade Commission in February, 1922, terminated April 19 with an order citing the Eastman Kodak Company, The Allied Film Laboratories Inc., and Jules E. Brulatour, a monopoly in restraint of trade.

The Commission gives Eastman 120 days in which to submit a brief, indicating to what extent it has carried out the government order to break up those practices considered monopolistic.

One of the important decisions propounded in the findings makes it compulsory for Eastman to dispose of the Paragon, San Jacq and G. M. Laboratories to parties not identified with any Eastman enterprises. The opinion has been voiced that Eastman may experience difficulty in doing this in view of the present tendency in the laboratory field to combine plants for the purpose of reducing overhead expense.

DOROTHY VERNON IN CANADA

The Canadian premiere presentation of Mary Pickford's "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" is being conducted at the Grand Theatre, Toronto, one of the veteran downtown theatres of the Ontario Capital starting Monday, April 28. The engagement is not limited, it is stated, and there is a probability that it will run through many weeks in view of Mary's recent visit to old home haunts in and around Toronto, her birthplace, along with Douglas Fairbanks.

It was at the Toronto Grand that a Canadian record run was made with "Mickey" several summers ago.

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS HAS BIG LINEUP

Eight Releases in Two Months Is Indication of Expansion

EIGHT pictures, to be released in the course of two months, compose the formidable schedule announced by Associated Exhibitors this week. It is the most extensive program ever drawn up by this organization for so brief a period, and comprises a collection of offerings regarded by Associated officials as notable for their high quality as well as numbers.

Persons who have had previews of "Racing Luck," in California, including newspaper reviewers, declare that in this picture Monty Banks, who is featured, rises to a height of eminence as a comedian which he never attained before.

"The Spitfire," an adaptation of Frederic Arnold Kummer's famous novel, "Plaster Saints," may almost be called an exhibitor-selected photoplay, details of the production plans and even the main title having been selected after Murray W. Garsson had carried on a referendum among 12,000 showmen.

"The Chechacos" is the only picture ever filmed in Alaska, and is said to present the most marvelous exteriors—snow-blanketed mountains, moving glaciers, snow trails, etc., ever screened.

Wallace Beery is featured in "Unseen Hands," a moving drama presented by W. C. Graves, Jr., and directed by Jacques Jacquard.

William Faversham is the most noted player in "The Sixth Commandment," a William Christy Cabanne production, but in the cast also are such well known and popular actors as Charlotte Walker, Edmund Breese, John Bohn, Kathleen Martyn, and J. Neil Hamilton.

"Why Get Married?," with the French beauty, Andree Lafayette, in the principal role, already has attracted a large amount of favorable attention.

"When a Girl Loves," with story, production and direction all by Victor Hugo Halperin, is the most ambitious of the Halperin attractions and is declared to be easily his best.

"The Lone Wolf," featuring Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt, who are supported by a remarkable cast, is based on Louis Joseph Vance's best-seller of the same name and is a thrilling drama replete with thrills and suspense.

This line-up gives Associated Exhibitors eight releases in late April and May.

ASSOCIATED OFFERS PRIZES FOR SALESMANSHIP

The equity in a new home, a $25 a week increase in salary, and a $500 dinner ring—these are prizes offered by the Kenma Corporation, producer of "Three Miles Out," for collections on that feature. The recipients are to be branch managers of Associated Exhibitors, the distributor of the attraction.

"Three Miles Out," the story of which is by John Emerson and Anita Loos, is the whirling melodrama in which Madge Kennedy is now winning fresh laurels as an actress of the silver sheet. Only recently released, the picture already is off to a flying start, Associated officials say. Harold C. Bolster is the head of the Kenma Corporation.

The awards are to go to the managers who have most nearly realized their quotas on the picture at the close of business on August 16 next.

The winner of the first prize, an equity in a house and lot—a home—may buy a place already built, the statement of conditions explains, or the producer and Associated will do the building. The winner himself selects the location and plans and the cost may be what he decrees, up to a $10,000 maximum. One-third of the gross amount will be advanced in cash as a first payment. This will be the producer's contribution and will enable the buyer to carry the remainder in first and second mortgages which can be paid off as rent.

The second prize is the salary increase of $25 a week, which is to be added to what ever amount the winner is being paid at the time the award is made.

WILMINGTON DEVELOPS COMPETITIVE SPIRIT

Theatre Managers Try to Outdo Each Other in Big Attractions

ALMOST overnight, the city of Wilmington, North Carolina, has developed from a one-man no-opposition town into the "film salesman's mecca," a city with four-way competition—and by competition it is meant real competition with no "working agreement" either.

Howard-Wells Amusement Company have had the town sewed up for years, but owing to the fact that Percy Wells, the guiding spirit of this corporation is anxious to devote his entire time to the Simmons Manufacturing Corporation, patentees and manufacturers of an improved locomotive boiler grate, of which company he is secretary and treasurer, all of the theatres under the Howard-Wells banner have been leased for a term of years, except the Bijou.

George W. Bailey, formerly a house manager with Howard Wells organization up to some months ago has secured a lease on the Royal theatre, Front Street first run house, and opened April 21. Jack Marcus has leased the Victoria theatre for a number of years, and he too, announces a policy of big pictures only—with the sky the limit. Marcus is formerly of Florence, South Carolina, and since January 1 has been managing the two theatres.

Rival attractions for Easter Monday in the two houses, aimed to draw "first blood" from each other were Mae Murray in "Fashion Row" at the Royal and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at one dollar top at the Victoria, both pictures first run in Wilmington. Both managers assert their intention of going after the business of the town with a vengeance, which during the slump period of the past twelve months has been handled conveniently by one house. Early releases already announced by the respective houses for early release showing are "Girl Shy," "Beau Brummel," "Three Weeks," "Lilies of the Field," "Dorothy Vernon," and others.

The Bijou, the other down town house is held by the Howard-Wells interests and will be managed by Mr. Wells partner, James Howard, assisted by D. M. Bain, as booking and publicity manager.

M.P.T.O. DELEGATES TO HEAR LEGISLATIVE REPORTS

A complete report of legislative activities will be made at the Boston convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

There will be a meeting at the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Massachusetts in Boston on April 29 to make final convention arrangements. This meeting will be attended by Sydney S. Cohen, National President; M. E. Comerford of Scranton, Joseph Walsh, of Connecticut, E. M. Fay, of Rhode Island, Jacob Lourie, of Massachusetts, Dave Adams, of New Hampshire, and other officers from these states as well as C. M. Maxfield of Hartford, Louis Sagal, of New Haven, M. J. O'Toole, of N. Y., Henry Wasserman, of Roxbury, Chairman of the Convention Committee; Ernest Horstmann, Secretary of the Massachusetts State body; Joseph Seider of New Jersey, Al Elliot of Hudson, N. Y.

A large delegation of Theatre Owners will come from Wisconsin, whose members will put in a bid for the 1924 convention. President Fred Seegert will head the delegation and will have with him representatives from the Mayor of Milwaukee and the Board of Trade there asking for the convention in an official way.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF NEW YORK STRAND

*First Theatre to Look Ahead and

THE Mark Strand motion picture theatre, known to millions merely as "The Strand," completed its tenth year on Broadway last week. In 1914 million dollar picture "palaces" were scarcely as common as they now are, and on that opening night a decade ago a program was presented that amazed the critics as well as the society notables and theatrical celebrities comprising the audience. There were Vincent Astor and his fiancée Helen Huntington; Daniel Frohman, Justice Erlanger, Commissioner Adamson, Andrew Mack, Andreas Dippel, Edward Abeles, Paul Armstrong, Adolph Zukor, George M. Cohan, Sam Harris, Emmet Corrigan, Diamond Jim Brady and a host of others.

The program on that eventful evening was ushered in with "The Star Spangled Banner." Followed "Polonaise" and "Mignon," a selection from "Rigoletto," and other numbers directed by Conductor Carl Edouarde, who still wields the baton. The theatre was managed by S. L. Rothafel, now famous as "Roxy." The fun was provided by a "Keystone" comedy, and the first feature was "The Spoilers" with William Farnum and Tom Santschi playing the leads. What a battle those two staged! Do you remember?

Millionaire Jackie Coogan wasn't born then. Rudolph Valentino had never sheiked to the clicking of the camera. Doug and Mary were just a couple of youngsters trying to get along. But there were stars in those days, too. John Bunny, Flora Finch, William Farnum, Bessie Eytton—how times have changed!

Moe and Mitchell Mark were showmen. Instead of doing the usual and transforming some store into a picture place, they planned a theatre as magnificent as any. Instead of having no music, or at best a yellow toothed, roue of a piano, long past its prime, they introduced an orchestra and made an appeal to cultured audiences through ballets and prologues. In their own words, printed in that opening program: "We have endeavored to create an institution which will reflect credit upon our city, our country and ourselves." Almost fifty million people have lined up at the box office since then, and the fifty million agree that they have succeeded in their high enterprise.

'LITTLE OLD NEW YORK' TO BE PRESERVED BY MUSEUM

Because of its educational value pertaining to the history and growth of New York, "Little Old New York," Marion Davies' great film success, has been placed in the archives of the American Museum of Natural History, of New York City.

Directors of the Public Education Department of the Museum, seeking documents, books and pictures recording the history of New York City, discovered that Cosmopolitan's "Little Old New York" was the only film in existence that accurately and faithfully portrays the life manners and customs of New York in the days when Robert Fulton startled the world by successfully navigating the Hudson River in the first steamboat, the Claremont. The picture was exhibited in the Spring lecture course at the Museum to the public school children of the primary and intermediate grades.

C. B. C. CLOSES BIG DEAL

C. B. C. announces the consummation of what they term "the biggest deal in the history of the organization" with the De Luxe Film Company of Philadelphia. The proposition includes sixteen special feature productions, which will be the largest number of feature pictures C. B. C. shall have produced in one year. "The De Luxe Film Company has extended a vote of confidence to this organization," said Joe Brandt, president of C. B. C., "by purchasing our entire year's output in one clip. A deal of this nature has special significance when one considers the many obstacles which confront it."

REICHENBACH TELLS OF HIS TRIP ABROAD

Discusses International Smells and Other Things of Interest

THE Associated Motion Picture Advertisers asked Harry Reichenbach, king-pin publicity puncher, to lunch with them upon his return from Europe, a suburb of Broadway. He accepted, and received some good food with "raspberries" for dessert. Among other honors he was offered one night's special engagement as guest projection man at a local theatre.

Harry told the boys about the different smells abroad, stressing the particular odor of Naples, which he says has that of the stock yards licked by as big a margin as the yards have over a perfume factory.

Not content with his international reputation as an exploiteer, Mr. Reichenbach is annexing laurels as a connoisseur of objects d'art and a collector of antiques. In addition to several verified old masters, he has accumulated a rare and distinctive library of ancient times dating back to the eleventh and twelfth centuries.

Supplying the modern note to his ancient acquisitions, Reichenbach secured the American rights to a radio set built in a matchbox. This interesting curio is effective within a forty mile radius.

Publicity men in England are hampered in their endeavors by the strict requirements of the Council which make it necessary to secure permits for everything except breathing. Despite this fact, however, British picture men are devoting lots of attention to exploiteering, and are making great strides toward evolving publicity as we understand its meaning.

Because of the A.M.P.A. rule against any speaker mentioning himself or his pictures, Harry was somewhat cramped in style and only entertained the crowd for about an hour. He didn't talk about himself—much. But it was fun all the way.

Henry M. Hobart, Practical Artist

WHEN a man makes his debut as a motion picture executive with a picture like "Humoresque" he may be said to be on his way. That was the record of Henry Morgan Hobart, following his installation at the studio of International, now Cosmopolitan, as vice president in charge of production.

The picture was made at the Harlem River Park Casino, just after that property had been taken over and remodeled for studio purposes by the new regime. The work of the director was prosecuted under difficulties, much of the staging being in the cellar where there was but a fourteen-foot clearance.

When the picture was put on for a trade showing it made a stir. Perhaps a substantial evidence of the impression created was the offer on the part of one of the large distributing companies, made the morning following the showing, for a half million dollars outright.

While the offer was under consideration Adolph Zukor returned from a trip, saw the picture, was impressed by its possibilities and suggested it be put into the Criterion. After a long run in that house the picture was started on its way.

In bookings "Humoresque" was one of the most successful pictures ever made, its record approaching a million and three-quarter dollars.

ALTHOUGH Mr. Hobart was born and raised in New York there always has been on his part a strong leaning for small town communities. Several factors have contributed to make this so.

In the first place he was educated at Dartmouth, situated in a New Hampshire town. Then while attending college he earned his way by conducting the orchestra and by singing.

Mr. Hobart's first theatrical experience was in 1920, when as the head of the college orchestra he received a telegram from Brattleboro, Vt., that a theatrical man there required the services of an emergency orchestra.

For three weeks the young director traveled small towns covering practically all of Northern New England.

As the orchestra was the only organization of its kind within a considerable radius it frequently happened

LEADERS ALL—HENRY M. HOBART

BECAUSE although born a New Yorker he early acquired and always retained his sympathy for the small town spirit; because to the motion picture he brought a knowledge of the practical side of advertising and still better an intimate acquaintance with fiction that appeals to the mass; because he has the courage to back his judgment in the creation of stories that are intended to be and are not only artistic success but financially profitable as well.

the members of that body and the quartet which accompanied it were obliged to spend nights at homes of farmers or local merchants in the villages.

This contact with the small town spirit was fortified later on in life in the course of Mr. Hobart's business career.

THE first experience in the world at large following graduation was in music. It was not long afterward, however, that Mr. Hobart entered the employ of the Western Electric Company, taking charge of a factory on the east side of New York. Here he secured his first opportunity to acquire knowledge in the handling of men.

Then in the publishing business Mr. Hobart remained for ten years, as advertising manager of the Woman's World, a magazine circulated exclusively in small towns. This work brought Mr. Hobart to the attention of William R. Hearst, and he went to the International Magazine Company as publisher of Hearst's Magazine.

Shortly after that change it was decided to institute a new policy in the conduct of the International Film Company and Mr. Hobart was selected to put it into effect.

In the year the new film executive remained at the Hearst studio he improved every opportunity to acquire knowledge of picture making. He worked all hours, "slept on the set," and tried his hand at cutting and continuity.

MR. HOBART resigned in 1921, and was told by Arthur S. Friend, then treasurer of Famous Players, that if the former would organize a company with him he would retire the first of the year.

The association was consummated and Distinctive was formed.

Some time previously Mr. Hobart had seen "The Devil," featuring George Arliss, and was deeply impressed by the quality of the star's playing. He engaged him to play "Disraeli."

Mr. Hobart's friends shook their heads when they learned of the intention of the company to produce a life of the great Englishman, and the skepticism even pervaded the organization.

THE doubters, however, had overlooked one point—two of them, in fact. Mr. Hobart had been an advertising man and knew advertising values. More than that, he had been trained in the selection of fiction during his magazine years, and he knew stories that would appeal to the mass. "Disraeli" was made and returned a profit. So, too, did the three succeeding Arliss subjects.

Unquestionably these pictures were out of the ordinary—in theme and in treatment. The result or one result of their production was the bringing to Distinctive of prestige among exhibitors and exchangers, too.

It may be interesting to know that all of the Arliss pictures with one exception were photographed in six weeks.

While Distinctive's plans for the coming year are not complete it is probable the company will produce four specials and seven or eight subjects on a less pretentious scale.

The Convention

THE convention of the National Exhibitors Organization will be held in Boston on May 27, 28, 29. It will be attended by delegates from a number of states, but not from all the states in which there are organizations.

This is a matter for regret. That there is need for combined action on the part of exhibitors is as true today as ever it has been. There are those who say it is more necessary.

There is yet a month for a change to be made in the situation. In this connection there has come to our desk this week a letter from one of the candidates for president in Boston. It breathes the real spirit.

"I have only one thought in mind," he says, "and that is to come out of Boston with organization in a high state of harmony. If my election will help to bring that about then and then only will I consent to making the sacrifice of time and money. On the other hand if conditions point the other way, it is my earnest desire to assist in finding the right man and to stick to him through thick and thin."

Much may be done in a month when men talk like this.

Consolidation

THE long-awaited merger of the Metro, Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan and Mayer Companies is now a fact. There has been lively interest on the part of exhibitors as to the working out of the combination. With them there is a natural fear that one combination may breed others, thereby narrowing the total number of producers and distributors.

Marcus Loew gives his assurance that the new Metro-Goldwyn Corporation will mean greater economy in production. There is every good reason to believe he is stating a fact.

Much has been said in the last year in the West and even more in the East regarding economy. Promises have been made on the part of executives that it will be instituted in places where previously it did not exist.

Recent word from the coast is to the effect that there still remain opportunities for further rational economy in production. In other words the promises made in the East with the best of intentions and in all sincerity are not being carried out in the letter and spirit in the West.

If this is true it is to be regretted. If it is true it means several things, and among these is the bringing nearer of the day when a larger share of production will be made in the East.

Exhibitors will keenly watch the working out of the new combination. They will closely observe the rise or the fall in quality of production and more especially in the sum that the exchangeman will put on the coming product.

If the quality is higher and the price remains the same the exhibitor will get the benefit. On the other hand if the quality remains the same and the price is increased, not necessarily on the part of any one company but on the part of several, the result will be obvious.

The fact remains that the combination is now "in being." It is entitled to a fair trial. The best wishes of the trade will go to the new executives in their larger responsibilities.

Among the Hard-Boiled

IT is not an uncommon practice among distributors in sending on its long journey a pretentious picture to give what is known as a trade showing. Probably it is the opening night of a run at a legitimate theatre.

Invitations will be sent not only to the reviewers of the business and daily press but all the "fan" magazines as well. Also there may be present hundreds connected with the motion picture industry in one capacity or another.

There can be no question that a reviewer unconsciously or otherwise is influenced by the remarks he hears passed in his vicinity.

A striking instance of the sharp contrast between a trade audience and a public audience was supplied to one reviewer last week when for the second time he looked on a picture which he had seen on its opening night.

In his review he had praised the picture, but he did not bestow upon it the same quality of commendation that he would have done had the review been written following his second visit.

All around him in the course of the latter evening he heard persons who had paid their two dollars to see the picture talking about the marvelous things that were being enacted upon the screen.

Exhibitors would seem to be perfectly justified in reading with a certain allowance or discount for the environment of the writer any review penned following a showing at which was present many representatives of the trade.

In other words the meritorious picture that is shown to a trade audience does not get the square deal in the reviews that is bound to follow in the case of a showing attended by the public at large.

vaudeville house. Dempsey's complaint says $2,356 due for performances in Kansas City, was never paid. The answer says that amount represents excess profits, kept in a separate cash box from the $4,000 a week minimum guaranteed under the fighter's contract and that when robbers took the cash box there no longer were excess profits.

The appearance of Dempsey at the Pantages theatre the week of November 11, 1922, swelled the loot of thieves, who burned a hole through a vault with an acetylene torch, obtaining $8,006.41, the receipts of Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Will Remain Open for Summer

A huge new cooling system is being installed in the Orpheum theatre, Kansas City, which is preparing to remain open for the first time during summer months. The system is being installed by the Wittenmaire Machine Company of Chicago, and will be similar to that of the Mainstreet theatre of Kansas City. The summer prices of the Orpheum will be 25, 50, 75 and 90 cents at night and 25, 35 and 50 cents for matinees. Beginning April 27, a dramatic stock company will take the stage until next fall, the company being under the direction of Arthur J. Casey, who has two companies playing in Massachusetts.

Smith, undersheriff of Wyandotte county, on a writ of replevin obtained in the district court by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company of Cincinnati. The suit, against Lee Vaughan, owner of the theatre, alleges Vaughan failed to pay for the organ. The sheriff was instructed to hold the organ twenty-four hours, then turn it over to the Wurlitzer company, unless Vaughan provides a re-delivery bond in that time. The seizure was only technical. The organ will continue to be used until it is turned over to the Wurlitzer company.

DE MILLE PICTURE IS WELL RECEIVED

Successful Debut of 'Triumph' at Rivoli Indicates Future Popularity

TRIUMPH. Paramount Photoplay. Author, May Edginton. Director, Cecil B. De Mille. Length, 8,225 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Anna Land	Leatrice Joy
King Garnet	Rod La Rocque
William Silver	Victor Varconi
James Martin	Charles Ogle
Varinoff	Theodore Kosloff
Samuel Overton	Robert Edeson
Countess Rika	Julia Faye
David Garnet	George Fawcett
Torrini	Spottiswood Aitken
A Tramp	Raymond Hatton

Anna Land is forewoman of the Garnet Can Works, controlled by Silver, one of the late owner's sons. Another son, King Garnet, is destitute. Anna's ambition is to be a singer. King extorts $1,000 from Silver and aids Anna to make her debut, which is a success. Silver sends Anna abroad and follows her. She loses her voice as a result of injury in a fire. King takes a job in the factory and works his way up. On Silver's return, he finds King has obtained control. King makes Silver manager. The latter, knowing Anna really loves his brother, gives her up to King.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS latest Cecil B. De Mille production registers as a good audience picture, which ought to give satisfaction and run up a respectable box office score wherever it is shown. It was well received at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, on the occasion of its metropolitan debut. The story possesses some strong human interest angles, runs smoothly, without breaking the continuity, and attains a happy climax.

Like all features sponsored by Cecil De Mille, the settings are elaborate, no expense has been spared in the matter of interior decorations, fine photographic efforts are achieved and the lighting is faultless.

It is evident that both author and director were out to obtain a vivid study in contrasting characterizations and they succeeded, although at times skating close to the verge of improbability. But the net result isn't bad by any means, for the average movie fan will be pleased with the triumph of the hero in his dogged climb from the lowest rung of the ladder to the top.

The rise of the heroine from her humble position as forewoman of a can factory to distinction as a singer is another touch with popular appeal. Even if she has the misfortune to lose her voice and fall back into life's ordinary ranks, the glamor of temporary success clings around her, and Anna Land has nothing to complain of at the finish, inasmuch as she finds happiness with the man she loves, who has made good in the interval.

The fire scene puts over quite a thrill, there is a fair amount of suspense and some effective comedy. Rod La Rocque distinguishes himself by giving an excellent performance as King Garnet, to which he imparts some subtle touches of ironical humor and considerable dramatic vigor. Leatrice Joy, always an efficient artist, is sweetly interesting as Anna Land. Victor Varconi does splendid work as William Silver, and the support is adequate.

There is a fashion show side to the film which can be exploited for the benefit of your feminine patrons, who will appreciate the lavish display of gowns, and tie-ups with modiste stores are suggested. You can praise the story as possessing heart interest and furnishing a powerful contrast between the lives of rich and poor. Don't forget the characteristic Cecil De Mille settings and mention such prominent names in the cast as Rod La Rocque, Leatrice Joy, Charles Ogle, George Fawcett, Julia Faye, Raymond Hatton, Spottiswood Aitken and Robert Edeson.

MAKES A DELIGHTFUL FILM 'The Beloved Vagabond' Combines Artistic Worth With Big Selling Possibilities

THE BELOVED VAGABOND. F. B. O. Photoplay. Author, William J. Locke. Director, Fred Leroy Granville. Length, 6,217 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Gaston de Nerac	Carlyle Blackwell
Berzelius Paragot	Carlyle Blackwell
Joanna Rushworth	Phyllis Titmuss
Comte de Verneuil	Owen Roughwood
Blanquette	Madge Stuart
Simon Rushworth	Alfred Woods
Mrs. Rushworth	Emily Nichols
Narcisse	Tio
Asticot	Albert Chace

In order to save the father of Joanna, the girl he loves, from financial ruin, Gaston de Nerac signs a paper giving her up to Comte de Verneuil, whom she weds. He wanders through Brittany with Asticot and Blanquette, boy and girl, the latter an orphan. Later the Comte dies. Joanna and her former lover meet again. Realizing that they are no longer suited to each other, he marries Blanquette.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A DELIGHTFUL picture, beautifully photographed, directed with rare good taste and judgment by Fred Granville and presented by a thoroughly capable cast, "The Beloved Vagabond" stands forth as a credit to all concerned in its production. Just here and there you run across a film which combines artistic worth with big commercial possibilities, and this is one of them.

Its audience appeal may be said to be universal, for the wholesome breadth and strength of the love story will grip the attention of all classes of movie patrons. When Gaston de Nerac gives the object of his affections to another suitor in order to save the girl's father from inevitable ruin, he gains a generous measure of sympathy from the on-lookers and establishes himself as a prime favorite right then and there. An act of gracious self-sacrifice in the early stages of a film goes a long way toward making a hero popular with the fans, and Gaston accordingly starts off with a strong prejudice in his favor.

His transformation into the role of a strolling musician and subsequent wanderings through the country, a sort of glorified hobo, with Asticot and Blanquette, his boy and girl companions, result in a series of situation replete with quiet charm, relieved by gentle touches of pleasing comedy, but with the pathetic note sounding melodiously over all.

What touches the heart chord particularly is the loyal devotion of his young chums to Gaston and the growth of love in Blanquette's bosom for her patron. A chance glimpse of his former sweetheart temporarily breaks up the trio's companionship, despair engulfs the debonair soul of the musician and for a space he seeks consolation in drink.

But the clouds finally scatter, when on the death of her husband Joanna again meets Gaston, he realizes that she is no longer the mate he desired, and little Blanquette obtains the reward of her faithful waiting for the man whose memory she so fondly treasures.

Carlyle Blackwell, known in goneby years as "the Romeo of the screen," is the movie hero and the writer can confidently say that he shows to greater advantage the role of Gaston or Paragot, than in which he has appeared.

AN ORDINARY CROOK PLAY

Thomas Meighan's Latest Vehicle Weak in Plot Values and Appeal

THE CONFIDENCE MAN. Paramount Photoplay. Authors, Laurie York Erskine and Robert H. Davis. Director, Victor Heerman. Length, 7,215 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dan Corvan	Thomas Meighan
Margaret Leland	Virginia Valli
Larry Maddox	Laurence Wheat
Godfrey Queritt	Charles Dow Clarke
Mrs. Bland	Helen Lindroth
Jimmy Bland	Jimmy Lapsley
Mrs. X	Margaret Seddon
Wade	George Nash
Mrs. O'Brien	Dorothy Walters

Dan Corvan and Larry Maddox, backed by fake promoter Wade, visit Fairfield to sell worthless stock to the town miser, Queritt. Corvan's suave personality impresses the townsfolk and pretty Margaret Leland. Queritt buys the stock. Wade arrives and quarrels with Corvan. An old lady inmate of the poorhouse sends for Corvan and intrusts him with money stolen by her son, which she wants turned over to the owner. This breaks Corvan down and he resolves to go straight. He beats up Wade, makes restitution to Queritt and confesses all to Margaret, who admits that she loves him.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THE CONFIDENCE MAN is a crook play, with Tom Meighan as star, a combination which should exert considerable pulling power in the direction of the box office. His first successful bid for popularity was made in "The Miracle Man" and since that time the coupling of his name with an underworld yarn has always stimulated curiosity.

But this feature doesn't rise above the average mark and can only be classed as offering fair entertainment. It will probably "get by" wherever Mr. Meighan is an established favorite, without, however, causing any great amount of enthusiasm on the part of his numerous admirers, so far as the story's general appeal is concerned.

The star's magnetic personality and clever acting, in conjunction with the really fine work of Laurence Wheat, cast as the hero's pal, go far toward keeping interest alive in a plot which has nothing original about it and suffers from a handicap of false sentimentality. It is, indeed, a credit to all the players that despite the narrative's weakness they managed to tighten up its suspense here and there and make it mildly amusing.

To the only George Ade, who wrote the subtitles, must be awarded honorable mention for injecting some flashes of real humor into the proceedings. These subtitles are brilliantly witty and frequently start the laughter when things seem to be at their worst.

The trouble with the arch-crook's reforming stunt is that it doesn't appear so. Gents like Dan Corvan don't seem to seek the straight cause of a pre-emptive heart-stab until they are the admitted more or other tale.

OWEN DAVIS' PLAY
MAKES GREAT FILM

'Broadway After Dark' Modernized, Colorful, Is Fine Box Office Attraction

BROADWAY AFTER DARK. Warner Brothers' Photoplay. Adapted from the Stage Play by Owen Davis. Director, Monta Bell. Length, 7,200 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ralph Norton	Adolphe Menjou
Rose Dulane	Norma Shearer
Slim Scott	Willard Louis
Lenore Vance	Carmel Myers
Mrs. Smith	Vera Lewis
Jack Devlin	Edward Burns
Helen Tremaine	Anna Q. Nilsson
Carl Fisher	Mervyn LeRoy
Ed Fisher	Jimmy Quinn

Rose Dulane, restaurant waitress, is fascinated by a man to whom she confides that she was guilty of a petty theft. He is a detective and arrests her. She serves time and finally lands a job in a minor theatrical boarding house. There she meets Ralph Norton, well-to-do Broadway rounder, having a look at life in a less luxurious atmosphere. Norton is attracted by Rose, proves her friend, rescues her from the detective's persecutions and wins her love.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

OWEN DAVIS' good old stand-by melodrama dealing with the white light district of the big town, has been molded into a picture which gives promise of flaunting the S. R. O. sign wherever it is shown. Warner Brothers and all concerned in the making of the production have every reason for being proud of what they have accomplished.

The stage play is revised, revamped, brought strictly up-to-date jazzed, and jollied into a peppery, colorful film, lively, unique and highly entertaining. We have called "Broadway After Dark" melodrama, because that's exactly what it was in the times when it served as a footlight attraction, when gallery gods hissed the villain and sympathetic, unsophisticated souls wept over the heroine's woes and rejoiced as virtue triumphed and true love hurdled home a winner.

But this picture version is something far better than mere "melo." They have taken the skeleton of the Davis play, clothed its dry bones with modern trimmings, preserved the main romantic touches, but injected a lot of timely humorous business and set it dancing to a comedy tune of rattling gaiety. All of which is staged ingeniously against a background of Broadway night life, with the dingy atmosphere of a cheap theatrical boarding house for trenchant contrast.

At the beginning the Great White Way flashes into view, with the electric display blazing merrily, then comes the annual Equity ball introducing a host of "legitimate" players, whose names are world-famous. After which a studio party is shown, with jazz fireworks fore. The boarding house episodes are all defined and interesting because from these glowing sympathy are engendered, when the masochist, fascinated her, guilt and rail-ish settings and superb photography add immeasurably to the film's drawing power. Everything is done on a big scale with no expense spared, and Director Monta Bell has certainly slammed the box office target right plumb in the center.

Adolphe Menjou is the beau ideal of the Broadway type of hero and wins dramatic honors with a performance of sterling merit. Norma Shearer scores as a charming heroine and the support is as excellent as might be expected from such a cast of notable players.

Don't let your patrons get the idea that this is merely a hectic melodrama, as they might imagine from its title. Tell them about the colorful atmosphere, the shots of Broadway life, the gathering of theatrical stars at the Equity Ball, the gorgeous costumes, irresistible fun of the comedy situations; suspense and romantic love interest. There are times when you make no mistake in stressing the entertaining qualities of a production, and this is one of them. "Broadway After Dark" can't fail to send the fans home satisfied.

JUST AN AVERAGE COMEDY

'The Gold Fish' Amusing, With Constance Talmadge in Attractive Role

THE GOLDFISH. First National Photoplay. Director, Jerome Storm. Adapted from Gladys Unger's Stage Play. Length, 7,145 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Jenny Wetherby	Constance Talmadge
Jimmy Wetherby	Jack Mulhall
Duke of Middlesex	Frank Elliott
Herman Krauss	Jean Hersholt
Amelia Pugsley	Za Su Pitts
Count Nevski	Edward Connelly
J. Hamilton Powers	William Conklin
Mrs. Bellmore	Kate Lester
The Prince	Eric Mayne

Jenny Wetherby and her husband Jimmy agree that if they tire of wedded life, she or he will hand the other a bowl of goldfish, signifying that their partnership is ended. They quarrel and Jimmy carries out the threat. Won by Herman Krauss, Jenny gives him the goldfish in favor of millionaire Powers. The latter dies, leaving her a wealthy widow. She is about to wed the Duke of Middlesex, when Krauss brings the old sweethearts together again. The Duke gets the goldfish and Jimmy and Jenny are reunited.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS picture ought to show good box office returns in localities where Constance Talmadge is a pronounced favorite. The star has appeared in many better films, but "The Goldfish" registers as a fair, average comedy which offers amusing entertainment, ripples with breezy action and doesn't demand strained concentration of thought.

The plot is of pretty thin texture and the director must have found it a difficult job stretching the material out to feature length without actually tearing holes in the continuity and as a matter of fact the attraction could stand the lopping off of a lot of excess footage and be much improved by such pruning.

The best situations are mostly farcical and it's a risky thing to string farce comedy along over the six reel compass, unless there's a strong narrative foundation to build upon. In the stage play from which it was adapted "The Goldfish" filled in its action gaps with plenty of snappy dialogue. But the story itself is of extremely light construction and in subtitle form the stage dialogue isn't particularly effective.

If it wasn't for the energetic work of Constance Talmadge, loyally supported by her associates, the picture would be an exceedingly flimsy affair. But Miss Talmadge, as the voluble, over wife, who makes such little fuss about "off with the old love and on with the new" springs nimbly over the improbable role, enlivens it with her vivaciousness and seems to be having such a good time that you are impelled to laugh in sympathy with the amorous adventures of mad-cap Jenny Wetherby.

Jack Mulhall makes an agreeable impression as the hubby who loses and wins back the vivacious Jane, and excellent performances are given by Frank Elliott, Jean Hersholt, Za Su Pitts and William Conklin.

In exploiting the feature play up the star as much as possible. Constance Talmadge has a wide following and you can assure her admirers that she puts an extraordinary amount of vim and dash into her impersonation of the flapper wife. Utilize such catch phrases in your advertising as—"Her old love was the best after all"—"Husband Number One lost out, but won at the finish." She experimented with divorce, but returned to her first ideal."

HOOT GIBSON SCORES AGAIN

Forty Horse Hawkins' Provides Comedian With Amusing Role and Story

FORTY HORSE HAWKINS. Universal Photoplay. Authors, Raymond Schrock and Edward Sedgwick. Director, Edward Sedgwick. Length, 5,419 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Luke (Bud) Hawkins	Hoot Gibson
Mary Darling	Anne Cornwall
Rudolph Catalina	Richard Tucker
Sylvia Dean	Helen Holmes
Johnny	Jack G. Edwards
Sheriff	Ed Burns
Wild Bill Bailey	John Judd

Luke Hawkins combines various jobs in a little western town, working around a hotel, driving a bus, being a stagemanager, etc. He falls in love with Mary Darling, leading woman of a traveling troupe and follows her to New York. He obtains a soldier role in a play she acts in, saves the day when the performance is going wrong, finally, through his extreme bull-headedness, becomes a star himself and wins Mary.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A HOOT GIBSON production of superior grade, sure to please all that energetic comedian's admirers, add to his already large following, and swell the box office receipts wherever lively entertainment is in demand.

Mr. Gibson has become closely identified with the boob hero sort of role, the chap who eventually blunders into good luck, and Luke Hawkins, whom he impersonates in this instance, resembles his predecessors. But the plot possesses infinite dash and variety, switches from Western to an Eastern locale, is crammed with uproariously funny situations and entirely free from dull moments.

Probably no screen hero ever tried to handle such a multiplicity of jobs as does the versatile Bud Hawkins in the early stages of this film. We see him plying as bus driver, general cook and bottlewasher of the town's only hotel, handy guy around the burg's single theatre, electrician, stagemanager, ticket-taker, etc.

The one night stand performances given by the traveling troupe are excellent burlesque hits, taking off the old-time cheap melodrama stuff and providing no end of farcical fun. But Hawkins' adventures on the trail of his charmer are simply immense, events move with cyclonic swiftness when he strikes the big town and a bully climax is shaped out; when through fool's luck he becomes the god in the machine whereby success is assured to the play wherein Mary Darling is starred, and incidentally flashes on to the stardom horizon himself.

You can boost this as a Hoot Gibson comedy of the finest. Wherever that well-known star is a favorite, and his beat is a long one, the box office should show healthy results. Besides the star, Anne Cornwall, Richard Tucker and Helen Holmes are deserving of mention. The picture is made to amuse and does its duty admirably.

CYTHEREA, Goddess of Love. Samuel Goldwyn Presents the George Fitzmaurice Production, a First National Picture. From the Novel by Joseph Hergesheimer. Adapted by Frances Marion. Length, About 6,500 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Fanny Randon	Irene Rich
Lee Randon	Lewis Stone
Savina Grove	Alma Rubens
Peyton Morris	Norman Kerry
Claire Morris	Betty Bouton
Daniel Randon	Brandon Hurst

Lee Randon, forty years old and bored, sees his nephew, Morris, becoming infatuated with Mina Raff and reproaches him. Later when Morris leaves his wife to go with Mina, Mrs. Randon asks her husband to plead with the girl to release his nephew. In carrying out the mission Randon in turn becomes infatuated with Savina Grove, a married woman. Randon and Savina elope and go to Cuba. Randon is denied admittance to the home of his brother. Savina is taken ill and dies. Randon returns to his home, where he is welcomed by his wife.

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

CYTHEREA is delightful entertainment. It picks up speed right at the start and holds without loosening grip clear through to the end, which, by the way, is really dramatic. If any exhibitor has any fear it is a subject which may arouse adverse criticism he may dismiss it.

For cynical men who have no liking for stories of the flapper type the theatre owner may assure them "Cytherea" is an exception. For that matter the flapper phase of the tale is very short. The characters for the main part are mature men and women. The cynic quickly will forget his cynicism in the appeal of the story and the convincing interpretation of the players.

As a box office attraction the picture should rate as one of the best of the season. It may be advertised without hesitation as having rare appeal for women and one that will tightly hold the men.

While there are two children in the picture it is doubtful if the general theme will appeal to the younger. The subject may be set down, however, as one that will be popular in any house or in any community.

In the cast are four players who are stars in their own right: Alma Rubens and Irene Rich on the one hand, and Lewis Stone and Norman Kerry on the other. All have made their mark and have a host of followers.

The bulk of the work falls to Mr. Stone and Miss Rubens, and most splendidly do they carry out the roles assigned to them.

Miss Rich is cast as the contented housewife whose interests are bounded by the walls of her home. She has no patience with things that are modern if by such are meant dancing or jazz entertainment generally. She is the steady going unromantic mother. Mr. Stone gives his usual fine characterization. It seems that this is no figure of speech. He portrays a man who has been "licked" by a humdrum life. He feels like stepping out, but his wife cannot understand it. When in time she does it is too late.

Miss Rubens portrays a woman of deep passion which has been untouched until she meets Randon, and she finely interprets the character.

The story conveys a message without in any manner indicating that it is a preachment. That message is the ostracism which is bound to follow in the wake of an infraction of society's laws.

Throughout the tale there is a subtle humor that will have a special appeal to the more or less sophisticated. It will stir without offending the staid patron and certainly it will satisfy the blasé.

The picture is one which the exhibitor may exploit to the best advantage. In the first place he is going to be sure of contented patrons.

The title, meaning the Goddess of Love, will afford opportunities for exercising the advertising bent.

IS A BOX OFFICE WINNER

'Why Men Leave Home,' Bright Comedy Drama With Universal Appeal

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. First National Photoplay. Adapted from Avery Hopwood's Stage Play. Director, John M. Stahl. Length, 8,002 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

John Emerson	Lewis Stone
Irene Emerson	Helene Chadwick
Grandma Sutton	Mary Carr

After a year of wedded life John Emerson begins to neglect his wife, Irene. A love affair develops with his office secretary and Irene procures a divorce. John marries the other woman. Later, Grandma Sutton succeeds in luring John and Irene under her roof, and with Dr. Bailey's aid has the place quarantined, so that the pair can't get out. The result is that the old love blooms once more. John's second wife gets a divorce and he remarries Irene.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

MARK up another box office winner for Director John M. Stahl! If "Why Men Leave Home" doesn't go over the top with a bound and register success at the big money goal, there's no use trying to predict a future for any film. It possesses unlimited audience appeal and isn't restricted to any particular class of patrons either, for the high-brows will enjoy it as well as the less critical fans. In any theatre, large or small, this feature should prove a lucrative attraction.

It will be remembered that another Stahl production—"The Dangerous Age," also a domestic comedy drama, made a tremendous hit in the entertainment field, and we take pleasure in asserting that this picture is every bit as good as its predecessor. There is no similarity between the plots, however, for "Why Men Leave Home" strikes out along original lines, but the same impish spirit of fun plays hob with the marriage experiments of the principal characters and keeps the humor pot boiling furiously.

There are some intimate views of a bridal chamber in the beginning, and a few bedroom scenes toward the close, which recall the fact that the stage production bordered on the risqué, but Director Stahl has carefully steered clear of suggestive situations which might arouse the censors' wrath. Much of the snappy, bright dialogue pertaining to the "legitimate" attraction is served up in witty subtitles which help wonderfully in developing the story, and many beautiful sets and charming exterior shots add to the picture's artistic lure, the photography throughout being distinctly of first grade quality.

The snapping of the early marital tie between the Emersons occurs when John comes home after escorting the "other woman" to and from a theatre party. The scent of the perfume used by his charmer clings to him and awakens the wife's suspicions. This is a highly dramatic episode and another big scene, where humor and thrills are intermingled, is that in which the divorced pair meet in the quarantined house and wife Number 2 adds to the complications by appearing unexpectedly.

What constitutes the film's greatest amusement asset is the crisp, delicious flavor of its comedy which rings true as a silver bell and is always in evidence, even lurking in the background when matters assume a serious trend.

In exploiting the feature, spread heavily on the title. Besides the principals, others in the cast worth mentioning are Mary Carr, Alma Bennett and Hedda Hopper. Don't be afraid to boost the story as one of the season's best domestic comedy dramas.

NEGRI PICTURE POOR STUFF

'Montmarte,' Foreign Film Cheaply Constructed and Unworthy of Star's Talent

MONTMARTE. Paramount Photoplay. Adapted from John Muehler's Play, "The Flame." Director, Ernst Lubitsch. Length, 6,715 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Yvette	Pola Negri
--------------	------------

Yvette's landlady insists that her lodger pay up the money she owes. The girl goes out in quest of funds. Papa Lemonier is about to "come across" with the desired cash, when a man who has been pursuing her interferes and trouble starts. Yvette runs away and makes the acquaintance of a youthful composer named Andre Leduc. They fall in love and are married. Raoul Fournier, rejected suitor, tries to spoil Yvette's domestic happiness by exposing her past to her husband. He almost succeeds but is defeated in the long run.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

POLI NEGRI's name will probably draw many of that noted star's admirers to see this picture, but it is to be feared that they will go away disappointed. For "Montmarte" is frankly—very poor entertainment. Made abroad, and to all appearances many moons ago, it ranks easily as one of the worst specimens of foreign output.

Its sole market refuge would seem to lie in houses where the bill is changed daily, and even there it is not likely to arouse enthusiasm. For those who have witnessed Miss Negri's triumphs in other features cannot avoid making comparisons to the discredit of this singularly uninteresting mess of patchwork. On the other hand, patrons thus introduced for the first time to the Polish star will be given an altogether incorrect idea of what she can really accomplish on the screen under favorable conditions.

Nor is Miss Negri the only one concerned in the production to suffer through its banality and utter lack of appeal, for Director Ernst Lubitsch's reputation is certainly not enhanced thereby. There's no disputing Mr. Lubitsch's standing as a past-master of directorial craft, but his skill was plainly at a discount when brought to bear upon such painfully inadequate material.

The story is inconsequential in the first place, and a gloomy bit of stuff at that. Thoroughly artificial and absurdly theatrical, it fails to arouse an atom of sympathy at any stage. Also, it is very evident that the director was severely handicapped by the burden of cheap studio equipment, for the sets and costuming are of such inferior grade that they bring to mind memories of ancient screen horrors filmed when the industry hadn't outgrown the baby age. The photography is of mediocre quality, the lighting being weak.

The physical attractions of the star and the splendid abandon and virile energy she displays in some of the emotional situations which fall to her share are the only bright spots in the production. Even Poli Negri's talents are unequal to the task of "putting the picture over," but still she registers as the great artist she has ever been. As to her support, it consists of several foreign players whose names are not credited, and maybe it is just as well. For they are a distinctly poor lot, a "scratch team" if there ever was one. The chap who plays the lover is a strangely mawkish sort of creature.

If you book this feature Poli Negri's name is absolutely the only thing to bank on in exploiting it. If you praise either story or production to any extent, those who respond to the boost will surely feel that they have been given a raw deal.

HELP YOUR SHORTS TO HELP YOU

That short subjects are coming into their own is shown by the advertising given "The World's Struggle for Oil," which played at the Cameo theatre in New York last week. The picture is a three reel production and in the newspaper advertising it is given more space than the feature length picture. The picture was played up in lights in the theatre lobby and the feature is given little attention, although the long picture was one that has received good review notices and is in itself a very satisfying picture.

Several times of late it has come to our attention that short subject pictures are being played up in electric lights overshadowing the long subjects. It is becoming rather common. And there is no reason why a short shouldn't be given credit when credit is due. If the short is better than the feature why should it not be given a chance to let people know it is worthy? The poor neglected short is, through sheer entertaining value, gradually coming to its place in the sun.

If you, Mr. Exhibitor, are neglecting the short subject in your advertising, you are passing up a box office asset. Give the shorts the advertising they deserve and you will find they return big dividends. You can't have a garden without planting seed and advertising is the seed in motion pictures.

Give your shorts a square deal and watch the crop.

Our Gang is in action again. This one shows them at commencement day exercises at the village school and what they don't think up to do is little. There is not a dull moment and the kids are given an opportunity to do some good acting.

Mary recites "The Little Lamb" and forgets her lines. Joe plays a saxophone solo which is a scream. The saxophone had been filled with pepper by one of the gang and the whole school is thrown into an uproar.

Mickey tries a classical selection on the violin but is handicapped by the fact that he has a live frog hidden in his shirt.

Mickey stages a good fight with the school bully and makes a decided hit with Mary. Sunshine and Farina are not old enough to attend school so they watch the show from the school window and add their bit to the general scheme of things.

Joe, the fat youngster, stands out prominently in this picture and does some real clever acting. Dressed in his nice white suit he goes through his stuff like a veteran actor and his expressions play no small part in the picture.

The story deals with a rifle instructor at a shooting club and his efforts to teach the female members of the club the art of marksmanship. A bear enters the scene and from then on it is the same old chase stuff.

The picture is not up to the standard of Smith's former comedies and there are several scenes that could be eliminated to good advantage. The scene where the bear licks the bare feet of a sleeping negro porter could be cut entirely. The scene is a long one and rather disgusting.

It is very doubtful booking.

IDEAL FOR LOBBY DISPLAY

This 24-sheet lends itself admirably for a cut-out for lobby display. The characters can be made to stand out in bold relief and will surely act as a puller. The scene is from Pathe's "Leatherstocking."

SENNETT STUDIOS BUSY

Three comedy units are busily engaged on new subjects at the Mack Sennett Studios. Of these, the Harry Langdon company and Ben Turpin unit are furthest advanced in production of new subjects. The other company co-featuring Sid Smith and Vernon Dent under the direction of Harry Edwards is filming a farce comedy, "The Lion and the Souse."

The Ben Turpin company, which returned last week from the Truckee snow country, are completing the final scenes of "Yukon Jake." Mack Sennett's aggregation of 1924 Bathing Girls will again be seen in Langdon's new comedy offering, which is as yet untitled.

'PUBLICITY PAYS'

Pathe 1 reel

Charles Chase is the husband of a publicity seeking actress and he produces fun through his antics to keep track of the wife's pet monkey, which insists on climbing up the sides of buildings and wandering around the hotel rooms.

There is no plot to the picture but there is good clean fun and some thrill scenes that will make you hold your breath. Chase tries to rescue the monkey which has taken refuge at the end of a flagpole and he risks his neck to give a thrill.

The husband rebels when the wife's publicity writer suggests a pet elephant for a publicity stunt. The wife decides that she cannot remain an actress and retain her husband so she gives up acting and they live happy ever after.

This is an average comedy, but it will make a good filler.

'HOMELESS PUPS'

Pathe 1 reel

Paul Terry's cartoon shows what can be done when the dogs organize for protection against heartless dog-catchers. A fair maiden is caught by the dog-catcher and thrown into a dungeon. Her sweetie enlists the aid of thousands of homeless pups and they storm the bastille and rescue the damsel and wreak vengeance on the dog-catcher.

This is a clever cartoon and Terry works in some unusual comedy touches.

These cartoons are always popular and this one is no exception.

PATHE REVIEW

This one reel of brief subjects carries some interesting information. It shows how hair mattresses are made. The process is very interesting. "Boy Pirates," "Everyday Orient" and "Alsatian Days" complete the subjects.

It will make a good program filler.

'THE WORLD STRUGGLE FOR OIL'

This picture was produced by the United States Department of the Interior and is distributed by H. E. Butler. It is a complete history of petroleum from the times of Noah to the present day. It is probably the most enlightening oil subject that has ever been produced.

With the use of animated maps it shows the holdings of various countries in an effort to gain control of the oil situation. The maps demonstrate how much value is placed on oil land by nations. England is by far the largest of potential oil territory while the United States leads in the actual production of the precious fluid.

Details of drilling are clearly shown. The first oil well to be drilled is shown and the clumsy, though efficient methods, are compared with the present system. The large fields in Mexico and United States come in for several good shots and one is permitted to look behind the scenes in this wonderful industry and gain a knowledge of the great work that has been accomplished in order that we may live.

Coming as it does, when the Teapot Dome scandal has brought the oil question before the public, the picture is of exceptional interest. The picture is not technical and will be found of interest to everyone as our daily lives almost depend upon oil.

You can book this one and be sure of having a satisfied audience.

'CORNFED'

2 reels

If you want a good laugh see Bobby Vernon in "Cornfed." This Christie comedian is at his best in this picture of a lovesick country grocer. When he arrays himself in his Sunday clothes and steps out he hits the high spots.

He is aided and abetted by Victor Rodman, the hated rival.

PRESENTING A DIFFICULT TASK

Dan Mason, well known Hollywood Pictures Corporation comedian, has been asked to choose his leading woman from the group shown above. Dan has brain fag trying to decide. Which would you choose?

ARGUE

By DANNY

All you please. About the summer picture situation. And you get in a circle—and get nowhere. Because the exhibitor places the blame of conditions on the producer. And the producer and distributor blame the exhibitor. And there is no give and take. So there you are.

Cheap, unsatisfactory pictures, not good for showing any other time are released and shown during July and August. This seems to be the cleaning up period for all the unsatisfactory stock on the shelves. And what does this mean?

Heretofore it has meant this—always: that your patrons get sick and dissatisfied; that they see one poor picture after another and then stay away. Which means that you have to show a half dozen big successes early in the season to again get them in the habit of coming. If this isn't the height of asinine business ideas what is? You wouldn't find a duplication of such ideas in any other business in the world.

If there isn't any money in running a theater during July and August why keep a theater open? Certainly it would be far better to close during those two months, keeping your business in good shape by doing so, than remaining open, showing bad pictures, or poor pictures, making dissatisfied patrons and otherwise injuring your good will.

There are a lot of mighty good pictures that—for various reasons—are not shown in various communities during the early release period. If Mr. Exhibitor would work a little harder—instead of being interested in the ball game—and dig some of those up he would be in an excellent position to do business—and keep his patrons happy—rather than show a lot of junk, just because he buys it cheap. The exhibitor who thinks he is getting away with something by showing cheap pictures is like the man who wears a toupee. He only fools one—himself.

Tried and Proved Pictures

TO feature a tried and proved picture with a tried and proved player the manager of the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Oregon, devised this unusually attractive lobby display for the showing of First National's "Fighting Blade," with Richard Barthelmess.

Featuring Tried and Proved Players

Our Profitable Method Employed by a Successful Exhibitor

WANDERING about upper Broadway we paused before the alluring lobby of the Bunny Theatre, the success of which is based in no small degree upon the enthusiasm of George Marrow for Tried and Proved pictures. He shows them consistently, and just as consistently do his patrons line up at the box office to buy a sure evening's entertainment, rather than to "take a chance" elsewhere.

Marrow gave us a somewhat different slant, and as he has demonstrated the soundness of his thought, it is worthy of attention from other showmen.

How many times have we paused before a picture theatre in search of a photo drama that would afford an hour's relaxation with some attention compelling attraction. We have hesitated, glanced at the title of the production with which we were unfamiliar and which meant nothing, have searched the stills for the familiar faces of dependable actors, have failed to find them and have passed on elsewhere.

Regardless of the picture's title, had we seen the name of Norma Talmadge, or sister Constance, Barthelmess or Meighan, Lon Chaney or Gene O'Brien, Gloria Swanson or Pola Negri, Elliott

Dexter or—well continue indefinitely, Mr. Showman would have had our paid admission without further ado. George Marrow sensed this situation and has cashed in on his psychology.

BARTHELMLESS, for instance, has a host of admirers. They go to see Richard—and the title of the picture matters not. So when Showman Marrow books a Barthelmess picture he features that name, and the attraction itself is subordinated to the name of the star.

When one thinks of the picture "Secrets," the name of Norma Talmadge is instantly associated with the production.

Everyone has his screen favorites—actors upon whom he has come to rely for first rate performances—artists whose characterizations have thrilled him in the past and may be counted upon to thrill him again, strictly on their merits as photoplay productions. Some gain places in the Tried and Proved Hall of Fame through a combination of meritorious picturization and expert exploiting—for example that royal Tried and Proved "Nanook of the North."

Then there are others which find places in the heart of popularity because of the Tried and Proved quality of their stars. Name any of a score in which are featured picture personalities; even though the theme be not so engrossing, the action perhaps not-so-good, yet who can say that the public will not flock to see its Tried and Proved favorites? George Marrow is one who loudly says they will do so—and he has proved it.

SO, Mr. Tried and Proved Showman, here is another slant to consider which will enable you to select box office winners from a slightly different angle. Here is another thought that will help you to spell showmanship success with dollar signs. George Marrow has done it up at Broadway and 147th Street, and there is no reason to believe that the psychology of potential patrons is any different in uptown New York than it is in any other section where people make their homes and sally forth into the byways in search of a few hours entertainment in the form of an inexpensive yet interesting motion picture with a good story and a tried and proved cast.

In the Tried and Proved Hall of Fame

Here Is a Selected List of Pictures Chosen on Their Merits as the Kind of Theatre Attractions Which Answer the Public Demand. Not on the Say-So of Their Sponsors, but on the Unusual Box-Office Records They Have Established. This List Is Offered as the Most Reliable Criterion by Which to Select Dependable First Rate Attractions for Showing on Special Tried and Proved Nights

'Stephen Steps Out'

Comedy-Drama Released by Paramount

BRIEF: The young son of a wealthy American fails in history at school and he is sent to Turkey to learn the subject on the premises. He learns that the instructor who has flunked him in his exam at school is to be dismissed for it and he intervenes and gets them to retain the man, having first obtained for him a decoration from the sultan.

EVER since Douglas Fairbanks became famous and it was known that he had a young son, the movie world had been waiting for him to grow up sufficiently to make his debut in pictures, and finally the time came. In "Stephen Steps Out" it is really Doug. Jr., who does the stepping and up to date he has been acclaimed by critics and movie audiences all over the country, as a born actor with real genius, able to carry on for himself even if he did not have the backing of the fame of a popular dad.

But for the exhibitor the paternal fame should be the basis for exploitation. By that we mean that undeniably on his first picture at least, Douglas, Jr., will be sold on the merits of his parentage. Douglas Fairbanks is one of the most popular actors on the screen today and practically everyone is anxious to see what his son is like, if he has his father's smile, if he shows possibilities of equaling his dad acrobatically, if he is as good looking, if he can really act or whether the producer is depending on his connections alone. This is said with absolute assurance having ascertained the general opinion on the subject from the average person in New York where the film is having its premiere.

In connection with having his name ride big in lobby cards, advertising display, posters and other advertising media, the lobby should be decorated to reflect the spirit of the picture. This can very simply be done by the use of college pennants, seals and fraternity flags. Moreover the ticket seller could be dressed in typical collegiate attire and the ushers could be similarly rigged out. If you employ women instead of men, they could be dressed in what is the last word in co-ed apparel.

Since the story is one reflecting the life of the college and prep school boy, you have a fine field for tie-ups with merchants who deal in this type of clothes. There are some concerns which manufacture these clothes exclusively, and there is probably a merchant in your town who handles them. He will be glad of the opportunity of arranging a display using stills from the picture as a basis for tying up with the name of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

The same is true of sporting goods stores and stationers handling college pennants, flags, etc. The sporting goods store can make a direct prep school and college appeal by displays of sport clothes of all kinds and sport paraphernalia. They might even arrange for a showing in the lobby of your theatre. If it is made attractive it is a splendid advertisement for you.

You could stage an interest arousing street bally by dressing a middle aged or old man as the proverbial college professor and have him walk through the streets pulling a reluctant, typical college boy along with him and brandishing one of those old fashioned switches over his head. A crowd of interested onlookers will soon gather to find out what it's all about and the idea will hand people a good laugh and put them in a receptive mood for the picture. Other street ballys of the same type would also go well.

Gentlemen,

I was not aware that my subscription had expired with the last issue, and I am very grateful to you for having brought the matter to my attention for I should certainly regret having missed your publication for even one issue.

I consider your publication an absolute necessity for any showman who is on the job and in the business to make money. There is not a single department which I do not consider indispensable and from every one there are dozens of new things to be learned.

In addition, the make-up of the paper makes it always interesting and attractive and suggests artistic effects for my advertisements. I want to thank you for the many helps which you have given me and to wish you continued success.

Yours truly,
ARTHUR W. MORSE.

At a recent sales at Christy's famous London auction rooms, the collected letters of world-known celebrities brought fabulous prices.

But here is one of a collection which no price can purchase. To us they are invaluable for they are unsolicited expressions of sincere appreciation for work well done.

'The Shock'

Underworld Life Released by Universal

BRIEF: A poor cripple who worships from afar a beautiful young girl, is ultimately the means of saving her life. She is being attacked by gangsters when he enters, but his crippled body is no match for their healthy ones and he is being overpowered when the California earthquake breaks, destroying the gang and leaving these two to find happiness together.

LON CHANEY in one of his favorite roles—the role that film fans all over the country have come to look for from him—that of a cripple. Lon Chaney's name has become an even more powerful box office magnet as a result of his magnificent performance in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," mentioned on all lists as one of the best ten pictures of last year. Exploit his name to the skies.

"The Shock" has received to date 4,102 bookings. The Saenger Amusement Company, 19 theatres and Famous Players, Toronto, Canada, 8 theatres booked the picture over their circuits.

The following are among the other large bookings that this picture received: Loew's State, Boston, Mass.; Lafayette Square, Buffalo, N. Y.; America, Denver, Colo.; Rivoli, Toledo, O.; Walnut, Louisville, Ky.; Grand, Terre Haute, Ind.; Kinema, Los Angeles, Calif.; Poli's, Bridgeport, Conn.; Capitol, Atlantic City, N. J.; Strand, Washington, D. C.; Alhambra, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Blue Mouse, Tacoma, Wash.; Strand, Springfield, Ill.; and Granada, San Francisco, Calif.

"The Shock" has more exploitation possibilities than most films and by the clever use of a couple of them any exhibitor can clean up big on the show.

A good tie-up is offered with electric supply store windows in town. Place some stills and a banner in the usual display of electrical accessories, the banner to read: "No fear of a shock if you buy our supplies. See 'The Shock,' Blank Theatre, Now." Plant a character portrait of Lon Chaney in the window with the other materials.

Tie-up with your automobile accessory stores for exploitation on shock absorbers. Every store is an agency for a certain brand shock absorber. They will co-operate 100 per cent for prestige against opposition. A stream banner across the window display might read: "Everybody will need shock absorbers to see Lon Chaney in 'The Shock.' Get your's here and prepare for the most thrilling situation in the history of the screen."

Borrow or rent from your electrical supply house several hundred feet of insulated wire. String this along the main side of your theatre, on store front, so as to connect. All wires must lead to your theatre. Have placards made up to be hung on the insulated wire, with the wording—"Follow this wire for 'The Shock' at the other end." This will get some attention, and your title will be sold at no expense at all.

'The Spanish Dancer'

Spanish Romance Released by Paramount

BRIEF: Maritana, a beautiful Spanish girl, is so full of life and fun she is adored by the poor people among whom she lives and who dote on her dancing in the public squares. Through her daring she and her sweetheart become involved in affairs of the court and he is to pay the supreme penalty. Using her feminine charms and her artful wiles she not only saves him but wins a respected place for herself.

IN addition to the fact that the cast of this picture includes three such prominent and popular stars as Pola Negri, Wallace Beery and Antonio Moreno, the film was fortunately released at a time when anything Spanish is quite the vogue, and naturally it sounded an immediate response. It is a picture with a maximum of entertainment value to which the public is keenly alive and that it struck the right note is manifest by the volume of business to which the picture has already played.

The first consideration in planning the exploitation of the "Spanish Dancer" when you book or rebook it, is to make your lobby attractive and appealing. This can best be done by the employment of the available paper, a pair of shears, some cardboard and a generous portion of paste. Use the colored figures for cutouts and you will be delighted with the unusual results which you can achieve. You can make the Spanish dancer appear to be actually dancing in front of the theatre. People can be made to think they really see Moreno and Pola Negri embracing in front of your theatre, if you place these cutouts in advantageous places.

The large colored posters will also contribute toward the decorative effect if you arrange them tastefully in your lobby. We might also suggest that you get a number of tambourines and dress them up in a great number of vari-colored ribbons. Suspend these from the roof of the lobby or the lobby arch and as the wind blows they will make the characteristic noise which you will find will attract considerable attention.

The possibilities in merchant tie-ups must by no means be overlooked in exploiting this picture. You will find the department store or specialty shop handling Spanish shawls very willing to cooperate on a window display using stills from the picture for atmosphere. The same is true of the local hairdresser who handles Spanish combs, which at the present time are becoming steadily more fashionable.

'Her Temporary Husband'

Comedy Released by First National

BRIEF: In order to get the heritage of a million dollars the young heiress must marry. She applies at a home for incurables for their most infirm patient and plans to marry him. Unknown to her a young man who loves her and determines to win her, assumes the guise of the old invalid, marries the girl, hides his identity for many days by playing a dual part and finally makes known his person when he has completely won her heart.

A COMEDY demands exploitation schemes in the same vein so that the atmosphere of the picture will be preserved. The complication which arises from the necessity of the young heir to a million to get a husband and get him quick, is the basis for a number of really funny situations which are worked out with amusing detail here.

It might be wise to use the mail campaign for this picture. By that we mean, solicit the patronage by a direct letter, one designed to go to the women folks and another for the men. They can start out with catch lines and then go into detail of one or two of the incidents, perhaps. These should be selected to arouse the interest to the point where the reader will want to come to the theatre. This might best be done by telling the story of the picture and breaking off at the psychological point.

You might inaugurate a teaser campaign to advertise the film, with slogans like this in conspicuous places in your vicinity: "Do you think people should marry for money? What would you do if you had a million? The happiest marriages come from money, not through love. A million for a husband" and other such bits will serve to stimulate the curiosity. These should be let out a week or so before the showing. Then when the picture opens, connect them up.

The lovely clothes worn by the heroine will make good subject for merchant tie-ups.

'Jealous Husbands'

Melodrama Released by First National

BRIEF: A young woman, in order to help her sister-in-law, goes to her lover and begs for the letters which she wrote to him. He consents and is on the way to deliver them when he is killed. The letters are found by two gypsies who enter the home of the innocent woman. The husband's wrath is aroused and he gives their child to the gypsies and leaves his wife. Years later through a peculiar series of circumstances the child is returned to his rightful parents, and the wife's innocence is completely established.

HERE'S a picture with a title that the wives can't resist and that peaks the curiosity of the husbands—in other words here's a film that gets them all with its name, and keeps them with its story. So many exhibitors have cleaned up on this picture that it would be folly to let an opportunity for doing the same thing slip through your fingers.

Go after the wives. If their own husbands are jealous they will want to see how other women act under those conditions; if their own aren't they will want to see what it would be like if they were. Either way you can appeal to them, so go after them. Make use of some such confidential schemes as this.

Announce through your ads in the dailies, that you are prepared to answer any intimate questions which are troubling wives at this time. Only the lady who will be in charge of the bureau will know the contents of the problem which will be held in strictest confidence, and the reply will be mailed to the home of the writer. The questions, however, must be asked on the special blank form which has been prepared and can be secured at the box office at the time of the purchase of the admission ticket.

The husbands might easily be enlisted by a confidential mail campaign. The letter could start: "Do you ever get tired of married life? Perhaps it is your fault if you do. It may be that you are a 'jealous husband' and are making yourself miserable with false imaginings. Do you want to know the truth? Come to the..... Theatre next Wednesday night and solve the problem once and for all. The performance will be for men exclusively.

In the same way you might arrange a special matinee for women at which you will have a veiled woman answer some of the questions which were received, without mentioning names.

Ben Alexander who appears in the cast is a juvenile actor and his performance is sure to get the kids. He plays the part of the kidnapped boy who is later the means of saving his father's life and uniting husband and wife. Now, his hero scenes are just the thing kids eat up whole. They are typical of the things which sell the paper covered novel. And they will sell your picture to the youngsters if you are careful to get the posters picturing his scenes, in windows near the schools and other places that the children frequent.

'Scandal'

Comedy Drama Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Beatrice Vanderdyke, a young society girl, in order to defend her reputation, claims to be secretly married to a young man of the same away on a honeymoon cruise. While on the boat set. The parents are delighted and send the two he falls in love with her, but she does not feel the same way so he decides to keep her on a desert island until she changes her mind. At this point they are called back to prove their marriage and the approaching catastrophe makes her realize she loves the man, they marry and set out on a real honeymoon trip.

FOR several months New Yorkers and visitors to the metropolis enjoyed Cosmo Hamilton's "Scandal" which was playing at the time as a legitimate play on Broadway. With so much advance publicity it is scarcely to be wondered at that when the story was put on the screen the public immediately took it up. That was back in October 1921, and ever since that time, it has been pleasing audiences wherever it goes.

The fact that Constance Talmadge is featured adds considerably to the value of the story and the wise exhibitor will make her name prominent in all his advertising and arrange for every possible tie-up.

Since the story is by a recognized writer of popular American fiction, and originally appeared in book form, there should be no hesitancy about lining up the local book store or neighborhood shop handling books as a side line, and hooking up on as elaborate a display as possible. You might find it profitable to offer him cut rate coupons to accompany the sale of each copy, or some similar stunt which will boost your sales and his.

You might inaugurate a teaser campaign by some such device as this. Every normal person is interested in scandal, and perhaps nowhere is it more freely indulged in than in the small towns or in small communities of large cities. Therefore, the exhibitors should play up to this weakness. Get up signs reading: "Scandal." Have you heard it? Be sure to go to the—Theatre on (dates) and find out all about it." Place these all over the community and you will be delighted with the interest that will be created.

A very good method of popularizing a word or a phrase is to inaugurate it among the children. They will probably adopt it and use it everywhere and under all circumstances. Take advantage of this fact and deliberately go about getting them to take up the word scandal. You can give them the idea of saying it in a half whisper and putting a finger over their lips as they say it. Make it plain that it should be used anytime anyone asks them a question. They will be delighted, and the older folks will soon find themselves doing the same thing.

Concentrate a great deal of attention on your lobby, because it can be made the center of attraction if you plan it carefully. The yacht scenes in the picture are very effective and if you get posters and still picturing these scenes and use them for cut-out purposes you will achieve a very pleasing effect.

SHOWMANSHIP

Merchandising Raisins and Motion Pictures

Consider the Raisin Vendor, Then Go Thou and Do Likewise—Only More So.

He Sells Only One Line. You Have a Hundred.

SELLING entertainment via the motion picture has always been considered a field entirely apart from that of merchandising commercial commodities. And because of this accepted belief a world of splendid opportunities for selling theatre seats has remained hidden behind the limiting door of tradition.

But the door has been pried open a wee bit. We are catching glimpses of the tremendous possibilities of showman-salesmanship which lie beyond. We are realizing that the creation of the buying urge among theatre patrons is not so radically different from the sales methods employed in marketing any other commodity.

Compare the merchandising appeals of your theatre's attractions with those of other products. It is rather a startling thought, for instance, that raisins and motion pictures can be sold over practically the same counter—that essentially similar problems are involved.

Raisins were once sold entirely in bulk—by the pound. Those were the good old days when "Maw" (as David W. Griffith says) was wont to send us to the grocer with six cents for a pound of these cake-stuffers. When we deposited the bag in the kitchen, she lifted the suspiciously light package, and went on record to the effect that the shortweight merchant had seen the last penny of her trade. We sneaked out to the baseball lot with a guilty conscience and a satisfied stomach. Meanwhile mother, like as not, discovered a few dried peas, coffee beans and other foreign delegates mixed in with what remained of the raisins.

THEN came the Era of the Sanitary Package. A super-salesman in one master stroke made millions for himself and a thousand imitators. Now one buys a particular brand in a neat package, because both brand and package are persistently advertised nationally. Friend husband doesn't discover any difference between these heavily advertised raisins and those in a dozen other branded packages. But the feminine half of the family always buys the "Sunwheeze" brand. She just knows they are awfully superior. Don't all the ads tell her so? And these are the same raisins that used to be ignominiously buried, unlabeled and unsung, in a bin alongside the army beans. One day some genius will strike upon a scheme to individualize army beans, and he will reap a Rockefeller's reward.

But did the raisin distributor stop here? No siree. He followed up his "feature" with a "short subject"—a short of Raisin Junior. Now a bare handful of these highly touted iron capsules in "two-reeler" packages sell for a nickel. That's percentage.

Merchandising—scientific, persistent. That's all. Most remarkable when you think that he has been able to uncover only one real selling appeal—the iron property in raisins. There is more iron in some water. But he sings the song of the iron-raisin so well that it is the only theme he needs.

In contrast to this, what merchandising appeal do motion pictures offer? Where the food purveyor caters merely to bodily nourishment, your offerings are immeasurably higher and finer in every way. You are selling food for the heart. You are nourishing the mind, and satisfying the cravings of the soul. Look over your line: Romance — Adventure — Art — Beauty — Mystery — Pathos — Comedy — Tragedy — Thrills. Add expresses itself through emotions, dreams and ambitions. And motion pictures interpret and express these for folks better than they can for themselves. Hence your theatre is a necessity—not a luxury. Also you may concentrate on one selling argument: you are selling Happiness, nothing else but— You are selling that for which there is an unequalled universal demand. You have more of it to sell, in greater variety, than any other agent.

Merchandise your commodity on the same scientific principle that the raisin man uses—specialization.

How can you specialize? Well, let's say next week you are showing a feature whose main theme is Romance. Play up Romance from every possible angle. It has appeal for young and old, rich and poor. Everyone over seventeen has experienced some romance in life. Instantly you have touched a responsive chord in featuring Romance. Their Romance meant Happiness to them—while it lasted. They will come to you in search of Happiness—to live again their Romance. If—your showmanship is sufficient to lure them to your theatre by recalling cherished, never-to-be-forgotten memories. That's selling specialization—the trick of the raisin man.

CONSIDER what the United Cigar Stores Company is doing with its chain of Happiness Candy Stores. Hundreds of these shops are selling candy on the single idea of "Happiness." Specialization. Just so, you can take every one of your screen showings and specialize on the outstanding theme whatever it may be.

To be bromidic, specialization is the secret of success in any line of endeavor. Consider Rockefeller, Ford, Morgan, Schwab, Vauclain or any of a host of others whose income tax figures look like a compilation of the total attendance at "The Covered Wagon." What are their stories?

Specialization is featured large in the life of each. Rockefeller specialized in oil—only oil. You know what Ford has done for (and to) humanity with his one idea. Generations of Morgans have been bankers—nothing else. Steel is, and always was, the single thought of Schwab, and Vauclain is perpetually "steamed up" over locomotives.

So sell Happiness. It has a far greater appeal than oil, "flivers," or locomotives. And from week to week, as your program changes and you offer a new brand, tag the attractive individual package containing your necessary, staple merchandise with whichever label may be appropriate, whether it be "Love" or "Laughter." You will be selling what the world wants, and your theatre will be an institution, revered and beloved, equal in importance to the schoolhouse, the library and the church.

Good theory is always practicable. Are you willing to be shown? Give it a trial. Let us help you. We'll promise you some publicity ideas that will be "different," so shoot a line to Showmanship.

Lobbyology

Staples—Not Luxuries

YOU are merchandising something that meets the innumerable needs of the mind, the heart and the soul. Surely your product is a necessity—a staple, not a luxury.

Your theatre is just as necessary as a department store, and you offer as great an assortment of wares with equal consistency. But stop selling your merchandise in bulk. It's old fashioned. The raisin man got wise years ago.

Serve up your attractive line in even more attractive individual packages. It paid the dried grape distributor and it will pay you.

Assume the dignity of your calling, a merchant in an essential industry, a benefactor of humanity.

to the list until your hand grows pen-weary. Your line is limitless as the capacity of the heart—the mind—the soul.

Some line! What are you doing with it? Perhaps you're thinking that the comparison is unfair; that the raisin man is selling a staple article, something everyone uses, like bread; that all he has to do is talk up the nourishing value of his product; that motion pictures are an amusement—a luxury, and every picture different. How can one concentrate on a single selling talk as does the raisin man?

ALL right. Sit closer and let's analyze your argument. The physical body must be clothed and fed; hence such staple articles as underwear and raisins. But, as Mr. Griffith says: "Do we live for our bodies alone?" What of the mind, the heart, the soul? Are not their needs as vitally compelling as those of the physical being? How many of us would find any incentive to go on living just to feed and clothe the body?

Humanity lives to find Happiness. A necessity—a staple article. And Happiness

Buddie Stuart, F. B. O.'s "go-getting" exploitation man in Boston successfully completed a campaign on "The Mailman" for Fays theatre, Providence, R. I., which incorporated several new and unusual features that can be used elsewhere at small cost and with good results.

Stuart had a trailer made showing the inside workings of the local post-office. This trailer, in conjunction with the regular trailer, was used a week in advance of the opening. A letter carrier in uniform made speeches twice daily in advance of the showing, saying a few words about the hardships a mail carrier must undergo in the faithful discharge of his duties and the small pay he receives in return. The speech ended by extolling the merits of "The Mailman" and telling how true to life Emory Johnson has made the production.

The postmaster consented to let the carriers distribute envelopes addressed: "A Message from the Mailman" with a two-faced card on the inside, one side carrying an ad on "The Mailman" and the other calling upon the reader to write his congressman in behalf of the mailmen.

On Sunday a special showing was given for the mailmen and their families. The carriers paraded to the theatre led by their band.

RADIOED 'TIGER ROSE' SONG HELPS PICTURE

The F. B. Haviland Co., publishers of the waltz song, "Tiger Rose" have made arrangements for the song to be released to the National Association of Broadcasters, thus affording an excellent tie-up for the Warner Brothers' Classic of the Screen, "Tiger Rose," starring Lenore Ulric, and adapted from the Belasco stage success.

This will help exploit the picture, as can be seen from the fact that every time the song is sung over the radio, notice to that effect is carried in no less than five hundred newspapers. Local exhibitors, during the showing of "Tiger Rose," or several days in advance, can arrange with local broadcasters to give the song. Not only will the song tie up well with the advertisements and poster campaign, but in itself will be a free advertisement. No restrictions are placed on the broadcasting.

STRAND THEATRE CELEBRATES ITS TENTH BIRTHDAY

Everyone in New York learned that it was Strand Anniversary Week when five thousand balloons, some of which carried passes attached, were released from the theatre roof on Saturday afternoon when Broadway was crowded. The balloons were wafted all over New York's five boroughs—and patrons flocked to the Strand from each borough.

Those of the balloons that did not bear passes, had announcements that patrons might call at the theatre and receive booklets autographed by picture stars in commemoration of the occasion. Twelve prominent screen artists were in the lobby to autograph and distribute these. Of course it had been arranged for Pathe to shoot each stunt for use in the newsreel.

On Thursday each woman attending the matinee received an autographed photograph of Richard Barthelmess, with the result that the house drew ninety per cent on an off day.

'DAILY EXPRESS' A THRILLER?

Harry Reichenbach, Famous Players gilded publicity asset, has been looking over Europe but says its exploitation ideas are not so good. He tells of a picture playhouse that bragged its electric sign was cost free due to a tie-up with the Daily Express newspaper. The big illumination tells the world "The Daily Express Today and Every Day" and little dim lights mention the theatre's current attraction.

The manager wondered why business was shot to pieces, and Harry told him: "Don't you see, old top, they think you've been playing that Daily Express film at every show for the last year." Fancy that!

Another publicity stunt that proved costly was a lobby display in connection with "Down to the Sea in Ships." This was a cut-out of a whale that spouted real water—wet. The practical minded cockneys paraded before the doors until they got good and wet, and at the end of the week the theatre management was defending about fifty damage suits for spoiled clothing. That section of London will be well dressed for Easter.

THEATRE SCHOLARSHIP FOR BRIGHT PUPILS

Securing active and permanent co-operation between the motion picture theatre and the local school authorities is a difficult and most unusual thing to accomplish, yet that is what has been done by the Rialto Theatre, Hillyard, Wash., with the assistance of H. C. Eagles, Paramount exploiter in the Pacific Coast territory.

In his campaign of assistance Eagles worked on the theory that the school children of today are the supporting audiences of tomorrow. So he sought and received the sanction of the school board to a standing offer from the Rialto management to reward scholarship with theatre passes. According to the plan approved, the division of awards given to each senior and junior in the High School reaching the highest average in deportment, attendance and citizenship a season pass to the Rialto. A season pass is also given to each senior and junior achieving the highest scholastic honors during the year.

In the grades, a single performance pass is offered to the pupil in each room who has the highest general standing at the issuance of each monthly report card. Then, the room, all grades competing, getting the highest rating each month in attendance, deportment and citizenship will accompany its teacher in a body to a chosen night performance at the Rialto.

The plan has already resulted in the complete eradication of any feeling of hostility toward motion pictures on the part of the school authorities and is proving of tremendous advertising value to the Rialto through the keen rivalry of the pupils.

ARTISTICALLY COSTUMED LOBBY

The way Manager H. B. Clarke announced the First National picture at Greenville, S. C., shows the value of pennants as decorative advertising.

Why Not a Doll Show?

Why not tie-up with a hospital or some charity and hold a "doll show" or "lobby bazaar," for which dolls would be dressed and contributed by persons interested in the particular charity. The dolls could be shown in your theatre, and prizes and passes offered for the best. They would then be sold or auctioned from your stage for the benefit of the charity.

Wait until you show some picture featuring a doll either in the story as "Cytherea," or in the title, as "The French Doll," then you will have a very logical tie-up with your current attraction.

British Brain Blighters

From England comes word of a neat white cardboard box, edged in silver, such as usually contain fragments of wedding cake distributed by newly-weds. When these particular boxes were opened they contained a handful of imitation snow, and a little card saying: "Yes, he married her." Then followed the information that he had to face an awful storm to win her, and advice to see the great blizzard scenes in "Judgment of the Storm."

The idea is scarcely new, but well done it is effective, and may be tied-up with any picture dealing with marriages, or storms, or both.

Another London theatre issued cards on the "Broken Wing" asking: "When is an ace a king?" and answering: "When an aviation ace is a king of hearts."

$5,000 Reward

Rewards and crimes will always attract attention. The stunt put over by the Regent Theatre for the Grand Rapids, Mich., showing of "Red Lights" is antiquated—but it got there just the same.

A herald was widely distributed offering $5,000 for information regarding the missing Ruth Carson, daughter of millionaire railroad magnate. There was a picture of Marie Prevost who plays the part, and a description of her along the lines followed by police bulletins on such matters. It was said that she

Remember the Mothers

Mothers' Day is May 11. See that you do something for the mothers of your town on that date. Circularize the schools so that every kid will carry to his mother your invitation to attend your show free. Or extend the invitation in your own mother's name to the mothers of the city. Get the kids to bring their mothers to your theatre. Issue a special invitation to every "gold star" mother.

The white carnation has been adopted as the flower emblematic of this day of tribute. See that every mother who attends your theatre gets one. Ascertain the name of the mother who suffered severest loss because of the war, and give her a pass good for a year.

Here is a chance to do a kindness, to pay your respects to motherhood, to make friends of the mothers and the kids, to get good publicity for yourself and your theatre, and to get advertising in the news pages of the papers.

Leading Citizens in Tie-Up

In Wichita, Kansas, a slightly different angle was given to newspaper tie-ups on "When a Man's a Man." In addition to the essay contest stunt, one of the local papers carried a series of brief biographical sketches of leading citizens featuring the factors that caused them to be hailed as the biggest men in Wichita.

A special Saturday morning matinee was given for the boy scouts, and a tie-up with the Stock and Cattle Show made possible an elaborate parade of American Legionaries, steer bull-doggers, cowboys, and a float announcing the picture.

The picture opens with a stage diving scene, so the prologue is quite in order and the transition to the screen seems a continuation.

Free Shows Pay

Cliff Denham came through again when he tied up the Royal Theatre, Victoria, B. C., with the interurban railway. The railroad inaugurated a system of passes from Victoria to a nearby resort, and Manager Denham took immediate advantage of the fact by announcing that holders of the passes would be admitted to his theatre without charge on Thursday afternoons during an entire month.

The stunt got into the papers, and also received great publicity through the traction company and the real estate people. The railroad issued an announcement proclaiming "free transportation and free entertainment." Denham caught the publicity wave in its flood and rode the crest to the benefit of his theatre. Patrons returned and paid next time.

LIVE PRESS BOOK SLOGAN

The Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan press-book tells how to acquire a publicity punch that will kick receipts as high as this little playmate lifts her slipper.

MILTON CRANDALL, publicity expert of the Rowland and Clark chain of first run houses in Pennsylvania, has had published an attractive brochure on "Plastigrams," which he has titled "The Third Dimension Movie."

The booklet has been widely circulated among patrons, and has aroused unusual interest. There are several illustrations and a lucid explanation of just how the striking stereoscopic effect is secured.

Educational Pictures' third dimension pictures are coming in for quite some comment, and recently had a page devoted to them in the St. Paul Daily News' Sunday edition.

THERE are always six words that mean more than any other fifteen. Try always to find the six when preparing your advertising copy. Eternity is so vast as to be inconceivable. Yet Hendrick Van Loon has conveyed the thought in fifty-eight words. Read them.

"High up in the North, in the land called Svithjed, there stands a rock. It is a hundred miles high and a hundred miles wide. Once every thousand years a little bird comes to this rock to sharpen its beak. When that rock shall have been worn away, then a single day of eternity will have gone by."

THE program issued by the Mission Theatre for the Los Angeles premiere of Metro's "Thy Name Is Woman," was indeed worthy of the gala event which it heralded.

The artistic booklet contains exquisite pictures of all concerned in the making of the picture, and each photograph bears a fac-simile signature of its subject. Will Rogers, the gum-chewing laugh-maker, is billed as Master of Ceremonies, and a Biltmore supper-dance in honor of Director Fred Niblo is announced, with Lew Cody as Toast-master.

The Mission is under the direction of the Pacific-Southwest Theatres, Inc., of which A. H. Emenhiser is president.

ADVERTISING AIDS

A HELPFUL exhibitors' aid has been prepared by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan for the showing of the first Victor Seastrom production in America, "Name the Man!" It is a broadside, about 4x5 feet, in which are reproduced the newspaper advertisements from several of the big cities which first showed this Seastrom special. Some of the advertisements are exact copies of the press book ads. Others have been adapted by exhibitors from cuts in the press book.

The broadside has been sent to a list of the leading first run exhibitors, supplied in bulk to the branch exchanges and a copy attached to the exploitation yellow supplement. In many cases, the exhibitors have used the cuts and the title arrangement of the press book ads, but have made up their own copy descriptive of the picture. The Capitol Theatre in New York, the Broadway-Strand in Detroit and the Allen Theatre in Cleveland, used in the ads their personal endorsement of the picture.

DURING the showing of First National's "Flaming Youth," "The Lariat," the patron house organ published by Rowland and Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh, used a news article calling attention to the liberal automobile parking space in East Liberty, indicating that they expected a huge attendance.

It marked a distinct bid for automobile trade and probably was responsible for drawing motor parties to that particular house. In general it had the salutary effect of counteracting the bothersome question of "What Shall I do With My Car" on the part of people who came downtown in a machine, wanted to attend a picture house and still were doubtful as to how it could be done under the circumstances.

DIRECTOR WHITNEY HUBNER, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., during the past week broadcasted over the WSB Atlanta station "A Tone Story of the Evolution of Dixie," a combination oral and musical descriptive history of the South from its earliest days of settlement. This is the first time such an event has been attempted by radio and all Southern newspapers commented favorably upon it. Good publicity for the Rialto, as was shown by the increased patronage.

MEET SOME OLD FRIENDS

And at least one new one, Fred Allen, F. B. O., London, surrounded by a few cut-outs showing why England knows about Warner Brothers' Classics of the Screen.

PUBLICITY WITH A PUNCH

A smashing ad for the Universal picture. One that will punch 'em right between the eyes and make 'em like it. Its message gets over with a bang.

FRANK L. BROWNE reverted to the teaser style of campaigning in connection with his showing of First National's "Twenty-One." Five thousand teaser cards, diamond shaped, and ten men to do the tacking supplied the ammunition for the campaign. The cards read: "Look for 21 Opposite P. E. Station."

Staring from every telegraph pole and frame building they aroused endless curiosity. The campaign was supplemented by handbills that carried the same wording but gave the directions more explicitly, mentioning the Liberty Theatre by name.

A STORY about a veil and an old coat containing some keys left on the dock by a girl supposed to have drowned herself because of a lost love, broke on the front page of the Detroit Times, startled the town, and was followed up next day with a four column ad in all the newspapers of Detroit announcing "The Marriage Circle" at the Broadway Strand Theatre.

The manager put the stunt over with great success. The keys in the pocket were for a room in the Hotel Wolverine. The police searched the room and told how the poor girl, who was a professional dancer named Mizzie Stock, tried liquor and then drugs to forget. The note closed with the fact that the girl decided to end it all in the river. Mizzie Stock is portrayed by Marie Prevost in the picture.

Another feature was an attractive herald which flooded the city. On one side was the price list of "Old Crow," "Three Star Hennessy," "Johnny Walker," and a number of the other dear departed. A line asked, "Don't you wish you had stocked up?" The other side, in big black type, read: "You'll regret it even more if you fail to see 'The Marriage Circle.' Whether or not they had 'stocked up' the Detroit public decided not to take a chance on missing the picture.

THROUGH MANY WINDOWS

Wherein There Is Revealed a New Department, a New Exhibitor Service, a New Era in Showmanship

WE are a nation of advertisers—national advertisers. Through magazines, newspapers, billboards, by mail, telegraph, telephone and radio, our manufacturers broadcast the message of their products to every town that has a Main Street.

And on that main street, even on the side streets, these messages find and reach their ultimate target, the buying public, through many windows—the windows of the local dealers. These constitute the final link connecting manufacturer with consumer.

They Buy Through the Eye

The American public daily gazes into over three quarters of a million windows, whose alluring displays guide the purchase of every conceivable human requirement.

But when it comes to merchandising amusement, a sorry insignificant one quarter of one per cent. of these windows are giving publicity to what you have to sell—motion picture entertainment.

Startling thought? It was to us. THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW has evolved a plan placing at your disposal all the benefits to be derived from the scientific exploitation of nationally advertised products. These are constantly reaching out with irresistible appeal through many windows in your city to a public that represents your potential patronage.

You Can Talk with Crowds

We have secured for you the close co-operation of America's leading national manufacturers. That you have our unqualified support is always understood. So it but remains for you to profit by the plan.

At a preview of many important films, close analysis will be made to determine the most logical features for effective tie-ups with nationally advertised products. Through careful selection a limited number of these manufacturers will be chosen from various fields which give the showman the greatest exploitation opportunities.

Those receiving preferment will be listed in the current issue of your trade paper, THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, together with complete information regarding the tie-up arranged for you with their particular products.

Clip the Coupon

Following is a coupon for your convenience in advising the National Tie-Up Section when the attraction will be booked at your theatre. Upon receipt of the coupon you will be furnished with immediate detailed information, pertinent suggestions, and every possible assistance. The local dealers stocking the products in the tie-up will at once get in touch with you, and complete display material will be forwarded. It merely remains for you to act on the tie-up plans which have been perfected for you.

Additions to Your Lobby

Thus through the proven medium of display you present your attraction to

Reap Rich Rewards With National Tie-Ups

THE National Tie-Up guarantees publicity for your attractions through the proven medium of window displays. It is a systematic plan for producing profits.

Each tie-up is with a national advertiser of a nationally known product. Thus you reap without expense a generous share of the reward accruing from million dollar exploitation.

Every window you automatically secure in booking a tie-up picture is a branch lobby of your theatre. These extension lobbies will turn window shoppers into ticket buyers, and change your box office into a private gold mine.

your city through many windows. Heretofore you may have known the occasional tie-up, more or less haphazard—a hit-or-miss affair of doubtful value. No expertly planned display; no careful balancing of effects; no scientific buying urge to lure the public to your theatre. But now countless eyes will see these window signposts pointing the way to your box-office.

Million Dollar Advertising—Free

Under this policy of standardized National Tie-Ups the possibilities are limitless. Your bookings in the course of the year will bring you into close affiliation with the entire field of manufacturing industries. These organizations will place at your service the high-priced machinery of their advertising departments.

You will derive the revenue benefits that a tie-up with their nationally known products is bound to create. This close association with national advertisers will enhance the prestige of the motion picture business, which even now is the seventh most important industry in the world.

Exploitation Expense Eliminated

Very material assistance is offered in solving the problem of the ballyhoo by the simple process of elimination in great degree. With National Tie-Up publicity furnished ready to hand, it is only the occasional picture that calls for a ballyhoo.

This is as it should be. The circus days of the industry have passed. The circus, like Christmas, comes but once a year and by its infrequency gains effectiveness. So be it with the ballyhoo. Every day can't be July Fourth. Even the best fireworks soon sputter out, and there is a very definite limit to the variety of stunt publicity which the exhibitor may appropriate or devise.

NATIONAL Tie-Up SECTION

Window Shoppers Become Patrons

The time, money and energy expended in working up exploitation ideas may now be devoted to other constructive angles of your business. National Tie-Ups standardize your publicity. The system is an insurance policy taking the form of a publicity plan for producing profits.

Its effectiveness is increased because it is not directly connected with your theatre. Your publicity is created in the dealers' windows and directed to your box-office. Window shopping is a national diversion. The strong chain of habit causes every passerby, consciously or unconsciously, to view your wares. Your message registers.

Direct Results from Indirect Ads.

A large proportion of these people may pay only casual attention to your lobby display. They may not read your newspaper ad. They are not all on your mailing list. But the whole army of passersby will be reached directly through indirect advertising. The National Tie-Up does for you what may be done in no other way. Through many windows you will reach the people you would otherwise miss.

National advertisers expending annually many thousands of dollars have learned from experience that window displays are sure-fire box-office attractions for them. Yours is the profit from their experimentation. You can't go wrong in following the lead of such publicity experts. Automatically you are the recipient of all the cumulative publicity accruing to a nationally advertised, nationally known product.

Dependable Box-Office Publicity

THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW ushers in a new era in showmanship. We offer consistent, steady, dependable publicity to your box-office. Through many windows—the best business windows in your city—you can now make a successful bid for new patronage, and continue to hold the old.

Warner Brothers' 'Beau Brummel' Teems With Tie-Ups

Classic of the Screen, Starring Barrymore, a Tie-Up Triumph—
Seven National Advertisers in National Event

THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW believes it is a peculiarly happy coincidence that it is enabled to offer you "Beau Brummel," the Harry Beaumont-Warner Brothers' production, as the first feature for focusing public attention on your theatre through many windows.

The fact that John Barrymore plays the title role is in itself a guarantee of favorable publicity. The name "Beau Brummel" is a household word which carries its own advertising to every patron's mind. If the producers had deliberately planned a picture for tie-up possibilities they could not have hit on a more fortunate choice than the one featuring the first gentleman in Europe. For this historic figure, George Bryan Brummel, the fashion plate of a past century, typifies to this very day the idea of sartorial supremacy in masculine attire.

In "Beau Brummel" John Barrymore portrays this super-dandy through all his fascinating colorful existence as adventurer, lover, social climber, arbiter of fashion, till he reaches his pinnacle as a Prince's pal, only to be swept down into the oblivion of a debtor's exile and the tragic end of a madman. It is all here—glamorous romance, stirring adventure, fascinating love interest, clever intrigue, marvelous costuming, splendid settings. And through it all Barrymore carries you with him in his superb delineation of this engaging figure, at the end contributing a bit of character transformation that will rank as a classic with his "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

BEAU BRUMMEL is unique. It has that elusive quality of being "different" that so many directors strive for and so few attain. It is not due so much to directorial achievement as to the inherent nature of the theme, the character and the superb portrayal Barrymore creates.

The showman who does not plan to exhibit the film in the near future is none the less provided with a fine chance to watch what happens elsewhere on National window tie-ups with this master effort. Let him consider the exploitation wealth unearthed by the idea and visualize the remunerative results reachable through this mighty medium.

Let us first acquire a bit of that elusive thing termed atmosphere. A hundred years ago humanity and human nature were just the same as they will be a century hence. But the frame of the picture was different. The business of living was more colorful. The accessories of life were more picturesque. Men lived and loved and fought and died much as they do today. But they did these things in finest silks, satins and velvets, lace-frilled linen, jewel-buckled boots, powdered wigs. They were creatures of polished, perfumed pomp-ery. It was almost another age of chivalry.

IN all this romantic setting no single figure holds more popular appeal than the slender elegance of George Bryan Brummel, creator of fashion, lover of ladies, fop and gallant gentleman, destined to die an insane pauper.

When the beefy Prince of Wales endeavored to slight him, it was the Beau turned to Lord Byron and with a magnificent gesture inquired: "Who is your fat friend?" It was the Beau who listened patiently to a destitute friend's appeal for help, and in the proud confidence of his fame said: "You may walk with me tomorrow." To be seen with Brummel was sufficient to appease any creditor.

It was the famous Beau who wagered he could sponsor a ridiculous style and make it live. He won. That is why we wear "stovepipe" hats today. Another of Brummel's artistic sartorial triumphs was the invention of the cravat. Its popularity still endures, as does the Beau's.

So much for the picture. What of its possibilities? Seven national manufacturers have lined up their products. They all extend the strong hand of co-operation. Each of these national advertisers of nationally known products is right behind you on this picture with all the powerful publicity which has been developed by high-powered, high-priced advertising machinery. You reap a rich share of the reward accruing from million dollar exploitation—free.

National Advertising Tie-Up Treasures

NEVER before has the exhibitor been presented with such box-office publicity opportunities as THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW offers through the National Tie-Up on "Beau Brummel."

Seven is loaded with luck. Your seven talismen in the inauguration of this policy for procuring publicity through many windows will make you fortune's favorite. Read 'em and—rejoice!

1. THE GLOVE INDUSTRIES ADVERTISING COMMITTEE. Their slogan is "In Any Event—Gloves," and in any event the tie-up fits the picture like a glove.
2. "FASHIONKNIT" NECKWEAR, a product of the Franklin Knitting Mills, long the national synonym for good ties, and now for good National Tie-Ups.
3. "PERSONALITY" CLOTHES, manufactured by Shirek & Hirsch, tailors extraordinary to well-dressed American "young-fellos."
4. VIVAUDOU MAVIS TALC, "The Final Touch That Means So Much." Mavis is the name of a bird, and this is a "bird" of a tie-up.
5. STA-SHAPE HATS, made for sixty years by the Frederick Berg and Company, and known wherever Saturday Evening Post and Literary Digest are read.
6. SAMPSON'S DRESS JEWELRY, fashioned by John S. Sampson & Son's master craftsmen. The ultimate in the good taste which Beau Brummel exemplified. A jewel of a tie-up.
7. MINERALAVA MASSAGE CLAY, exploited by the Valentino Beauty Contest. Always associated with famous picture stars—and now with a famous picture

SHOWMAN'S POT OF GOLD IN WINDOW TIE-UPS

*Nationally Advertised Commodities

THE National Window Tie-Up is launched with this issue. You are confronting a development in showmanship whose far-reaching effects you can readily appreciate. It now rests with you. The plan is as big as you want to make it. Beau Brummel was a super-showman without any industry or organization to back him. But he knew how to make every trick count. With the manufacturer's publicity, the producer's co-operation and EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW backing you to the limit, you can certainly line them up at your box-office.

First—Glove Industries

Can one possibly conceive of a "Beau Brummel" without a pair well fitting gloves? Not by the wildest stretch of the imagination. However, the "Beau" of 1824 would certainly feel like a passe sport if he got one flashing glimpse of the type of handgear worn by the modern "Beau" of 1924. The "Beau" had exquisite hands. You surely can get publicity of a caliber that plays on the cupidity of the well known public by showing a close-up of the "Beau's" hands—taken from stills which are easily available—alongside Twentieth Century handwear. There you have a human interest window with a punch. Get it!

Second—Personality Clothes

The "Beau" once said to his friend, the Prince of Wales. "George do you call that thing a coat?" And poor George got red in the face. He knew the darn thing pulled, and wrinkled and bulged, and was generally an atrocity. With the neat, up-to-date, well-appointed apparel contrasting with the jacket that tortured Prince George you should attract the attention that pays from passersby. Shirek and Hirsch, makers of Personality Clothes, nationally advertised and known from coast to coast, will throw the brunt of a generous advertising budget into window displays. There's an alluring cue for the live showman.

Third—Vivaudou Cosmetics

The women who enjoyed Beau Brummel's friendship should be compared to the belles who grace the drawing rooms of today. In the Nineteenth Century the perfumer's art, the cosmetic craft produced aromas too heavy and powders and rouges too unsanitary for the dainty boudoir ablutions of the fair sex. Nowadays Milady uses a brand of perfume and cosmetic of which she may well feel proud. A display on the Twentieth Century brand of make-up will not be lost on the ladies who pass the windows in which the products are shown. And the fact that the name Vivaudou is associated with the commodity in question should lend an impetus to interest not to be ignored with impunity by the exhibitor who is given an opportunity to tie-up with the window display.

Fourth—Mineralava

Synonymous with the distinction and well deserved reputation of Vivaudou powders and rouges is that of Mineralava, a name that recently won acclaim as sponsor of a beauty contest, in which Rudolph Valentino acted as judge. "Beau Brummel" hardly could have stood much improvement in his sartorial and tonsorial appointment. However, that was because Mineralava was unknown in 1824. In 1924 the "Beau" would undoubtedly have seen the fallacy of doing without the refreshing manipulation of a Mineralava massage. Now visualize the drawing power of a window display showing the last touch of a modern face healer "doing its stuff" by one who left no stone unturned to avail himself of anything purporting to improve the classic features with which nature endowed him. There are plenty of stills available, to help you carry out the stunt. Can you afford to pass it by? Of course not! (Continued on page 52.)

Beau Brummel Never Appeared In Public Without Gloves!

BEAU BRUMMEL never appeared in public without gloves, but how different was the handwear worn by that arbiter of fashion from the gloves that are just as essential a part of the everyday attire of John Barrymore. Beau's gloves were made of heavy, poorly tanned leather. For him there were none of the snappy capes or mochas that every merchant offers today, nor could he know the joy of hands encased in the velvety buckskins that help the average man achieve sartorial perfection now. There are more than 100,000 retail stores throughout the country that sell gloves. They are all just as anxious to improve their businesses as you are to pack your theatre. Further, they have the support of an intensive campaign now being conducted by The Glove Industries Advertising Committee, which represents more than three quarters of the entire manufacture of gloves in the United States.

UNIQUE CLOTHES TIE-UP ON 'BEAU BRUMMEL'

*Personality Clothes Windows
Open to Live Showman*

WHETHER "clothes makes the man" is absolutely qualified in terms of truth—without restriction and conditions—is still a moot question in the various stratas of society.
But the fact is established that twentieth century civilization is sufficiently aware of the importance of well-fitting, neat attire, to cultivate the selection and wearing of clothes with an interest that concretely conveys the importance of good-looking apparel in man's battle with the peculiar forces of life.

How important this fact is to exhibitors may be seen when friend exhibitor is shown how he can capitalize this important truth to his box-office advantage.

In the world of merchandise, Shirek and Hirsch's Personality Clothes has the same national significance that distinguishes the mere mention of Gillette Safety Razors, Proctor and Gamble Soap, or Colgate's Tooth Paste.

Having established this fact, one need go only one step further to bring home to the exhibitor what it would mean to have the name of his theatre, his show, and his personal self, if desired, tied up with the suggestive name of the well advertised Personality Clothes. Not only linked up, but played up in a window display, and endowed with an advertising appeal nothing short of alluring to male passersby.

Picture the human interest quality and the strong advertising appeal in the following combination. A striking Personality Clothes window display, with all the inferences of a "window shopping" patronage established on a long term of years of innovation, unique dress, national advertising, co-operative dealer helps, institutional good will and so on.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW is your mediator on the proposition. With practically no more trouble than your mere acknowledgement of the attractiveness of the project by sending in the coupon shown elsewhere in this section, you fall heir to the good things described.

Fifth—Fashionknit Neckwear

You know the susceptibility of the human male to a display on ties. This fact combined with the fact that "Beau" Brummel was the creator of the cravat gives you a formidable cue for catch-lines and a picture story in your local merchant's window the value of which is incalculable when measured in its effect on your box office. Fashionknit ties are as well known in the world of men's furnishings as the cravat with which the famous
"Beau" startled the drawing room habiteaus, who rubbed shoulders with the Prince of Wales, and innumerable Dukes and Lords.

Sixth—Sampson Dress Jewelry

By the way, if you've ever felt the lure of jewelry, or even the powerful effect of merely looking at it in a show window, you'll need very little urging as to the value of tie-ing up in a window display with your local jewelry merchant. More people buy jewelry because they've been attracted to it in well prepared windows, than you can crowd into the Sahara Desert. Can you picture the value of these impetuous shoppers seeing an advertisement of your attraction while their buying palates are still wet with desire.
Enough said. Get in touch with the REVIEW for an introduction to a Sampson Jewelry display, exploiting "Beau Brummel."

STRONG SELLING LURE IN DISPLAYED NECKWEAR

Fashionknit Ties Offer Unusual Exhibitor Window Helps

THERE is nothing to which the human male is so susceptible of attention as a display on ties. This, no one with reason, or the slightest urge for proper dress can deny. And that no one remembers this better than the wily female out to win the plaudits of her gentleman friend is evidenced in the many whole plays, comic newspaper strips and the like, that build their structure of entertainment around this fact.

We start, then, with the unquestioned assumption that neckwear alluringly arranged in a window very rarely fails to win its quota of patrons who hadn't the slightest intention of making a purchase. How often do we look back on depleted pay envelopes owing to the tempting, irresistible invitation of a well-displayed tie! Often enough, we say, to establish the fact beyond all question.

But there are ties and ties. Most ties attract attention. Yet some ties attract more attention than others. Just as the mere mention of a Gillette razor brings a preponderance of ideas in the mind of the shaver over those connected with any other razor. In the world of ties Fashionknit is in this category. Few people there are, indeed, who wear ties, or only look at ties, that don't know the distinctiveness of a Fashionknit.

Therein lies the cue and the boost for the exhibitor. As part of the great National Window Display tie-up scheme effected by EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW every showman playing "Beau Brummel" is offered the remarkable 100 per cent exploitation value of a window hook-up with a local merchant. The display is the exhibitor's and the local merchant's simply for the asking. The showman thus interested has but to clip out the coupon from the Fashionknit advertisement in this National Tie-Up section, sign it and send it direct to the office of the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

Then subtly, watch the window shoppers turn into movie patrons.

PLAY WITH YOUR FRIEND THE JEWELRY MERCHANT

Jewelry! The very word conjures up images that fill the mind with a deep yearning. The sight of glistening, well-cut gems hold out an allure to which humans, ever since time began, have pulsated with unquenched desires and fanciful wishes.

More people have purchased jewelry through the original approach of being attracted to it by a sparkling array of gems and trinkets on display than can possibly be recorded!

Wise indeed is the showman who is possessed of the urge to tie-up with his local jeweler for a window display that features both jewelry and his attraction at one fell swoop. Happy to say, that opportunity is available to showmen playing Warner's screen class, "Beau Brummel."

John S. Sampson and Son, Jewelers of New York, realize the significance of a jewelry window display hooked up with the famous past master of fashion and are offering, with the co-operation of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, showmen the availability of distinctive displays in conjunction with their local jewelry merchants. The showman has but to conservatively visualize the effect of passersby peering intently into windows that have attracted them daily since they can remember, and will continue to attract them daily for a longer time than they care to estimate, to judge of the unquestioned advertising value such a tie-up has for him.

'BEAU BRUMMEL' LINKED WITH GLOVE INDUSTRY

Nationally Advertised Handwear to Exploit Barrymore Film

BEAU BRUMMEL, internationally recognized as a criterion of good dress, and foremost leader of fashions for men, was the originator of the cravat or four-in-hand. Because of its origin the cravat and the name of Beau Brummel have become almost synonymous.

Now any ambitious exhibitor, on the alert for original exploitation angles would immediately sense the value of a tie-up between some well known brand of glove, and the new Warner Brothers' feature starring John Barrymore—"Beau Brummel."

Of course, the more widely advertised the brand, the greater the number of people who know of it. It is desirable, therefore, to get the biggest nationally advertised brand on the market, for tie-up exploitation stunts.

To throw into the field, let us say, a brand of gloves that is better known than any other brand in the world, would, conservatively, speaking, be quite a feather in the hat of any exploiter. What then, of a tie-up that makes practically every well-known glove in the land part of and party to a project which will draw the public's attention to the Warner Brothers' feature! That is exactly what is taking place in the tie-up with The Glove Industries, an association which comprises practically all the glove manufacturers whose commodities have any distinction at all.

There is the Glove Industries Advertising Committee to add its force. Their co-operation will link the picture and the product together, and readers of the ads will of necessity come to know the new Warner feature. Even before the picture strikes your town, your patrons will have heard of it through these ads and will be waiting to see it.

NO exhibitor with the proper spirit of showmanship lurking in his make-up will fail to take advantage of the unusual opportunities offered him in the National Tie-Up Window Displays on "Beau Brummel."

And the remarkable part of the whole campaign is the manner in which these tie-ups may be made valuable to every theatre manager who books "Beau Brummel" without any effort on his part. There has already been planned several styles of campaigns each one suited to a special type town or community. All any exhibitor has to do is fill in the coupon which he will find in this issue of the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, mail it in, and the machine will start working for him.

The merchants in his town will be provided with the necessary material and information to give the exhibitor the utmost cooperation in putting the picture across.

MINERALAVA TIE-UP ON 'BEAU BRUMMEL'

Vivaudou Product Will Help Exhibitors Exploit Warner Feature

EVERYONE has learned the value of the merchant tie-up. The better known the product, the better the tie-up.

Mineralava had its first big inception in a motion picture way when, in the staging of the celebrated beauty conquest last winter Rudolph Valentino, famous "sheik" of the screen, acted as judge. The wide attention this affair attracted and the comment provoked all over the country attested to the interest in beauty and in the commodity which played such an important part in exploiting it.

However, interesting and as attractive as the Mineralava Beauty Contest proved, it is as nothing compared to the high-power exploitation possibilities of the Mineralava Window Display Tie-Up Project. The Vivaudou Company, who are the distributors of this nationally advertised product have joined forces with EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW in giving every exhibitor showing the Warner screen classic, "Beau Brummel," an opportunity to avail himself of publicity and advertising that can hardly be estimated in sheer dollars and cents. By that, we mean, dollars and cents alone could not buy this unusual opportunity.

Mineralava, as well known in the gentleman's barber shop as it is in the lady's beauty parlor, has a window display drawing power which needs little elaborating here, to convey its significance. Fill in the coupon signifying your desire for this particular tie-up and we will do the rest.

BROADWAY WINDOWS "Put Over" Beau Brummel for Two Big Weeks at New York's MARK STRAND THEATRE

NEW YORK CITY

MOE MARK, PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER

April 18th, 1924.

OFFICE OF
JOSEPH PLUNKETT
MANAGING DIRECTOR

Warner Brothers,
1600 Broadway,
New York City.

Dear Sirs:-

I want to congratulate you on the splendid success of "BEAU BRUMMEL" at the Strand Theatre. We did all the business the theatre could hold and the audiences enjoyed the picture immensely. The second week held up great, which is very unusual, and I am glad I have had the chance to run this excellent picture.

Incidentally, let me voice a word of praise for the many excellent window displays secured for our showing of the picture. That these window tie-ups played an important part in the splendid box-office returns, there can be no doubt. This fact is made certain by the further fact that little else out of the ordinary was done in an advertising way for this showing.

Again let me congratulate you on this splendid picture.

Yours very truly,

Joseph Plunkett
MANAGING DIRECTOR.

JLP:F

Two weeks at New York's Mark Strand Theatre is an achievement for any picture. Two weeks at this leading Broadway house to sustained big business is an achievement rare indeed. That's what "Beau Brummel" did. And with practically no advertising save window displays.

For this showing Warner Bros. arranged two hundred merchant tie-ups, securing prominent window displays throughout the theatrical district. For three weeks these windows were the center of public attention, hundreds of thousands of passersby being impressed with the bigness of the production from the attractiveness of the displays. That's why the Mark Strand, to use Mr. Plunkett's own words, "did all the business the theatre could hold."

YOU CAN DO THE SAME!

A Story and Star That Mean CROWDS!

BARRYMORE MEANS

—a name the very sound and reading of which magnetizes your public and wins its confidence for any production in which he is the center of interest; a name of distinction, fame and popularity that has been featured in newspapers these last ten years until it is something to conjure with.

"Beau Brummel" Means

—a title for the past hundred years familiar to the English reading people the world over; a character of romance, a personage of distinction whose strange machinations made him the beau ideal of his time. Richard Mansfield immortalized him on the stage; this screen version will cause the memory of "Beau Brummel" to live forever.

No combination of star and story ever filmed offers more exploitation opportunities than this. And of all opportunities, these Window Display Tie-ups are the greatest.

Sign all the coupons for all the National Tie-ups listed on "Beau Brummel" and you'll need a larger theatre.

VIVAUDOU TO EXPLOIT 'BEAU BRUMMEL'

All Dealers in Vivaudou Products Enlisted to Boost Film

BEAU BRUMMEL, the international dandy and style forecaster was a subtle charmer of women. Women could no more resist him than they can resist the delicate lure of a fragrant perfume. In his wake there always followed a trail of women just as an exquisite perfume will capture the fancy of ladies of discrimination and hold them fast.

There is something illusively subtle about a rare perfume, just as there is unquestioned allure in the gorgeous cosmetics and powders which add classic and tranquil beauty to the members of the fair sex.

Beau Brummel was the personification of fastidiousness in dress—Vivaudou products in the same way, are the quintessence of elegance in those products which grace Milady's dressing table.

Vivaudou products advertised throughout the country through the most conspicuous mediums are probably the best known products of their kind on the market today. The elaborate campaigns and the substantial backing these have received from all reliable sources in the last few years have made them known everywhere. There is scarcely a store of any consequence which does not show the Vivaudou sign.

Under such circumstances what showman would not be delighted at the prospect of handling a picture whose exploitation lay in its connection with such a name. It means that every merchant handling Vivaudou commodities is a more or less active salesman for "Beau Brummel." It means that hundreds of window displays throughout the country will be made available to the showman for the purpose of acquainting his patrons with the fact that "Beau Brummel" is coming or has come to his theatre.

And yet all this involves no work on the part of the exhibitor. He merely fills in the accompanying coupon, mails it to the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, and arrangements will be made for him for giving his showing the greatest possible amount of publicity.

What Beau Brummel Would Do Today—

AS the actual scene from the picture in the above window display shows, Beau Brummel, himself took great pride in his clear skin. If he were living today he would of course use MINERALAVA which is the best and most widely used beauty clay on the market. Foremost stage beauties and thousands of women use it continuously.

The BEAU BRUMMEL window display tie-up with MINERALAVA is a striking one in that it appeals to women and men alike. With such a tie-up you cater to the entire grown up population of America.

Send in the names of your local druggists, beauty shops and department stores if you haven't time to see them yourself—and simply sign the attached coupon. You will get 100 per cent co-operation gratis.

YOUNG HAT STORES FEATURE 'BEAU' HAT

One of the 14 attractive window displays arranged with the Young Hat Stores. Each store shows the high beaver worn by Beau Brummel of 1824 and the latest "beau" hat of 1924. In co-operation with the Warner Classic playing at the Mark Strand,

RICE AND HUTCHINSON WINDOW TIE-UP

During the showing of Warner's "Beau Brummel" at the Mark Strand, New York, exact boots and pumps as worn by the stars in the picture were on display in all the ten stores run by the Rice and Hutchinson Company. It attracted unusual interest.

STA-SHAPE HATS BACK OF 'BEAU BRUMMEL'

Nationally Advertised Men's Headwear to Feature Film in Window

OVER fifty years ago in a tiny primitive shop, Frederick Berg, manufacturer of the well-known Sta-Shape Hat for Young Men, established the pioneer hat-making organization in Orange, N. J., now the center of the men's fine felt hat industry. The growth and stability of this organization is expressed better than in words by the present modern concrete and steel factory and the 3,500,000 readers, who, in two national publications alone, have the advertising message of Berg's Sta-Shape Hats brought to their attention.

All the weight and significance of such prestige has been now conscripted to co-operate with the showmen alert for free exploitation on the splendid Warner Brothers' screen classic, "Beau Brummel."

The co-operative arrangement of a Berg Hats window display will focus the effect of Berg national advertising in your town to your profit. It is merely being superfluous with words to go into an exhortation on the unusual appropriateness of a display which has as its features, beautiful headgear and some stills of "Beau Brummel," the apostle of modern fashion. The showman has but to use the scissors, sign the coupon and send it in to the REVIEW. Then watch the swift powers of co-operative exploitation functions.

Drug Display Attracts Crowds

Gray's Drug Store, on Broadway and Forty-third Street, is practically a rendezvous for thousands of shoppers and theatre-goers, who select this spot to meet friends, wives, and sweethearts. One can easily picture the effect of a window display on this corner on "Beau Brummel," with folks in a ticket-buying mood practically swarming all over the sidewalk. The window was dressed up with several stills of John Barrymore in the Warner screen classic and a card prominently displayed read, "Suggested Gifts." The commodities suggested were cosmetics and drug articles of various description. The onlookers were—well, potential, movie patrons, every one of them.

TIMES SQUARE LIBERAL WITH WINDOWS

Hats and Picture Are Featured in Unique Window Displays

HARDLY had the late Warner Brothers' classic, "Beau Brummel" breathed its intimation that it would show on Broadway, than immediately, the merchants in the "roarin' forties," where space is valued by the inch, evinced an unusual enthusiasm for window display tie-ups by featuring their commodities with life-size paintings, wax figures and stills representing characterizations of the artist in the picturization of the famous story.

Stores featuring a diversity of products were requisitioned for the purpose. Dainty footwear of the type worn by Brummel was displayed by the Signet Shoes Stores. Brill Brothers had an elaborate window with a special "Beau Brummel" dummy constructed for the event. Aeolian Hall made its attractive window even more beautiful, and the music store tie-ups were arranged by Carl Fischer Company, publishers of a lilting composition prepared for the production and called "The 'Beau Brummel' Minuet."

A most impressive tie-up in the Times Square section was that displayed by the Young Hat Stores, famous in many cities for its line of head gear. Each Young Hat store attracted unusual attention by showing the high beaver hat worn by "Beau Brummel" of 1824 and the latest "Beau" hat of 1924.

Brill Brothers Window Unique

Brill Brothers, one of the most prominent men's clothiers on New York's Great White Way had a window display on "Beau Brummel" which won the plaudits of many window shoppers. A dummy, made in every detail to represent the famous "Beau" held the center of the display, while stills of John Barrymore and oil paintings of scenes in the film were grouped around it. All through the day great crowds paid homage to the unique display.

There is wholesome food for thought in this for showmen playing the Warner feature. The nationally advertised Personality Clothes window displays are available to exhibitors desiring free exploitation.

THE MODERN THEATRE

A CLOSE-UP of the Barton console, which has real audience winning possibilities, owing to the innovation allowing two organists to play two consoles simultaneously.

THE new Barton organ, which occupies but twelve inches of vertical floor space and can be raised into full view of the audience by the manipulation of its electrically controlled lift.

Lincoln Square Theatre of Decatur Installs Unique Barton Organ

THE Lincoln Theatre of Decatur, Illinois, has just completed the installation of a new Barton Organ which promises to be one of the season's unusual musical drawing-cards and an invention of momentous occasion for the moving picture theatre. Instead of having the customary single console, this is a double organ with two consoles, one on each side of the orchestra pit.

The whole organ, Dan Burton of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company explains, can be played from either console, or by two organists using both consoles simultaneously. This latter feature is proving to have great audience pulling-power.

The new installation is creating special interest on the part of exhibitors because of still another feature, which Mr. Barton predicts will produce real results at the box office. This is the new pitless electrically-operated console-lift, which by the pressing of a single button raises the console five feet during the organ numbers, thus bringing the entire keyboard and organist into full view of the audience, and then lowering it completely below the sight-lines again for the showing of the picture!

Mr. Barton points out that this type of lift which is his own invention, and sold exclusively with the Barton Organ, makes it possible for the first time for practically every theatre to own a "lifting console" organ. This is true because of the new ease of installation which his invention has made possible.

Instead of being located in a deep, specially constructed pit, as heretofore required, these lifts, which he calls Pitless Console Lifts, occupy only 12 inches of vertical space and can be set directly on the floor of the orchestra pit. This new simplicity of installation reduces the cost of the double lifting console instrument enormously, and Mr. Dan Barton is making many other installations like the one at Decatur.

ALL who have seen the new Decatur organ declare the invention a remarkable achievement, and one that is sure to give a tremendous and permanent increase in box office value to the theatre that uses it. A large part of the interest in organ numbers lies in the audience actually seeing the player manipulate the keys and stops. The new type that the Bartola Musical Instrument Company is putting out takes particular care of that point.

The novelty of the dual lifting consoles is a sure-fire entertainer at every performance. It is reported that other exhibitors are jumping to take advantage of the opportunity the Bartola Musical Instrument Company is offering.

Looking at it from a showmanship point of view, there seems to be no question, but that the Barton device presents unusual opportunities for innovation. The lifting of the consoles and bringing the organists into full view of the audience, corresponds to the rising of the curtain upon the entrance of a stage act.

A VIEW of the orchestra pit of the Lincoln Square Theatre of Decatur showing the dual lifting organ consoles, by which method the organists come into full view of the audience. These are lowered after the organ performance.

PRESENTATION OF A MODERN FLAPPER'S ROMANCE

Daniel Breskin, conductor of the symphony orchestra at Crandal's Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, D. C. originated an entirely new type of choreographic overture as a part of the bill recently featured by First National's "Flaming Youth." Mr. Breskin selected ten choruses arranged in such an order that their titles comprised a "Modern Flapper's Romance." Each title card was carried through a series of modern dance steps, with sundry exits and ensembles.

About Theatres— New and Old

Walter Craft who owns the Mission Theatre, Auburn, Wash., has leased the new house being built by John Bruett of Sumner, Wash. Bruett had considered closing in Sumner and operating in Auburn. He has, however, decided to continue at the Sumner theatre as a ten cent house. * * *

W. Harold Wilson, handling the advertising campaign by which the new Alexandria Egyptian Theatre, Geary and Eighteenth Streets, San Francisco, is launching itself as a residential theatre, has the distinction of having opened every large district theatre since 1917, when he began with the present Strand, which had been a vaudeville house, known as the Empress, the house in which Charlie Chaplin played on the stage as part of Karno's London pantomime act.

For Kahn and Greenfield he had charge of publicity for the new Fillmore, New Mission and New Santa Cruz theatres, which, however, can hardly be said to belong to San Francisco.

He also attended to the first advertising for the Haight, Coliseum, Jewel (the present Francesca), New Lyceum, Castro, Excelsior, and now the Alexandria. He will also put the new Metropolitan Theatre, which Samuel H. Levin is building on Union Street, on the theatre map when that house is opened about the first of the year.

Wilson had charge of the advertising campaign when Loew's Warfield dropped vaudeville, and the "Loew's" at the same time in 1922.

The Modern Operator on Gum Patches

I SHOULD like to draw the attention of brother operators, to the practice of sticking gum papers on films to denote the place to change over from one machine to the other.

I want to say now, first of all, it is a very dangerous practice, is most unsightly on the screen, and in some cases does not answer its so-called purpose; it is through this that the danger arises.

When the gum papers are put on they are usually placed on the emulsion side, and with constant running through the rays of the arc lamp and the projector the paper becomes dry and peels off, and in eight cases out of ten the paper lodges in the gate aperture in the rays and the operator has to be most careful and have his eyes about him lest the film fires through the paper burning in the gate and coming into contact with the film on its passage through the gate.

Here is a suggestion. If one takes particular note on the first showing of the program as the particular parts where to change over, there will be no need for this practice, as it comes naturally to one when the time arrives to change over. But this cannot be expected unless there is constant attention to this during projection. Whatever may be the circumstances, the operator himself should be there, and it is he who is in charge.

A further suggestion, which I have tried myself, is—on change nights leave the small pieces of opaque film intact, so as to benefit others to whom the film goes. Insert about a yard or less of opaque spacing with neat joints, and when the film goes back after your show don't take it out, let others use it. In this manner the operator, the people, management, and renters will all benefit by not having unsightly projection and with one-half inch holes stamped in and drawouts. * * *

SPECIAL ILLUMINATING IDEAS

Kliegel Brothers of New York offer the exhibitors a varied assortment of electric sign devices, either in suspension effect from a marquee, or built into a wall. They also have a service for co-operating with architects when theatre projects are intended. The concern has a department devoted wholly to special illuminating effects, with which all theatre managers, motion picture directors and prospective clients are invited to consult.

every one you will have. The big idea is to dress them up and display them in novel style so that your passerby will pause, look them over, find that his curiosity has been aroused and will then go in and see your show.

IN our Chicago showing of Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man," at the Orpheum Theatre we tried a novelty which proved a great crowd-getter. The Orpheum is in the heart of the downtown section and throughout the day and in the evenings crowds constantly pass it. We were puzzling over a good marquee display. One idea was to place a huge book—a reproduction of Wright's "When a Man's a Man" on the marquee and have a girl standing beside it. But the marquee was so built that a girl standing on it would be only partly visible from the sidewalks. So we decided to place her in the lobby. This we did, having a large book constructed and placing it on an easel. The girl, in costume, stood beside it, turned the pages, pointed to the reading matter and smiled at those passing.

After she had been on the job five minutes an attendant rushed down to the office of Manager Moore and said the stunt was blocking traffic in State street. The crowds swarmed around her, read the pages and then made straight for the box office. This was literally dragging the crowds in off the street and such is the purpose of a good lobby display.

For the next release of Principal Pictures Corporation, Baby Peggy in "Captain January," we have some novelties in lobby display suggestions which are certain to attract attention all over the country. My brother Sol Lesser, who is vice president of West Coast Theatres, Inc., has made a life study of lobbies and I have worked with him on this, one of the most interesting slants in the motion picture business. We have found that the successful Lobbyologist is he who has a clear and simple understanding of the picture in hand and an intimate knowledge of American characteristics.

WHITE RUBBER SCREEN IS LONDON'S LATEST

A screen of pure white rubber is the latest innovation to be introduced at the West End Cinema of London, by its live-wire manager,

Leslie Ogilvie. The only other screen of this type in the country is installed at the London Pavilion, says Mr. Ogilvie, who offers to give further information to inquisitive exhibitors concerning what he declares to be an extremely successful novelty. The West End Cinema is changing its name to the "Rialto," with an aim for premiere presentation runs.

8 things to remember if you want to make money

1. Cooper's Leatherstocking Tales are read the world over. They have been translated into almost every language.
2. They are required reading in many schools. That means that they are known to most school children.
3. After 100 years, they still rank among the most popular romances of adventure and Indian peril ever written, with both children and adults.
4. The high spots of thrill and adventure from three of these books, "The Deerslayer," "Last of the Mohicans" and "The Pathfinder" have been embodied in "Leatherstocking"
5. A very large cast was assembled and taken into the wilderness at great expense in the production of this Patheserial
6. George B. Seitz, who has directed more successful serials than any other man, was selected as the director
7. Edna Murphy, beautiful and talented; Harold Miller, handsome and athletic; Whitehorse; David Dunbar, Frank Lackteen, were given the important roles
8. The finished production with its narrow escapes, its thrills, its big mass scenes, and its million dollar title gives to every exhibitor a most unusual chance for big business

ALL the movie fan sees is light on the screen —light moulded in all its myriad shades by the art that is in the film.

Wherever good pictures are shown best, you will find National Projector Carbons in the projection lamp. Thousands of houses have used them exclusively for years because they shoot over to the screen all that is in the film.

There is one best trim for every lamp and current. For instance, National White Flame AC Projector Carbons. Just for AC. Absolutely silent. They produce a sharp, steady, brilliant, eye-easy light.

Write us the make of your machine and the kind of current you have and we will tell you how to get the most light and the best light for the least money.

Briton Demonstrates Ray To Kill From Long Distance

Can Crash Airplanes in Flight, Mow Down Armies, Inventor Asserts.

By ARTHUR E. HANN
Staff Correspondent of The World
Special Wireless to The World

LONDON, April 8.—This afternoon I saw an apparently successful laboratory demonstration here of a dandy electrical war invention, with which the inventor expects to be able to bring down airplanes in flight, to send ships crashing to the ground in flames, mow down armies, put machine guns out of action, explode magazines and ammunition dumps, and put automobiles out of service all from a long distance from the scene of action.

DISABLING OF AIRPLANES BY RAY REPORTED BEFORE.

Several times reports have come from Europe, chiefly from Paris, that Germans had perfected a wireless device that would bring down airplanes in flight. These rumors usually followed the forced landing of a French plane on German soil.

Another report from Paris some time ago described a similar device by which automobiles in the streets were stopped dead. None of these reports was confirmed.

WHAT'S IN THE AIR

STAND BY for this week's Special Producer's Number. A program embracing a comprehensive outline of the releases of the coming year insofar as the various producers have been able to determine them at this point.

Taking it by and large, producers are giving unusually early attention to the coming season's products, which can safely be taken as an item of high-power interest to exhibitors.

Last week we advised showmen to run to meet the postman in order not to lose a moment's time in seeing what the second broadside of National Tie-Ups had in store for them. With due respect to the requisites of decorum and modesty, might we be allowed a few extra inches of chest inflation?

We're only as human as the most human of that well-known human species, the showman, and if we do seem to bubble up with pride and enthusiasm as we call attention to the high-power free advertising effected by the Review for those exhibitors playing the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan screen version of the famous Rex Beach story, "Recoil," it is because. . . well, because we are simply human.

FAR from sitting back and resting on the laurels of this super-exploitation "Recoil" achievement, which includes co-operation from national advertisers handling such household-term products as Deltah Pearls, Venida Hair Nets, Boncilla Clay, Chinwah Beauty Products, Onyx Hosiery, Nemo Corsets and Inecto Hair Tint, the Review has already arranged similar 22 karat tie-ups for Associated Exhibitors unique Alaskan picture drama "Chechahcos."

So stand by for next week's number, which with other varied exhibitor helps, showman suggestions, ready news morsels, will include a scintillating array of National Tie-Ups on "Chechahcos."

NOT one cent less than twenty-four million! Gordon Kent delivers his ultimatum to the gathering of hard-headed bankers and financiers. If they want his South American mines they must pay the price. EXHIBITORS Trade REVIEW

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

Producing Companies Announce Array of Pictures For 1924 Season

IN the following pages EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW gives a summary of the production and distribution plans of motion picture companies so far as they have been able to formulate them at the present time. It will be noted that several of the companies are not prepared to announce the pictures they propose to make during the coming season. Among these are United Artists, Metro, Goldwyn, Principal, C. C. Burr and C. B. C. The offices of Famous Players-Lasky express the belief that the coming season will be the most successful in the history of motion pictures. In a formal statement the company gives the names of forty Paramount pictures which will be released from August 1 to February 1.

A number of the forty already have been completed. It is stated that fifteen producing units are now at work, and it is expected eighteen productions will be under way before the end of the current month.

Among the pictures on the list are "Monsieur Beaucaire," "Peter Pan," "Wanderer of the Wasteland," a Zane Grey story; two Cecil B. DeMille productions, three Gloria Swanson pictures and several of Thomas Meighan's.

First National announces its line-up for the coming six months, at the head of which is "The Sea Hawk." This is a special recently completed by Frank Lloyd productions, and high hopes are expressed as to the quality of the subject.

"Abraham Lincoln" Coming

First National also has taken over "Abraham Lincoln," the work of Al and Ray Rickett. Much is expected from this historical picture, which was shown for seven weeks recently in New York.

Pathe announces 104 two-reel comedies for distribution during the coming season. In a statement to EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW Elmer R. Pearson, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., tells in detail how these two-reelers will be divided. Among the number will be thirteen of "Our Gang." "The Spat Family," Will Rogers and a new series also will be represented by an equal number of subjects. Also there will be four series of Mack Sennett Comedies, with Harry Langdon, Mack Sennett himself, Ben Turpin and Ralph Graves.

Pathe also will release during the year four super features starring Charles Ray, under a contract signed ing the coming season. Last year the company promised eighteen and released twenty. Among the subjects named for early production are "The Age of Innocence," by Edith Wharton; "The Dark Swan," by Ernest Pascal; "The White House by the Sea," by Owen Davis, and "Deburau," the Belasco production.

Associated Exhibitors is looking forward to a very active season. Besides the productions of Douglas McLean the company will distribute all the specials to be made by Murray W. Garsson. Another subject the Associated expects large results from, during the summer especially, is "The Chechahcos," a picture produced in Alaska by Louis M. Moomaw.

Dr. Shallenberger of Arrow announces two serials during the coming year to be directed by Jacques Jaccard. These will be supervised by Ben Wilson.

The Hodgkinson Corporation is definitely fixed on thirty-six pretentious subjects for the coming year. That number may not be maximum. Vice-president John C. Flinn is now on his way to Los Angeles, where he will hold a number of conferences with producers.

Universal has a large schedule already set for the coming year. In the list are 12 Jewels, 3 Hoot Gibson productions, 52 Century two-reel comedies, 12 Hysterical History one-reel comedies, 104 International News Reels, 10 two-reelers starring Jack Dempsey, 26 Universal single-reel comedies, 52 Western action dramas, 6 five-reelers featuring Jack Hoxie, and half a dozen more westerns with such well-known stars as William Desmond.

Preferred will have nine special productions to be made by President Schulberg for release early in the coming season. Among these will be "The First Year," Frank Craven's unusually successful play of married life, and "The Boomerang," David Belasco's stage success by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes.

Twenty-four for Vitagraph

John D. Rock, general manager of Vitagraph, who is leaving shortly for Chicago to attend a conference of division managers, after which he will join the president, Albert E. Smith, on the coast, stated that production plans of the company for the coming season include twenty-four features. Among these will be "Captain Blood" and "The Clean Heart."

Producers Announce Season's Programs

Famous Players-Lasky

IN the belief that next season will be the most successful in the history of motion pictures, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces the release of forty Paramount pictures from August 1 to February 1.

Several of these productions have already been completed, and in order that the others may be ready by release date, an unprecedented production has just been inaugurated at Paramount studios in Hollywood and Long Island City. Fifteen producing units are now busy and eighteen pictures will be under way before the end of this month.

In announcing these forty new pictures the Paramount organization has issued the following statement.

"Solid success and achievement is not an accident in any business. It has not been accidental with Paramount.

"For twelve years—month in and month out, year in and year out—we have produced the pictures that have been the backbone of this industry.

"The record has been the fruit of careful planning, clear thinking, intelligent application of resources, progressive policies, plus a great producing and distributing organization.

"From our studios have come a splendid and consistent line of pictures—from the days of 'Queen Elizabeth,' 'The Squaw Man,' 'Stella Maris,' 'Male and Female,' 'The Miracle Man,' '23½ Hours Leave,' 'Humoresque,' 'The Sheik,' 'Manslaughter,' 'Blood and Sand,' 'Back Home and Broke,' down to the latest Paramount success, 'The Humming Bird,' released only the other day.

Steadily Raised Plane

"In addition to making money for exhibitors, this consistent, Paramount program has done two things:

"1. Steadily raised the plane of motion picture entertainment, while increasing the size of the motion picture public.

"2. Enabled the exhibitors to build for the future, confident that their investment of millions of dollars in picture theatres would be secure.

"During the last year the picture industry has been amazed at the dazzling success of the Paramount pictures, 'The Covered Wagon' and 'The Ten Commandments.' While the success of these two pictures is truly amazing, on the other hand it is NOT that the organization which turned out the best pictures of the industry for twelve years, consistently, should climax its record with these two achievements.

"It came as a natural development of organization, proving that just as Paramount has maintained a supremacy in the week-to-week release of motion pictures, so it could also achieve the pinnacle of producing success in road attractions.

"The Paramount organization is so equipped, so rounded out, that the success of its pictures is assured from the moment the story is considered until that story reaches the screen. The organization is back of its pictures all the way through—in the selection of stories, the writing of scripts, direction, box-office casts, publicity, advertising and exploitation.

Tells of Faith Kept

"No Paramount picture ever reaches a theatre cold. When it goes into an exhibitor's hands, there has already been built up an audience of millions of people—people who believe implicitly that 'If It's a Paramount Picture It's the Best Show in Town.' This belief has been cemented in the public mind by years of living up to promises, keeping faith.

"In other words, Paramount pictures are handled from beginning to end, by showmanship experts; and good pictures handled with showmanship are bound to succeed.

"Now, what of the future?

"The obligation which has been so brilliantly discharged in the past still exists. And it will be even more thoroughly performed this coming season.

"There is no promise like past performance.

"At this season of the year the air is full of promises. Loud talking, exaggeration, blatant claims—all these cover the picture industry like a cloud.

"But promises should be checked with performance. Claims should be analyzed, words should be made to square with deeds.

"And, recognizing this state of affairs, we say deliberately and unequivocally that never has any single company, in motion picture annals, undertaken so ambitious a program of screen entertainment.

"Never before has any company announced such a list of titles, stars, directors and casts for week-in-and-week-out release for the first six months of the new season. The exhibitors of this country are absolutely assured of productions of a calibre that will establish a new high-water mark in box-office success.

"We cordially invite every exhibitor to compare these productions—title by title, story by story, cast by cast, director by director—with everything else the industry offers, and then buy accordingly."

Included in the list of releases is the James Cruze production, "The Covered Wagon." This picture, which has just ended a record-breaking run of sixty weeks at the Criterion Theatre, New York, has not yet been exhibited in regular motion picture theatres. It will be released to picture theatres early in September.

The list of forty pictures also includes "Monsieur Beaucaire," the production which will mark the return of Rudolph Valentino to the screen after an absence of two years. This picture, directed by Sidney Olcott, has just been completed in the Long Island studio, and is heralded as one of the most sumptuously mounted productions ever made in the East. In the supporting cast are Bebe Daniels, Lois Wilson, Doris Kenyon, Lowell Sherman and a number of other prominent picture players.

Elaborate Pictures

"Peter Pan," Barrie's immortal fantasy, will at last reach the screen as one of this group of pictures. This production will be made this summer and probably will be released during Christmas Week. It will be produced by Herbert Brenon, but who will play the role made famous on the stage by Maude Adams has not yet been determined.

One of the novelties will be Paramount's first picture entirely in color, "Wanderer of the Wasteland," a Zane Grey story, which has been produced by Irvin Willat in Death Valley, Cal. It is said that in this picture of life in the desert color photography reaches a development surpassing anything shown on the screen so far.

Another novelty will be a picture version of "Merton of the Movies," to be produced by James Cruze, the maker of "The Covered Wagon," with Glenn Hunter in the star role which he has made famous on the stage.

Two of Cecil B. DeMille's productions are included. The first of these is "Feet of Clay," with Rod La Rocque, Estelle Taylor and Victor Varconi. Beulah Marie Dix and Bertram Milhauser adapted the screen play from the novel by Marguerita Tuttle. This is a break in the long series of screen stories prepared for Mr. DeMille by Jeanie Macpherson, but she will do his other production of the series, "The Golden Bed." This is from Wallace Erwin's novel, with the same featured players.

Three Gloria Swanson pictures on the schedule are to be directed by Allan Dwan. These are "Manhandled," already completed; "A Woman of Fire" and "The Coast of Folly."

Thomas Meighan has an outstanding place in the series. One of his will be James Oliver Curwood's "The Alaskan," which Herbert Brenon is to direct. Booth Tarkington is writing an original story for him called "Whispering Men," which is to be produced by Victor Heerman, and he has another, "The Honor of His House," by Andrew Soutar, which is to be directed by Victor Fleming.

Valentino will also have another picture in this series, "A Sainted Devil," a screen version of a Rex Beach story. Joseph Henabery will direct.

The two directors who brought Pola Negri her greatest fame abroad are to make the Scene from "The Eternal Riddle," adaptation of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's "The Tragedy of Korosko," produced with American principals under the direction of Tom Terriss. It will be distributed by Truett.

three pictures in which she will appear in this group. Dimitri Buchowetzki, who directed her in several of her European successes, will direct her in "Compromised," a Suderman story, and in "A Woman Scorned," based on the play by Owen Davis and the story by Perley Poore Sheehan, "Those Who Walk in Darkness." Ernest Lubitsch, who made Miss Negri's greatest European success, "Passion," will direct her in "Forbidden Paradise," based on a story by Paul Bern.

Incidental to the release of these forty pictures will be the formal introduction of three new Paramount stars—Leatrice Joy, Richard Dix and William Farnum. Miss Joy and Mr. Dix are elevated to stardom as a reward for their splendid success in featured roles and in answer to popular demand, while Mr. Farnum, long a star in his own right, returns to Paramount after an absence of several years during which he has built up a tremendous following among motion picture fans.

Big Productions

The complete list follows: Gloria Swanson in an Alan Dwan production, "Manhandled"; Zane Grey's "Wanderer of the Wasteland," with Jack Holt, Kathlyn Williams, Noah Beery and Billie Dove; an Irvin Willat production; Leatrice Joy in "Changing Husbands," directed by Frank Urson and Paul Iribe; Rudolph Valentino in "Monsieur Beaucaire," a Sidney Olcott production, with Bebe Daniels, Lois Wilson, Doris Kenyon and Lowell Sherman; an Alan Crosland production, "Unguarded Women," with Bebe Daniels and Richard Dix, supported by Mary Astor; a James Cruze production, "The Enemy Sex," with Betty Compson; Pola Negri in "Compromised," based on a story by Suderman, a Dimitri Buchowetzki production; "The Mountebank," a Herbert Brenon production, with Ernest Torrence and Anna Q. Pathe Exchange, Inc.

WITH 104 two reel comedies arranged for during the season of 1924-25 Pathe will distribute more comedies of that length than have ever been handled by one distributor; and the number, as well as the diversity promised, seems to indicate what amounts to dominance in the comedy field. These facts are revealed in a statement made by Elmer R. Pearson, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., to a representative of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

Mr. Pearson recently returned from the Coast, where he renewed the Pathe contracts with Hal Roach and Mack Sennett.

Under the terms of the Roach contract fifty-two comedies will be produced for Pathe release. There will be four series of thirteen each—Our Gang, Spat Family, Will Rogers and a new series starring a prominent big time vaudeville star, whose name cannot be mentioned at this time.

Under the terms of the Mack Sennett contract there also will be four series of two-reel comedies—Harry Langdon, Mack Sennett, Ben Turpin and Ralph Graves.

"Out of the eight series of two-reel comedies arranged for," said Mr. Pearson, "two series only represent untried products. Mr. Roach has one of these, with a man as star whom he is enthusiastic about—a vaudeville performer who has been getting over big in the large vaudeville houses. Mr. Sennett has the other, as he will put out a new series with Ralph Graves as the star. Mr. Graves already is known to exhibitors. Mr. Sennett will star him in a new type of comedy.

More of 'Our Gang'

"The 'Our Gang' comedies have become so very well known during the past two years that it is unnecessary to say I am delighted that we are to have a continuance of them. Will Rogers has only been on our program during the past year, but he already has become a factor in two-reel comedies. The Spats, too, represented a new comedy idea of the past season, but the mere fact that we have arranged for a new series of them indicates that they have made good.

"We expect great things of Harry Langdon. We don't know of any other instance where a man entirely new to screen comedy has become so well established in such a short time; nor of any instance where a comedian has achieved such marked popularity so quickly. The Harry Langdon series is going to be much better known before the close of the coming season.

"Ben Turpin is back on the lot again, making pictures. Illness in his family interfered with the original production plans of the Turpin series, but a full supply from this comedian now seems to be assured to Mr. Sennett. This is good news, for Mr. Turpin fills a niche all his own.

"Pretty girls and good all-round companies will continue to stamp the Mack Sennett Two-Reel Comedies; and as for those starring Ralph Graves, we will let the future tell the story.

"We will continue to receive from Hal Roach one one-reel comedy each week. This is now the oldest one-reel comedy release on the market, and certainly the best known. In these comedies will appear Charles Chase, Mohan and Engle, Marie Mosquini, Blanche Mehaffey and others.

"Mr. Roach is giving much thought to these one-reel comedies and will not be satisfied to hold the quality just where it is. He is insisting with his studio force that they be improved.

"In addition to these one and two reel comedies from the Hal Roach studios we will also receive from them at least four features—two comedy and two novelty features. Any one who has seen 'The Call of the Wild' and 'The King of Wild Horses' will appreciate the importance of this announcement. Both of these pictures are doing splendidly and are receiving very good reports from exhibitors in the trade papers.

Four Super-Features

"Charles Ray, one of the screen's greatest male stars, will make a series of four super-features for distribution through Pathe.

"In addition to the comedy and feature product already mentioned, we will also, of course, have the Pathe News, twice a week; the Pathe Review once a week; Aesop's Film Fables, once a week; Grantland Rice's Sportlights, one reel every other week; Topics of the Day, one a week; and our usual supply of short dramas and novelties.

"We will continue to have the Chronicles of America series of pictures from the Yale University Press—the most significant and pretentious effort yet made to give entertainment and education combined to the theatre. These Chronicles, on merit, deserve the most serious attention from every exhibitor, since they attract and keep a class of patronage that is new and most desirable to the motion picture theatre.

Two More Lloyds

"As for Harold Lloyd feature comedies, we are happy to announce that we will receive at least two more under Mr. Lloyd's present contract with us. These Lloyd feature comedies are admittedly the strongest box office features on the market today. With each that we have received it has seemed impossible that the next could show any improvement; but each has proven to be bigger and better than the last. 'Girl Shy' has proved that Mr. Lloyd is not only a genius as a comedy star, but also a genius in production. We are absolutely certain that this picture will far exceed the box office records of 'Grandma's Boy,' 'Dr. Jack,' 'Safety Last' and 'Why Worry.'

"We are proud of our long and harmonious association with Mr. Lloyd—and association which has now extended about ten years. We are proud that this association began when Mr. Lloyd was unknown, and that his great fame and popularity was built up and achieved entirely with Pathe as distributor for his pictures.

"Altogether we feel that at no time has Pathe been so strongly equipped with product as for the season of 1924-25."

Warner Brothers

BIG stories, popular players, efficient direction, artistic production and the box-office "punch" so peculiar to all Warner Classics will be conspicuous in the new group of pictures to be produced for the coming season of 1924-5. The slogan will be "bigger and better," and the Warners believe they are not merely using big sounding words empty of significance in announcing this as their slogan, such recent productions as "The Marriage Circle" and "Beau Brummel," proving that they are living up to the motto, and can easily do so in the future.

Twenty pictures are certain for the coming screen season. The chances are that Warner Brothers will deliver twenty-four. During the 1923-4 season this firm promised exhibitors eighteen productions, but released twenty, the two additional consisting of the Ernst Lubitsch Special, and "Beau Brummel."

The scenario department has been working overtime keeping pace with the fiction publications as they come from the press. Some of the titles already selected, and which will be put into early production, are:

"The Age of Innocence" by Edith Wharton; "The Dark Swan," by Ernst Pascal; "The Lighthouse by the Sea," by Owen Davis; "The Eleventh Virgin," by Dorothy Day; "Eve's Lover" by Mrs. W. K. Clifford; "Deburau," the Belasco production by Sacha Guitry; "The Lost Lady" by Willard Cather; "My Wife and I," by Harriet B. Stowe; "The Narrow Street" by Edwin Bate-man Morris and "The Dear Pretender" by Alice Ross Colver.

Lubitsch to Direct

Ernst Lubitsch, who needs no introduction to exhibitors, and whose reputation has been steadily rising with each successive production, has been engaged to produce a number of specials under the Warner banner. Great things are expected of this producing director who in his recent "The Marriage Circle," discarded the elaborate technique of a costume play and showed what he could do with a small cast and a minimum of sets. At present he is at work on his approaching Warner special, the name of which he is not yet at liberty to disclose. He has chosen May MacAvoy, Pauline Frederick and Lew Cody for principal parts. Lubitsch believes with the Russian players in having a splendid ensemble, rather than a star with a number of weak satellities revolving around, and he is therefore going slow with the casting.

Rin-tin-tin, the trained police dog who scored a hit in "Where the North Begins," unanimously praised everywhere, will be featured in two big productions. One of these will be a modern detective story laid in New York. It will be an entirely new angle for dog pictures.

Some of the directors engaged for work on pictures are Harry Beaumont, William Beaudine, Monta Bell, Millard Webb and James Flood. All have outstanding successes to their credit, and Warner Brothers feel that half the battle of producing good box-office successes has been won through securing these directors.

Sees Another Big Year

Marie Prevost, Monte Blue and Louise Fazenda are under contract with Warner Brothers. They have done brilliant work in the past, and will be featured in a number of productions. But Warner Brothers wish it to be known that each picture will be especially cast with the biggest drawing cards among screen players possible to be obtained. As in the past, no names will be too big for Warner Brothers.

Last week Harry Warner left for the coast. He will start the machinery working.

Scene from "The Fraidy Cat," in which Charles Chase in the Hal Roach comedy cavorts for the multitude of fun lovers, which one-reel comedy will be distributed soon by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Before departing, he made the following statement:

"It looks like another big Warner year. We are not making empty boasts about what we intend to do, for we have past accomplishments of the recent year to back us up. For the last three years we have been making wonderful strides; by now we have our second wind. We promise exhibitors some of the greatest box-office bets of film history. We spared nothing in money or time to put out fine pictures last year. They went over big—even bigger than we had anticipated. We mean, therefore, to follow the same policy for the coming season.

"Our policy is to get material that has already made solid successes with the public. By doing so we insure exhibitors sure-fire pictures that have tremendous popularity behind them."

Sam E. Morris, general manager, announces that releasing plans will be practically the same as last year. The complete list of franchise holders will be announced later.

Other titles of pictures will be announced in the near future. Several big ones of course are included in the list, but for strategic reasons they cannot be announced just now.

Hodkinson Corporation

WHILE contracts have been definitely closed with producers for at least thirty-six big productions to be distributed in the fiscal year beginning August 1, the Hodkinson Corporation will make no announcement officially naming the pictures and the producers until after John C. Flinn returns from Los Angeles, where he will hold a number of conferences with the producers who will contribute to the 1924-5 program.

Mr. Flinn will go direct to Los Angeles after the Hodkinson sales convention in Chicago on Saturday May 3.

Associated Exhibitors

THE most ambitious program of attractions ever distributed by Associated Exhibitors is being arranged for the 1924-25 season, according to information obtained at the offices of that organization yesterday. Because negotiations for some of the intended product are yet to be finally closed it is impossible to announce the entire schedule now, but enough has been settled, say Associated officials, to justify them in predicting a record-breaking season.

Douglas MacLean, whose "Going Up" and "The Yankee Consul," distributed by Associated Exhibitors, have raised this star to heights he never attained before, is arranging for further big comedy features. The next of these to be released is "Never Say Die," production of which already is well under way.

Announcement has been made that Associated will handle all the big specials to be made by Murray W. Garsson, with stories and cast maintaining the standard set in "The Spitfire," which is set for early release. This photoplay is an adaptation of Frederic Arnold Kummer's popular novel "Plaster Saints," and includes in its cast such well-known players as Betty Blythe, Lowell Sherman, Elliott Dexter, Pauline Garon, Robert Warwick and Burr McIntosh. William Christy Cabanne directed.

"The Chechahcos," the only picture ever filmed in Alaska, announcement of the early release of which is expected soon, probably will be followed by other pictures directed by Lewis H. Moomaw. "The Chechahcos" is a big special which, besides telling an absorbing story, is declared by persons who have had previews to show some of the most marvelous shots—of snow-blanketed mountains, moving glaciers and the like—ever screened.

Many of the productions being considered for the fall and winter program are based on stories whose box office value is assured in advance, through the popularity of the printed versions, either as serials or in book form. Several of the most celebrated of contemporary magazine writers are represented in the list of authors. Well known names will appear, too, in the catalogue of directors, while it is expected that the announcement of the complete schedule will find many stars of the first magnitude enlisted under the Associated banner.

With eight features released in two months—late April and during May—Associated's current program is a fitting preliminary to the big fall lineup. Attractions just released or about to be offered include "Racing Luck," with Monty Banks; Murray W. Garsson's "The Spitfire"; "The Chechahcos," "Unseen Hands," featuring Wallace Beery; "The Sixth Commandment," directed by William Christy Cabanne, with William Faversham among the principals; "Why Get Married?" featuring Andree Lafayette; "When A Girl Loves," produced and directed by Victor Hugo Halperin and "The Lone Wolf," an adaptation of Louis Joseph Vance's famous novel, and in which Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt star.

Arrow

DR. SHALLENBERGER, President of Arrow Film Corporation, has announced following program for his company as so far arranged. This will consist of two serials, the first of which, "Days of '49" is being made with the co-operation of the California Historical Society and is based upon the most dramatic period of the State famed for gold and motion pictures. This was during 1847-48-49, and includes the tragic story of the Donner party, the discovery of gold at Sutter's Mill, the wresting of this great territory of 160,000 square miles from Mexican domination and its annexation to the United States. All this has been filmed with an accuracy of fact and detail seldom found in motion pictures.

Jacques Jaccard, whose fame as a director is firmly established by many celebrated serials, is handling the megaphone. Supervising the entire work is Ben Wilson, that veteran of every branch of the film industry.

Miss Neva Gerber, Ed (Two-Fisted) Cobb, Ruth Royce and Wilbur McGaugh carry the principal roles. The screening of the Chapters so far produced shows that it is a remarkably fast action, thrilling picture of feature caliber.

Following this will come another serial of equal strength and box office value.

Six super-features, the first of which "Gambling Wives," a Dell Henderson production, featuring Marjorie Daw, Ward Crane, Hedda Hopper, Edward Earle and Baby Dorothy Brock, is now being released.

A unique novelty big-little feature "The Mysteries of Mah-Jong" in which are shown what it is all about and much other matter pertaining to this game which is sweeping the country. The showing at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, week of April 7, brought this wire from Jules Mastbaum:

"We paid the highest price ever for a two-reel picture when we secured "The Mysteries of Mah-Jong" which opened a week's engagement at the Stanley Theatre yesterday and its reception justified the good judgment of our outlay. The film is timely, novel, original, instructive and entertaining and so constructed as to please those who understand the game as well as those who do not. "The Mysteries of Mah-Jong" will be found a welcome addition to any program for the various elements of entertainment as mentioned above."

Twenty-Six Westerns

A series of twenty-six Arrow-Great-Westerns, one every two weeks, are also being released.

These include four starring Ben Wilson, whose popularity as a screen star is firmly established.

Four "Pinto Pete's" starring Ashton Dearbolt in a new and strikingly picturesque role.

Twelve starring Dick Hatton, hard hitting, rough rider.

The supporting casts in these is a guarantee of their box office value, including Marjorie Daw, Marilyn Mills and her horses, Yakima Canutt, Champion American Cowboy; Mildred Harris, Florence Gilbert, Louise Lester, Arthur Mackley, the famous Essanay Sheriff Edmund Cobb, Reed Howes and a number of others.

Six "Ranch-Land" features in which Ben Wilson will cut loose his entire outfit of Wild Western Winners, whose combined skill in riding, roping, shooting and general equestrian dare-deviltry is unsurpassed, in putting over every phase of Western Rodeo thrills and spills.

Twenty-six two reel comedies are also in the line-up. These include Broadway Comedies starring Billy West, Mirthquake Comedies featuring Bobby Dunn and Arrow-Eddie Lyons Comedies with the side-splitting Eddie Lyons in the lead.

Blanche Sweet and Conrad Nagel in a scene from "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," which Marshall Neilan is directing for distribution by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, a winning combination.

"This gives the Independent exchange man who contracts for Arrow Productions a list of attractions with a box office value that is in keeping with the quality and service that has given the Arrow trademark its sterling value both to the exchange, the exhibitor and last but not least, the film public," says the statement.

Hepworth Productions

THE Hepworth Company will release ten feature pictures in the coming summer and early fall, as follows: "Lily of the Alley," "Mrs. Erricker's Reputation," "A Soul's Awakening," "The Pipes of Pan," "John Forrest Finds Himself," "The Crimson Circle," "The Amazing Quest," "Mist in the Valley," "Justice Raffles," and "Persistent Lovers."

Also 900-foot subjects, of which there are twenty listed for release.

Educational Film

IN the midst of the discussion of the dearth of big features for the summer program Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that there will be no lack of short subjects available for the exhibitor, nor will the quality of the subjects released on the Educational program be below that of the standard maintained during the cooler months.

Over a dozen two-reel comedies will be released after May 1, and this selection will be more than representative of the quality of the previous releases. The new two-reel comedies will include releases of the Christie, Hamilton, Mermaid and Tuxedo brands in addition to two Jack White comedy specials made under a contract for three of these specials signed last fall. One of the specials, "Midnight Blues," has already been released, but so recently that it can be considered in the summer's pictures.

More two-reel comedies will be released during the coming summer than in any other summer since the inception of Educational. In addition there will be the regular releases of the single reel brands consisting of Cameo Comedies, the "Sing Them Again" series, the Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge series, the Bruce Wilderness Tales and the new humor reel, The Fun Shop.

"There will be no let down in either the quality or quantity of Short Subjects from Educational," said President E. W. Hammons, on his return from New Orleans, where he attended the First National convention. "We will, in fact, release some of the best pictures of the year."

"Among the outstanding releases available for summer showing will be the Jack White comedy specials, at least two and possibly all three of which are to be released in time for summer showing. In addition there will be the regular releases of the Christie, Mermaid, Hamilton and Tuxedo two-reel comedies, presenting such well known stars as Dorothy Devore and Lloyd Hamilton, whose recent advent into the feature production field has greatly enhanced their box-office value."

"Bobby Vernon, Jimmie Adams and Neal Burns, in the Christie Comedies—Lige Conley, Louise Fazenda, "Poodles" Hanneford—comedy stars who have proved their worth—will all be seen in comedy productions which will be available to the exhibitor trying to present to his patrons the ideal form of summer entertainment."

"At least one 'special' of unique merit, especially appropriate for summer showing, will appear on the program. This will be 'The Chase,' the picture which was the feature of the short subject program presented last summer by Rothafel at the Capitol Theatre, New York. It is ideal summer entertainment, and will, I have no doubt, provide as much pleasure wherever shown as was evidenced during its premier at the big New York picture palace."

"Exhibitors worried about their summer supply of feature productions will do well to consider the Short Subject as a reliable prop for summer business. They offer the diversity that is more necessary than ever during the summer months, when theatre patrons grow restless and the weather is too warm for the proper enjoyment of the heavy dramatic or sex pictures which have been popular during the winter months."

Preferred Pictures

NINE special productions to be made by B. P. Schulberg for release early next season by Preferred Pictures will be in preparation by the end of May, according to an announcement just made by that organization. These pictures will include a number of valuable stage properties and best selling novels to be made by Gasnier and several other well known directors whose names will be announced shortly when Mr. Schulberg is ready to assign specific pictures to each.

"In spite of the belief expressed early this year that the season just closing would see a decrease in the number of big pictures offered exhibitors, the market is still overstocked," Mr. Schulberg stated this week when making his preliminary announcement for next year.

"For this reason Preferred has withheld the production of some of its biggest stories. By the early fall, however, the slogan of fewer and better pictures promises to become a reality, and at that time we will be ready to fill a release schedule that will assure exhibitors of a steady supply of box-office attractions of the highest quality."

In listing the company's product for 1924-5 Mr. Schulberg said that the number of releases for the entire season had not yet been definitely set, but those for the early fall would include the following:

"The First Year," Frank Craven's play of married life, one of the most valuable properties now owned by any producing company.

"The Boomerang," David Belasco's stage success by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes.

"Faint Perfume," from the novel by Zona Gale, listed with the year's best selling books.

"The Breath of Scandal," from Edwin Balmer's recent novel of Chicago's social set.

"White Man," a story of adventure by George Agnew Chamberlain.

"The Triflers," from Frederick Orin Bartlett's novel.

"My Lady's Lips," by Olga Printzlau.

"When a Woman Reaches Forty," by Royal A. Baker.

"A Mansion of Aching Hearts," suggested by the song by Arthur J. Lamb and Harry Von Tilzer.

Mr. Schulberg is now in New York for the purpose of acquiring screen rights to other plays and stories with which to augment this list of coming Preferred Pictures.

Independent Pictures

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, president of the Independent Pictures Corporation, is in Los Angeles, there to personally supervise the first two "society stunt" melodramas, starring Helen Holmes, to be produced under the direction of J. P. McGowan. While on the coast Mr. Goldberg will also arrange for an additional producing unit, to make another series of superwesterns, to be released in the fall.

These series of westerns will consist of eight features, the star of which will be announced through the eastern offices of the Independent Pictures Corporation, immediately upon Mr. Goldberg's return from the Coast, at which time he will initiate his advertising campaign on the entire 1924-5 output of the Independent Pictures Corporation's productions, which it is said will consist of a total of twelve westerns, in a series of six each, each series to have a different male star; eight Helen Holmes society stunt melodramas; one five-reel special comedy; two special productions with all-star casts, making a total of twenty-three releases.

First National

THE forthcoming product of First National Pictures, Inc., will further prove the claim of that company to a consistently excellent program, according to an official of that company. The present line-up of pictures completes the schedule for six months ahead.

"The Sea Hawk," the special recently finished by Frank Lloyd Productions, Inc., will be one of the biggest on the First National program, and it is expected among the biggest productions of all time. Certainly from a statistical analysis, it will be the most elaborate and lavish sea story ever brought to the screen.

Another big special from First National will be "Abraham Lincoln," the dramatic story of the life of the martyred president produced by Al and Ray Rockett. Since the first showing of this picture to the screen, there was much speculation as to the releasing agency.

"Secrets," the Norma Talmadge production now enjoying a pre-release run at the Astor theatre, is to be generally released in the forthcoming season. It is a romantic drama with Miss Talmadge in one of her most sympathetic roles.

Among the other big pictures which are now in preparation for early release are "Sundown," a story of the passing of the old West before the advent of the homesteaders. This picture has a story of national interest and is based on historical facts. The drive of a quarter of a million head of cattle across the Mexican border was filmed for this picture. The story is by Earl Hudson, production manager of First National, and the cast is all-star.

Second Hudson Story

"A Self Made Failure" is another J. K. McDonald production, with Ben Alexander in the leading role. Lloyd Hamilton, Patsy Ruth Miller, Matt Moore and Mary Carr complete the cast of principals. William Beaudine, director of the two previous Ben Alexander pictures, again directed.

Richard Walton Tully's "The Bird of Paradise" will be completed in time for fall release. "The Bird" is the popular stage play which is largely responsible for the vogue for things Hawaiian a few years ago. Mr. Tully will produce his play in the South Seas. His selection of players to fill the famous roles which have "made" so many stage stars, has not been made.

Barbara La Marr's "Sandra," her first picture under her recent contract with First National, will also be offered. "Sandra" is to be produced by Sawyer and Lubin.

Up to date Samuel Goldwyn has announced "Tarnish" and "Potash and Perlmutter in Hollywood" for fall release by First National. The first will feature May McAvoy and Ronald Colman and the latter Alex Carr, the original stage Perlmutter, and George Sidney, substituting for the late Barney Bernard in the role of Potash.

"For Sale" is a society drama with Claire Windsor in the featured role as the daughter of socially ambitious parents who is forced upon the matrimonial auction block. The cast of principals includes Adolphe Menjou, Robert Ellis, Mary Carr, Tully Marshall, John Patrick, Vera Reynolds, Philips Smalley, Christine Mayo, and Jule Power. George Archainbaud is the director. The story was written by Earl Hudson, First National's production manager.

A new John M. Stahl production, "Husbands and Lovers," also will be shortly released. It is presented by Louis B. Mayer and the trio of principals will be Lewis Stone, Lew Cody and Florence Vidor. Like Stahl's other First National successes, "The Dangerous Age" and "Why Men Leave Home" it will be domestic drama.

In July a new Colleen Moore picture will be offered. It is "Counterfeit," and Conway Tearle will be seen in the leading masculine role. The release of a picture with Colleen Moore, considered one of the strongest box office stars since her triumph in "Flaming Youth," is in line with First National's policy to supply exhibitors with its most powerful pictures during the summer months. The star has a unique role as a temperamental actress who becomes a vamp to "get" an enemy.

"Born Rich," the initial production of Garick Pictures Corporation for First National also will be offered in July. It is a syndicated novel dealing with the upper strata of society. Claire Windsor and Bert Lytell will play the leading roles and Will Nigh is to direct. Cullen Landis, Barney Sherry and Frank Morgan are in the supporting cast.

Corinne Griffith's contribution to the ten dreadnaughts will be "Single Wives," an original story by Earl Hudson. Milton Sills is to play the leading masculine role.

Thomas H. Ince will present "Christine of the Hungry Heart" during August. This is a best selling novel by Kathleen Norris. The cast and director have not been announced.

One of First National's biggest specials of the year will be "The Lost World" a massive spectacle, to be adapted to the screen from Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's popular novel. The cast is not yet announced, but a production of gigantic proportions is promised. This picture will be produced by First National and released in August.

Another summer picture will be a new Levee-Tourneur production, directed by Maurice Tourneur. It is "Belonging," a society romance by Olive Wadsley. The cast has not been selected.

Universal

CARL LAEMMLE has announced definite release dates of twenty-two of the many big pictures the Universal Pictures Corporation has determined to produce this year for the 1924-5 season. This schedule, starting with the first week in August, outlines definite release dates up to and including the last week in December.

The Universal's announced program, considered the most ambitious ever undertaken by that or any other producing organization, will tax to the utmost the capacity of the Universal City studios. More than a score of companies are being employed on this schedule alone, exclusive of the chapter-plays and short subjects that Universal produces and distributes. Although Mr. Laemmle's recent trip to the Coast paved the way for this increased production, the "U" studios and their staffs are working overtime to turn the schedule out promptly.

Included in the Universal's schedule for the season of 1924-5 are 12 Jewels, 3 Hoot Gibson productions, 52 Century two-reel comedies, 12 Hysterical History one-reel comedies, 104 International News Reels, 10 two-reelers starring Jack Dempsey, 26 Universal single-reel comedies, 52 Western-action-dramas, 6 five-reelers featuring Jack Hoxie, and half-a-dozen more Westerns with such well-known stars as William Desmond.

Leading off the 1924-5 schedule is Virginia Valli's Universal Super-Jewel, "The Signal Tower," written by Wadsworth Camp and directed by Clarence Brown, whose direction of this production and his handling of "The Acquittal" place him among the foremost megaphone-wielders of the country.

Those fortunate enough to have seen this picture proclaim it to be greater than Universal's worldwide box office success, "The Storm," and predict it will enhance considerably the already-established prestige of that producing organization.

Following Universal will release "The Reckless Age," Reginald Denny's speedy comedy Jewel, based on Earl Derr Biggers' novel, "Love Insurance." Directed by Harry Pollard. "The Reckless Age" has all the earmarks of achieving even greater success than did the same director's "Sporting Youth." It will be released August 10.

Next comes Mary Philbin's first Universal-Jewel of the 1924-5 season. "The Gaiety Girl," adapted from I. A. R. Wylie's serial novel in Good Housekeeping Magazine, "The Inheritors." Boasting a story, setting and photography of great beauty, the subject is considered by Universal executives to be the most appealing and suitable vehicle Miss Philbin has yet had.

Booth Tarkington's famous novel, "The Turmoil," with an all-star cast, including George Hackathorne, Eileen Percy, Emmett Corrigan, Eleanor Boardman, Pauline Garon, Edward Hearn and Winter Hall, is next on the schedule. This Jewel, directed by Hobart Henley, is to be released August 31.

"The Turmoil" will be followed by "The Family Secret," adapted jointly from Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, "Editha's Burglar," and August Thomas' sensational stage success, "The Burglar." Baby Peggy heads an all-star cast.

Next on the list will be "Butterfly," based on Kathleen Norris' current best-seller. Laura LaPlante, Norman Kerry, Ruth Clifford and Kenneth Harlan are at present engaged in producing this Universal-Jewel under Clarence Brown's direction.

Reginald Denny's second Jewel for 1924-5, "Captain Fearless," is adapted from Eugene P. Lyle's novel of Old Mexico, "The Mis-sourian."

Warner Brothers present "Broadway After Dark," from the play by Owen Davis, featuring Anna Q. Nilsson, Adolphe Menjou and Carmel Myers. Carmel is shown vamping, as usual.

THE NEWS AT A GLANCE

Owing to the public demand, Harold Lloyd's "Girl Shy" will be held over at the Mark Strand theatre for another week. This is the first time that any comedy picture has ever played three consecutive weeks in a Broadway theatre.

Record Breaking Crowd Expected In Boston for M.P.T.O.A. Convention

REPORTS made at the joint session of the National Convention Committee and the Massachusetts Committee in Boston April 22 showed gratifying advances were recorded on the matter of arranging for the national meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which will be held in that city on May 27, 28 and 29.

National President Sydney S. Cohen, Chairman M. E. Comerford of the Convention Committee; Dave Adams, President of the New Hampshire Motion Picture Theatre Owners; State President E. M. Fay of Rhode Island; William Cadoret of Illinois; M. J. O'Toole and others represented the National Organization, and State President Jacob Lourie of Massachusetts; Harry Wasserman, chairman of the Massachusetts Convention Committee; Ernest Horstmann, the executive secretary, and a large number of theatre owners from Boston and other cities made reports on the detail convention arrangements.

The following members of the Massachusetts organization and Convention Committee also were in attendance.

Patrick F. Lydon of South Boston, Joseph Woodhead of Clinton, A. Locatelli of Lexington; Al Somersby, Stanley Sumner, Moe Silver, Charles H. Ross, Charles W. Hodgdon, Phillip Markell, and Philip Smith of Boston; Frank J. Howard of Brookline; Nathan Yamins of Fall River; William E. Dowlin of East Boston; Gordon Wrighter of Springfield; and Elmer R. Daniels of Worcester.

Cohen Reports

President Cohen reported that thirty-one states had already reported to the National Headquarters in the matter of being represented at the convention, a big advance over previous years one month before the convention date, and that this presaged a convention in Boston which would surpass all previous efforts of the organization in this connection.

He reported that unusual enthusiasm prevailed respecting the advances made in the matter of national legislation, especially that directed to ward the repeal of the seat and admission taxes and the modification of the copyright laws to set aside the music license tax. The amount of money saved to theatre owners in this relation, he said, would total millions of dollars annually and exhibitors generally now realize that this and other forms of substantial advancement would have been impossible without the concerted theatre owner power exerted through national organization. Mr. Cohen also reported briefly on the general condition of organization in the nation, all phases of which will be presented in detail by him at the national convention.

Joseph W. Walsh, President of the Connecticut Theatre Owners, reported the cooperation of the theatre owners of his state in the convention activities and E. M. Fay, President of the Rhode Island organization and Dave Adams of the New Hampshire unit, reported similarly.

National Director M. E. Comerford made a pointed address on the work of organization generally, in which he outlined the many difficulties with which theatre owners are forced to contend and urged that a compact business organization was very essential to the growth and development of the exhibitors business.

Convention Program

The convention sessions will open on Tuesday morning, May 27, at 10:30 o'clock promptly in the main banquet hall of the Copley Plaza Hotel. Special conveniences for the theatre owners in this relation have been provided by manager Fogg of the hotel. The delegates will occupy the main floor of the hall and visitors will be accommodated on the spacious balconies.

Governor Channing H. Cox of Massachusetts and Mayor James W. Curley of Boston will formally welcome the delegates on behalf of state and city. Responses will follow and then the detail work of the convention will commence at once. On account of the vast amount of work to be handled there, a session may be held on Tuesday night.

Entertainment features will surpass all previous efforts and this is made possible because of the varied elements of interest in and around Boston associated with early American history, the beautiful harbor and other points which have a special appeal to all. The Massachusetts Committee have provided lines of entertainment which will take up all of the spare time of the delegates and visitors.

The City of Boston, through the courtesy of Mayor Curley, has arranged a harbor trip on city steamships which will cover a radius of over fifty miles, during which time all the city fire boats in full action will circle around the other ships. Trips on land to Bunker Hill, Lexington, Concord and other points have also been arranged.

Music Tax Fight

That the national organization has not been idle is shown by a letter issued by D. W.

Silverman, director of the department of music, showing what has been done concerning the music tax, which has been waged so vigorously.

The letter calls attention to the fact that Waterson, Berlin and Snyder Music Company has withdrawn from the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers and will permit all theatres to use music published by this company tax free and will not aid in any way the fight being waged against the theatre owners.

The resignation of the Waterson, Berlin and Snyder Company from the "music trust" will be a great blow as this company is the largest music publishing house in the world and produces a large majority of the song hits used by theatres.

It is not unlikely that this step by a prominent music publishing company will be felt by the "music trust" and will cause a noticeable rift in the ranks. It would not be at all surprising to find other companies follow the steps of the Waterson, Berlin and Snyder Company and thus leave the Authors, Composers and Publishers flat.

This first step in the march toward victory is a big one for the exhibitor and the details of the fight will be made known in a report to be read at the convention in Boston.

Those who have not already made hotel reservations should get in touch with National headquarters. Circulars giving names of hotels and rates are available.

Coast Branch Will Be Established By Newly Organized I.M.P.P.D.A.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, held April 26 at their headquarters, 1650 Broadway, heard the report of the committee appointed to devise ways and means for establishing a branch of this committee with his associates, Joe Brandt, Bobby North, I. E. Chadwick and Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, recommended that a branch of the I. M. P. P. D. A. with a local executive secretary be established without further delay in either Hollywood or Los Angeles.

William J. Russell Productions, Inc., Los Angeles, who was a guest at the meeting, reported that great enthusiasm was manifested in this new and rapidly growing association by their western brothers and on the strength of the committee's recommendation and Mr. Russell's report, it was unanimously moved that Mr. Goldburg, who is already on his way to the Coast, continue the negotiations for this new branch. William Steiner announced that he was leaving for Hollywood early next week and volunteered to assist Mr. Goldburg in this project. With such able representation from the East, success is assured.

President Chadwick announced that the last and probably largest luncheon until the Fall season, will be held on Tuesday, May 13, at Hotel Astor. Several prominent individuals who are considered authorities in the moving picture industry have been invited to address the luncheon and it is confidently expected at this time that they will accept the invitation.

A forward step was taken when the I. M. P. P. D. A. decided to affiliate with the Arbitration Society of America. This will make it possible to secure a thoroughly posted arbitrator to take part in all arbitration hearings which are held by the Association, the first of the controversies to be settled by arbitration to be held next week.

OPTIMISM AT HODKINSON SALES CONVENTION

First of Series of Conventions Brings Closer Relationship

THE first of the Hodkinson sales conventions, held on April 26 at the executive offices of the company, was marked by spontaneous enthusiasm and the well founded optimism of the eastern sales chief.

The convention was attended by all of the branch managers in the eastern division, and the statements made by the executives on the product for the 1924-25 season were received with rounds of applause and declarations by the branch representatives that the new pictures would triple and quadruple all past booking records in their respective territories.

President F. C. Munroe addressed the convention on the subject of the tremendous financial obligations that the Hodkinson company had assumed in its contracts with the best of the independent producers. He pointed out that the commitments of the company ran into many millions of dollars and that the executives of the company were cheerfully undertaking the obligations in the fullest confidence that product of the highest class would find a ready market in every first run theatre.

"The Hodkinson Corporation is a service company," said Mr. Munroe, "and while we expect to make money for ourselves our first duty is to make money for our producers and to do that we must be sure that we contract with the best of the producers for the best of pictures that will make money for the exhibitors."

Vice President John C. Flinn told of the unceasing work that had been done since January 1 in lining up the new product and the world-wide plans for exploiting the pictures. "The first thing we did," said Mr. Flinn, "was to draw up a complete list of every reputable motion picture producer and then subject the list to a process of elimination. The list was boiled down to only those producers that had positively established themselves as creators of money-making attractions and our negotiations for product was confined to those comparatively few men, with the result that already we have fifteen splendid attractions for release before August 1 and between thirty-six and forty great big pictures under contract for the 1924-25 season."

Vice President Paul C. Mooney presided

CELEBRITIES DABBLE IN REAL ESTATE ON COAST

"Cecil B. De Mille, director general of Paramount, is known in three or four corners of the world as a motion picture producer, but Cecil B. De Mille, real estate speculator and broker, means little outside Los Angeles," Barrett Kiesling, personal representative of Mr. De Mille, told members of the Kansas City Real Estate Board in an address last week. "About 40 per cent of Mr. De Mille's fortune has been derived from motion pictures and 60 per cent from real estate.

"Harold Lloyd is one of the most successful operators in downtown Los Angeles leaseholds, and one of the best informed speculators in this involved phase of real estate.

"Noah Beery, son of a Kansas City policeman and one of the best hated villains on the screen, has made big returns on his operations in bungalow court building.

VITAGRAPH WILL HOLD SALES MEETING

President Smith Calls Meeting for Chicago to Discuss Plans

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has called a general sales meeting of executives of the organization to be held in Chicago early in May. This conference will be attended by all division managers, exchange managers and members of the sales force.

John B. Rock, general sales manager, will join Mr. Smith in Los Angeles, after a tour of exchanges which will include those of the West Coast, and go to Chicago for the meeting with him. This will be Mr. Rock's third swing around the circuit of Vitagraph branches.

This is the first general meeting of the Vitagraph organization for several years. Mr. Rock has visited the more important key cities in the last month where he has held subsidiary meetings in advance of the main conference.

At the Chicago sales meeting the production plans as completed by Mr. Smith for the season of 1924-25 will be announced. There will be twenty-four special super-features of the same high calibre as "Captain Blood" and "The Clean Heart."

"Our meeting in Chicago will consider motion pictures from the exhibitors' point of view. I have asked all Vitagraph salesmen to submit at that meeting not only the commendations of picture theatre owners for the exploitation aids now prepared for them but to submit frankly the criticisms of the house managers as well. The sales force of Vitagraph will direct its efforts toward the betterment of relations between exhibitor, distributor and producer," said Mr. Rock.

Vitagraph is releasing for summer bookings four specials produced by J. Stuart Blackton and David Smith, "Borrowed Husbands," "Between Friends," "The Code of the Wilderness," and "The Strength of Desire," as well as "Virtuous Liars," a Whitman Bennett production and "One Law for the Woman," a Charles E. Blaney melodrama.

BEAUTIFUL THEATRE PLANNED FOR DURHAM, N. C.

The Leitch-Pryor interests in the Carolinas and Virginia, operators among other theatres, of the magnificent National theatres in Richmond and Greensboro, have announced through General Manager T. G. Leitch the early erection in Durham, North Carolina, of an eight story office building the first floor of which will be occupied by a magnificent motion picture theatre, to represent the last word in modern theatre building and equipment.

The structure alone will cost $500,000 and the furnishing of the theatre an additional $150,000, it is estimated, and will be patterned after their monumental enterprise the National theatres. The location is very advantageous, on Maine Street.

The Southern Amusement Company is the subsidiary corporation under which the new building will go up, this being allied with several other subsidiary corporations under which their theatre activities are operated throughout this territory.

SAM MORRIS REPORTS ON EXHIBITORS' VIEWS

Managers Disinclined to Sign for Large Blocks of Pictures

THAT exhibitors are giving much serious thought to bookings for the coming season is the report brought home by Sam Morris, the busy general manager for Warner Brothers. He returned last week after visiting exchanges in Chicago, Des Moines, Cleveland and Milwaukee.

Following a busy day spent with Sam Warner, he left for Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Detroit.

While away, he arranged for the premiere of "Beau Brummel" at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, May 25. In connection with this showing, a big campaign is being inaugurated. The wonderful tie-up on Broadway whereby two hundred window displays featuring John Barrymore as Beau Brummel were effected, will be repeated.

Mr. Morris said in regard to the general situation:

"Big block bookings are just what the exhibitor is cautious about. I found this to be true everywhere I went. They do not want to sign for fifty or sixty pictures, and take them on a gamble. But all exhibitors are anxious to sign up a dependable product of about twenty pictures as a foundation of their bookings.

Mr. Morris says he was pleasantly surprised to see what a hold "The Marriage Circle" was taking on the film patrons of Cleveland. It is now playing its fifth week at the Circle Theatre there.

"Even Holy Week was turned into a money maker," said Mr. Morris. "Before Printz booked the picture, he ran it one night after his usual show, having asked his patrons to stay. They boomed the picture to their friends and acquaintances. Ever since that time he has been deluged with requests for a regular engagement."

BURR AND JOHNNY HINES TOGETHER AGAIN

Hines Says He Is Glad to Get Back Under Burr Banner

IMPORTANT, indeed to the Independent market and also a sense of gratification to the industry in general is the announcement made this week from the office of Burr Pictures, Inc., that Johnny Hines, conceded to be one of the strongest bets in the state-rights field, has rejoined forces with producer C. C. Burr under whose banner Hines previously appeared in the famous Torchy Comedies, and in such successful feature melo-comedies as "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," "Sure-Fire Flint" and "Luck." This combination of producer and star brings together again one of the strongest and most successful units that has ever operated in the state-right market and will undoubtedly prove to be a move of vital import and joy to both independent exchanges and exhibitors.

C. C. Burr is rightfully recognized as the man who first gave Johnny Hines his real chance in pictures and helped make him the national star he is to-day. The warm friendship existing between these two; their knowledge of what the public wants in its motion picture entertainment and their ability to fill these wants makes the Burr-Hines combination as powerful and as successful an entity as has ever existed in motion picture production.

Both Mr. Burr and Hines are elated at the turn of events that brought them together again, and judging from present indications, they should supercede all their past successful efforts to turn out pictures that are at once a pleasure to the public and of proven financial value to both exchanges and exhibitors.

A. C. BERMAN RESIGNS FROM UNITED ARTISTS

A. C. Berman has resigned as foreign sales manager of United Artists. Mr. Berman went to that organization from his law practice in Boston five years ago at the organization of the company. His first work was in Canada opening sales offices in that country. He was so successful that he was brought to New York and made sales promotion manager and then assistant general sales manager.

KANSAS M.P.T.O. WANT CREDIT FOR THEIR EFFORTS

With the return this week of Samuel A. Handy, attorney for the M. P. T. O. Kansas City, in the interests of these organizations in the music tax fight, a letter, outlining the sentiment of the Kansas City organization towards Sydney S. Cohen, national president, in the music tax case, was written by A. M. Eisner, president of the Kansas City body.

In the letter president Eisner accuses National President Sydney Cohen of "basking in the limelight" and taking credit for all the work done in connection with the M. P. T. O. Kansas and with the music tax fight while, according to the letter, Samuel Handy, attorney for the Kansas M. P. T. O. has been doing very good work in Washington and is entitled to considerable credit for his efforts in behalf of the theatre owners.

'MIAMI' HAS WORLD'S PREMIERE SHOWING IN PROVIDENCE

The Alan Crosland production "Miami" with Betty Compson in the stellar role was given its world's premier presentation at the Rialto Theatre in Providence, R. I., Monday, April 28, where it opened for a week's run, attended by many socially prominent people who had met Miss Compson in Miami during the making of the picture, executives of the Hodkinson Corporation and many exhibitors from various parts of the New England territory and by popular, unanimous acclaim "Miami" was voted a big success.

Capacity business throughout the day and S. R. O. for the evening showings in competition with Harold Lloyd in "Girl Shy" and "Under the Red Robe" in opposition houses, caused William J. Mahoney, manager of the Rialto Theatre to praise "Miami" in glowing terms

GARSSON WILL PRODUCE SPECIAL SERIES

Pictures to Be Distributed Through Associated Exhibitors

CONTRACTS have been signed between Murray W. Garsson and Associated Exhibitors whereby the former will produce a series of special productions to be released by that distributing organization during the coming season.

The first picture from the Garsson studios to be released by Associated Exhibitors will be "The Spitfire" from the novel "Plaster Saints," which recently was completed, although the first one under the new contract will be "The Love Thief," the casting for which has just been started. "The Spitfire," was turned over to Associated by the Garsson organization through a separate contract.

One of the biggest casts of screen and stage stars that has been seen in a picture in some time portray the various parts in "The Spitfire," including, Betty Blythe, Pauline Garon, Lowell Sherman, Elliott Dexter, Robert Warwick, Leslie King, Burr McIntosh, Jack Donovan, Jack Wade and Helen Mack.

The first one was "Success," in which Brandon Tynan played the leading role and the second was "Broadway Broke," from the Earl Derr Biggers' Saturday Evening Post story which featured Mary Carr and Percy Marmont. "The Spitfire," was directed by Cristy Cabanne.

"The Love Thief," also will be directed by Mr. Cabanne and another cast of stars is being selected for the various important roles. The first one chosen was Alma Rubens, who will be seen in the leading feminine role. Frank Mayo is now on his way from California to play opposite her. The story is founded on New York society life, but leads into a romance of the high seas.

C. B. C. ANNOUNCES BIG CAST IN FIRST PERFECTION PICTURE

Word has just been received from the C. B. C. West Coast studios that in addition to William Fairbanks and Eva Novak, the following stars will appear in their first Perfection Picture: Kate Lester, Carl Stockdale, George Nichols, E. W. Borman and Carmen Phillips.

The present working title of this feature is "The Battling Fool" and from reports there will be plenty of thrills and action throughout.

The scenario of this production is from the pen of Wilfred Lucas and it involves a series of swiftly moving adventures with unexpected twists in sufficient number to keep any audience on the edge of their seats until the final scene.

FIRST NATIONAL OFFICERS ARE RE-ELECTED

New Orleans Meeting of Stockholders Full of Enthusiasm

A SPIRIT of confidence and optimism marked the annual convention of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., stockholders at New Orleans which closed last April 26 after four days' intensive work.

Few changes were made in the executive personnel of the organization. Robert Lieber was re-elected president of the company, and Harry O. Schwalbe continues as secretary-treasurer. Sol Lesser was made first vice-president and Jacob Fabian, third vice-president. The executive committee for the coming year will consist of E. V. Richards, of New Orleans; Sam Katz, of Chicago; A. H. Blank, of Des Moines; George W. Trendle, of Detroit; Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis; and Harry O. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia.

The New York executives were at their desks in the home office on Monday morning. Practically all the heads of departments attended the convention and R. A. Rowland journeyed from the West Coast studios of First National to New Orleans. One of the biggest events of the conventions was the screening of "The Sea Hawk," produced by Frank Lloyd Productions, Inc., which will be one of First National's specials for the coming season.

BALABAN-KATZ FORM MIDWEST THEATRES CORPORATION

The formation of the Balaban Katz Midwest Theatres, Inc., a Delaware Corporation, has just been completed. This corporation will be headed by Samuel Katz as president, and the policies carried out under his personal direction.

This corporation will include the theatres of the Balaban & Katz group, and also those theatres formerly grouped under the Midwest Theatres, Inc., and operated by Messrs. Thielen, Burford, Ruebens, Van Matre, Ellis, Lucas, Irwin, Koppelberger, Charles Lamb and C. B. Sawyer.

The activities of this corporation comprehend the city of Chicago and the major cities of the State of Illinois, and number approximately fifty theatres at the present time.

The purpose of the corporation will be to institute into all these theatres the same policy of operation and service that has made the Balaban & Katz theatres successful. The entire group of theatres will be institutionally advertised in their respective communities, and the highest standard of entertainment maintained.

All film purchases and bookings for the entire group of theatres will be concentrated under the direction of Floyd M. Brockell, formerly Distribution Head of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

All legal matters and details of management and policy have been consummated and the company begins operations May first.

BOSWORTH EXHIBITOR ELECTED MAYOR BY BIG MAJORITY

From exhibitor to mayor of a city, by a large majority against a wealthier and more influential opponent, is the feat accomplished by Mayor Victor Cason, manager and owner of the Cason theatre, Bosworth, Mo. Mr. Cason launched a campaign in which he hopes to show the citizens of Bosworth the type of "clean up" drives an exhibitor-mayor will conduct. He has appealed to fellow exhibitors of Missouri and Kansas to contribute 25 cents each toward a fund, to be used for the purpose of cleaning up the city, literally, thereby proving that an exhibitor's type of drive is not due to laws, but constructive work.

Mr. Ezell has been connected with the Selznick organization for many years, as Home Office representative in both the South and the West.

LAZARUS RESIGNS FROM UNITED ARTISTS

Former Sales Manager Will Soon Announce Future Activity

PAUL N. LAZARUS, who has been connected with United Artists since its inception and who for two and a half years has been general sales manager of the company, has resigned, effective April 26. The separation from Hiram Abrams, President, the United Artists, and his old associates was with the most cordial feelings on both sides.

When spoken to last week Mr. Lazarus hesitated to outline his future activities. The inference was plain, however, that he will have an announcement to make within the coming weeks that will be of real interest to the trade at large.

Mr. Lazarus went to the United Artists as advertising and publicity manager, becoming in turn sales promotion manager. Prior to that he had been with Vitagraph for three years as advertising and publicity manager.

Before coming into the film business Mr. Lazarus was for five years with a Hearst group of magazines, with the specific duties of circulation manager of Good Housekeeping.

He was one of the organizers and later president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, and has been an active member of that organization from the beginning. During his term of service to the United Artists he has traveled much and built up a large circle of friends in all departments of the industry.

LUBITSCH NAMES CAST

The principal players in the forthcoming Ernst Lubitsch production for Warner Brothers have been selected this week, and are holding themselves in readiness for the first call to the studio.

They comprise five, the very number, it will be remembered, with which Lubitsch so successfully manipulated the action of "The Marriage Circle."

The selection consists of May McAvoy, Pauline Frederick, Lew Cody, Willard Louis and Pierre Gendron. Lubitsch has been carefully sifting a selected list of players for the past several months, and this aggregation of screen pantomimists represents the results.

The casts of these pictures include some of the biggest box office names ever offered to the exhibitor.

Old Lady Astor Says

MABEL NORMAND is making personal appearances at the Fox Theatre, Philadelphia, this week in connection with the run there of "The Extra Girl." Miss Normand's tour from the beginning has been a series of unusual demonstrations showing the popularity of the player with the mass of photoplaygoers. The tour began March 22 in Newark at the Branford. Since then Miss Normand has played in Paterson, Passaic and Elizabeth, N. J., in the houses of the Fabian Circuit; in St. Louis at the New Grand Central Theatre, in Detroit at the Broadway Strand, and in Cleveland at Loew's State Theatre. From Philadelphia Miss Normand goes to Columbus, Ohio. It is pleasant to record that the public seems to have acted in exact justice.

MARION DAVIES has been invited to attend the Motion Picture Conference of the League of American Pen Women which is being held in Washington this week. It is said to be the first time in the twenty-seven years of its existence that the league has officially recognized the screen. The player also has been invited to attend the Authors' Costume Carnival Ball arrayed as a character in one of her own pictures and also to act as one of the judges.

PETE SMITH, from Los Angeles, forwards us paragraphs on "Signs of Spring in Moviedom," credited to Sylvia Breamer, notifying us that eighty-three press agents took their feminine stars to the beaches for "bathing" pictures the previous Sunday, and that one of these stars actually went into the surf—she fell in. An interesting paragraph is that five "For Rent" signs appear on Hollywood bungalows where but one grew before. In the mis-sive also is a somewhat ambiguous statement that "rolled stockings are again coming into their own."

ALLAN DWAN has completed the final cutting of "Manhandled," in which Gloria Swanson is starred for Paramount. Mr. Dwan's next effort with the same star will be "The Queen's Love Story," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. Ian Keith has been selected to play the male lead.

RAOUL WALSH, the director of "The Thief of Bagdad," is credited with having inherited a large sum of money. The report is that the amount of the legacy is well up in the hundred thousands and that Mr. Walsh will invest some portion of it in California production. Also it is stated that he is negotiating with Morris Gest for the picture rights of "The Miracle." We hope the report is true in every detail, especially that in regard to the legacy.

THE former Esther Lindner, who was so long and so competently the publicity department at C. B. C.'s offices, is now Mrs. Ralph H. Haas. The wedding took place on April 24.

HERMAN SCHOENSTADT, senior member of the firm of H. Schoenstadt & Sons, 1118 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, accompanied by Mrs. Schoenstadt and her sister, sailed from New York on April 29 on a tour of Europe and the continent. While abroad Mr. Schoenstadt will make an investigation on investment possibilities in motion pictures in Europe.

J. R. BRAY, President of Bray Productions, Inc., and the inventor of many devices improving the animated cartoon, who went abroad early in March, is due home this week. Mr. Bray's visit was largely spent in England and France, where he arranged for the distribution and sale of Brayco, a new material for the Bray Film Library. During his stay the inventor consulted with H. G. Wells regarding the production of "The Outline of History," work on which, it is expected, is shortly to be begun by Mr. Bray.

MAX ROTH, general sales manager for Preferred Pictures, announces that "Maytime" has been booked by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld for the Rialto in New York. This play of Rida Johnson Young won much popularity during its seven years on the stage. Its adaptation also has met with genuine success in the many cities where it has been played.

MARY PICKFORD and Douglas Fairbanks are receiving many attentions in England. Last week they were guests at the carnival ball given in London by the American Legion Post. The function, which was one of a series of inaugural events in connection with the Empire exposition, was held under the patronage of the American Ambassador and a distinguished group of patronesses. The preceding year the Prince of Wales was honor guest.

LAURETTE TAYLOR has left New York for Hollywood, where she will make for Metro a screen version of one of her big stage successes, "One Night in Rome," written by her husband, J. Hartley Manners. This will be Miss Taylor's third picture, each of which was for Metro. The first was "Peg-o'-My Heart" and the second "Happiness."

GRANT CARPENTER, who has just completed the adaptation of Elinor Glyn's "How to Educate a Wife" for Warner Brothers, has been elected president of the Hollywood branch of the Authors' League of America. Mr. Carpenter was formerly a newspaper man, having been a reporter in New York and San Francisco and dramatic critic as well in the latter city. Also he served an apprenticeship as a war correspondent in Europe and South Africa. He has written two novels with Chinese backgrounds.

CECIL B. DE MILLE, who besides making pictures has shown a liking for real estate and banking, is now reported to have taken over the majority of stock in a Los Angeles company engaged in the manufacture of milk bottles. This latest activity of the producer may afford opportunities for the punster. But what kind can a man make these days other than for dairy products?

JOHAN B. ROCK, General Manager of Vitagraph, has returned from his second inspection tour. His last trip included visits to Chicago, Minneapolis, Winnipeg, Omaha, Kansas City and St. Louis. Mr. Rock's purpose in these visits is the renewal of old friendships among exhibitors and personally to become acquainted with every Vitagraph employee. Exchange sales meetings were held in each of the cities visited. Mr. Rock quotes the Kansas City Commercial Club in its forecast on general trade conditions as predicting that 1924 will be the most prosperous year the middle west has known in a decade.

The Editorial Page

After Boston—

THE time for the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Boston is rapidly approaching. The dates are set for May 27, 28, and 29. For the first time in the history of national exhibitor organization the coming sessions will be the fifth consecutive of a single regime.

After four years as President Sydney S. Cohen of New York will lay down the reins of office, the reins that were placed in his hands in Cleveland.

While it is unlikely Mr. Cohen will concede it to be the case it is not unreasonable to assume that he has some regrets he did not definitely retire from the presidency in Chicago in 1923.

When in response to a round-robin summons last year the president unwisely decided again to become a candidate before the convention he declared himself in for a lot of work and a lot of what many busy men character as "grief" in the way of official and partisan worries.

The outcome of the convention was the estrangement of several important states—important because of the organizations that had been built up within them.

* * *

TODAY those bodies are outside the breast-works of the national association. They have federated under the title of the Allied State Organizations, and are keeping in touch with each other physically by bimonthly meetings, each represented by its president.

The next meeting of the allied body will be held in Morehead City, N. C., June 11 and 12, simultaneous with the annual meeting of the North Carolina Theatre Owners.

It will be noted that the date follows close upon that of the sessions of the national body in Boston.

There is room in the United States for one organization of Theatre Owners. There is not room for two. Whatever may be accomplished by one or both of these in the way of substantial progress is done not because of there being but in spite of it.

Anything that may now be done by the two under separate banners may be done twice as well and with half the effort by united forces.

The election in 1923 of Mr. Cohen was the rock upon which the split was precipitated. With the retirement of the present incumbent the original cause of the fracture is removed.

As for those who may profess to fear the continuing influence of the present regime we believe a bit of reasoning will dissipate that.

WHEN a man for four years has given of his time and money and energy in behalf of an organization it stands to reason that he will experience far deeper satisfaction in seeing turned over to his successor an organization that if it does not represent all of the units at least is in a fair way presently of encompassing them.

So it may be put down as common sense that Mr. Cohen will do anything in his power to conciliate and harmonize contending elements.

When two film companies, each representing millions of dollars in investments, can find common ground upon which to unite, surely it is a near simple matter for two bodies of Theatre Owners to sink their partisanship and shake hands.

No capital in this instance is involved. It is a mixture of principle and pride. But the prize that will be awarded for the sacrifice is unity.

Upon the men holding important position in the two bodies rests the burden of responsibility for taking the right steps that the present inconceivable situation shall not continue.

The time for conciliation is prior to the election of the incoming administration. That is simply an application of the old American principle of giving effect to the "consent of the governed."

UP in Boston the delegates will have renewed to their memory a happening in the pre-Revolutionary period which is described as the Boston Tea Party. That little incident firmly established and advertised the American objection to "Taxation without representation."

Speaking of taxation, we are told that in Boston there will be no subscriptions asked for—that Moving Picture Day will take care of national finances.

Every unit of the Allied State Organizations should be represented in Boston by delegates with full power to effect conciliation.

And this is a good place to say that the retiring administration has a record of achievement. The public service department of the Theatre Owners has performed really constructive work, has by itself justified the work at Cleveland four years ago.

A controversy between two groups whose interests are identical should be settled around one table in Boston on the evening of May 26, if not before.

LEADERS ALL

Mack Sennett, Pioneer in Comedy

THERE may be a question as to who was first in the arena of dramatic motion pictures, but it is unlikely only one seriously will question the premiership of Mack Sennett in the comedy field. He was not the first to make comedy pictures, it is true. The Frenchmen had shown us a number of things in the way of funmaking before Mr. Sennett began to perform at the Biograph studios.

The Sennett comedy, nevertheless, started on original lines. It was operated on the basis that in order to lead it is necessary to invent—to bring to the screen some element of funmaking that prior to that time it had not known.

While the "Keystone cops" might provide mirth for the throngs for two years or three years or four years there would come a time when there would be a failure on the part of the house out front to react to this style of comedy.

So while all over the world motion picture followers were "laughing themselves sick" over the desperate struggles of the cops to capture their elusive quarry the creator of that lively band already was "set" on something different to be employed as an acceptable substitute and successor.

LEADERS ALL—MACK SENNETT

BECAUSE of his inventiveness and of his thorough study of the psychology of the laugh; because of his maintenance of a sound body in order that optimism might be given full play; because of his pioneering which captured the attention of a world seeking mirthful recreation; and because of his patience in securing just the effect needed.

ing in New York to cultivate a natural baritone voice he secured employment in the Biograph studio in the same city.

The work attracted him from the first. As the engagement was extended and there were revealed to him some of its untouched possibilities it fascinated him.

IT was not long before he determined to give up his dreams of success on the operatic stage and tie down to pictures. His first work with the Biograph company had been of an all-around character. Very shortly, however, he was directing as well as playing, and the subjects had a decided comic twist.

One of his specialties in those days was the role of Sherlock Holmes—or rather a pipe-smoking exaggerated "fly cop." It was a characterization that became famous among the uniformed "pavement pounders" the country over, one that regular policemen always would flock to witness.

The work of Mr. Sennett for the Biograph attracted the attention of exhibitors and the public at large. Only those on the inside of things in those days knew his name, as according to the policy of the company the names of the players were not revealed. To be sure, in answer to the insistent demands of British clients the company supplied names to the players, but they were not the ones by which their owners were known by their friends.

In 1912 Mr. Sennett received an offer from the New York Motion Picture Company, which he accepted. On July 4 of that year with a small company headed by Mabel Normand and Ford Sterling he crossed the Hudson River to Fort Lee, N. J., and began the making of the initial Keystone comedy.

It was the first of a line that was to become famous. It was a "million dollar brand" in very truth. It hardly will be denied by any one cognizant of the box office power of the Keystone of that day that in good-will alone the name was worth the equivalent of seven figures.

In 1915 Mr. Sennett joined with Thomas H. Ince and D. W. Griffith in releasing through Triangle Pictures. Later on under the brand name of Mack Sennett Comedies he formed a distribution alliance with Paramount.

IN 1920 Associated Producers was organized, but after a career of ten months the product was transferred to First National.

During the past year Mr. Sennett has entered into an agreement with Pathe for release of all his "short" material and with Associated Exhibitors for feature product.

The present site of the Sennett studios in Los Angeles covers thirty acres and is the same spot as that where the old Keystones were made. Here were developed among others Charles Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Ford Sterling, Buster Keaton and Al St. John and among the women Gloria Swanson, Mabel Normand, Betty Compson and Marie Prevost.

Mr. Sennett never has been married. Each year his mother, Mrs. Catherine Sennett, comes down from Canada to spend about five months with her son in Los Angeles. This winter for the first time she appeared before the camera. The comedy was "The Hollywood Kid," in which, by the way, Mr. Sennett also has a role.

MACK SENNETT always has been a believer in the healthy body as a prerequisite for the best of work—that the man whose physical condition is such that he himself can see fun in the ordinary things of life is the better equipped to portray that mirth to others.

From his earliest days the producer has been much out of doors. He was born in Danville, in the province of Quebec, and was raised on a farm. There was developed the solid constitution which has been maintained with such care in later years.

The producer is a believer, too, in the maxim of early to bed and early to rise. It is in the first hours of daylight that he gives full play to his fondness for the lonesome trail, the open country. He may be seen any morning when the weather is not unpropitious either on foot or on horseback traveling over mountain paths.

Early in life Mr. Sennett had ambitions to sing in opera. While study-

Betty Hallowell is an unsuccessful fashion designer. Her brother Jack is crippled by political boss Kitchell's auto. The latter swears vengeance on Betty when she refuses the slim compromise he offers. Broke, Betty impersonates Nina Loring, missing international beauty, and the New York modistes flock to buy her designs. The real Nina is wanted for embezzlement. Kitchell's secretary is about to have Betty arrested. She is saved by Robert Fitzmaurice, young lawyer, who threatens to expose Kitchell's crookedness. Fitzmaurice wins Betty.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

AN amusing comedy drama, offering a light but interesting plot, framed in gorgeous settings and having especial appeal for feminine patrons on account of the style displays, which director Sam Wood has ingeniously woven into the story without causing a hitch in the action or continuity break.

As a matter of fact, garments for the fair sex are really a part of the narrative, for the heroine is a fashion designer who invades New York, only to find that the modistes spurn her work as that of a nobody. Whereupon, she realizes that you must bluff in order to win prestige in Gotham, successfully impersonates a famous international beauty whom she resembles, and the buyers for the leading shops rush feverishly to hand her orders.

The big situation develops when the political leader who seeks revenge on Betty has her pinched and Robert Fitzmaurice, astute lawyer and admirer of the heroine, steps in at the crucial moment and does some effective bluffing himself, with the result that boss Kitchell is scared stiff, backs down and comes across with a neat lump of coin to square matters.

After which Fitz gets the girl, as is only natural on the screen. It's all done in snappy, airy manner, with a bit of pathos and emotional stress thrown in for dramatic seasoning; there's mighty fine photography in evidence and Mr. Wood has certainly played up the jazzy angles, the modiste resorts, the magnificent hotel interiors, with an eagle eye on box office possibilities.

Agnes Ayres wears her handsome gowns gracefully and registers well in the role of Betty Hallowell. Antonio Moreno is satisfactory as the lawyer hero, Fred Butler looks and acts the part of the political boss to the life, and excellent performances are given by Pauline Paquette, Clarence Burton, E. H. Calvert, Jack Gardner, and others in the large, carefully selected cast.

The title is a good one to draw with. Tie-ups with fashion stores are naturally suggested and if a style prologue can be arranged it would attract the ladies. Lest your patrons might imagine that "Bluff" is simply a woman's picture, you should tell them something about the story's comedy, its romance and so on. The fact that the feature gives Gotham pretty hard digs on the score of "fourflushing" will please those who don't live there, but are none the less anxious to gaze upon the life of the metropolis, so play the swatting of little old N'Yawk up as hard as you like. Agnes Ayres and Tony Moreno should be featured in your ads.

Nancy Burrard's husband, Gerard, goes on a business trip to South America and she beguiles the lonely hours by a flirtation with Major Desmond, who supposes her to be a widow. He meets her husband in South America, when the truth is made known to him. Many complications result through the philandering of Dr. Langwell with various married women and a nurse who dies under suspicious circumstances. But the martial troubles of the different wives are finally dispelled, Nancy and her husband are reconciled and all ends well.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A MIXTURE of society drama and comedy, verging at times on the farcical, is offered by "Borrowed Husbands," which ranks as agreeable entertainment and should do well in all theatres where pictures of a light and amusing type are popular. It is skillfully directed, handsomely photographed and presented by a cast of capable players.

The basic idea is that of a sprightly young matron who, during the absence of her spouse, enlivens the slowly-dragging days by borrowing a few husbands for flirtations purposes, whereby she involves herself and feminine friends in a net of unexpected complications. A philandering physician of many love affairs also figures in the marital troubles which develop, and his attentions to the coquettish wife help to tangle things up considerably.

While the story is hardly convincing, it has been deftly handled by Director Smith, who has a happy knack of introducing a humorous touch whenever a situation threatens to become illogical, keeps the action humming along at a merry clip and achieves a very satisfactory climax.

There is a bit of pathos here and there, and a hint of tragedy, as instanced in the sudden death of a young nurse in whom Dr. Langwell is interested, but for the most part the production follows a light vein.

Florence Vidor plays the part of Nancy Burrard and succeeds in giving an extremely pleasing performance as that vivacious young lady, whose mischief-loving propensities lead her into considerable danger, so far as her domestic happiness is concerned, although everything comes out O. K. at the finish.

In exploiting the feature you will find the names of Florence Vidor, Robert Gordon, Earle Williams, Kathryn Adams and Rockliffe Fellowes worth advertising, as each has a strong following in various sections of the country. The title possesses drawing value, as it is calculated to arouse public curiosity to a considerable extent. Stress the story's comedy strength and romantic flavor.

Gordon Kent	Mahlon Hamilton
Norma Selbee	Betty Blythe
Laurence Regan Marchmont	Clive Brook
William Sothorn	Fred Paul
Jim Selbee	Ernest Hilliard

Gordon Kent, enormously wealthy American, comes from South America to paint Europe red. In Deauville he meets and loves Norma Selbee, a penniless American who rings herself in on one of Kent's lavish parties. They marry, but despite showered attentions Norma elopes with the wily adventurer Marchmont. Sothorn, Kent's famous detective friend, discloses that Marchmont is a crook, and that Norma's crook husband is still alive. Kent revenges himself by forcing Marchmont and Norma to always live together under penalty of turning both over to the police. The two wander over Europe and hate one another. In New York Jim Selbee tries to blackmail Kent. Norma warns him. Selbee is killed by Marchmont, and Kent, regretting, takes Norma to happiness in South America.

By HERBERT K. CRUIKSHANK

VIEWED from any angle this actionful melodrama seems a sure-fire box-office attraction. All the elements are present. From the heights to the depths, the picture runs the gamut. If your audience likes thrills, and is not so keen on themes that sear the soul or give too much to think about, "Recoil" will provide them with a satisfactory evening's entertainment.

In the author, Rex Beach, you have the name of a personality known wherever thrilling stories of life in the rough are read. The blond beauty of Betty Blythe has gained her fame and fortune, beside a wealth of popularity. Mahlon Hamilton also enjoys a large personal following among men and women as well as flappers. Clive Brook is an actor of merit, and these four names will surely interest prospective patrons. "Recoil" is an intriguing title; one that will arouse curiosity.

Beside these items there is the featured banquet to the ten most beautiful women in Europe. Champagne flows from fountains, and the "party" is as "wild" as any recently screened. An interesting scene is at Deauville's gay gaming Casino, where princes and paupers feverishly follow each revolution of the roulette wheel. Then there are oodles of pearls, and diamonds, and rubies all adorning Betty's shapeliness. A good fight, too, brief but of sufficient length to see the villain well beaten up.

Mahlon Hamilton has the added maturity—and avoirdupois—to look the part he plays, and he plays it in characteristic Hamiltonian style. Betty Blythe does some good character work, and has some emotional moments which are most realistic. Clive Brook seemed a bit vague at first, but later presents a vivid picture of a drug slave who goes mad. Fred Paul, as Sothorn, the detective, seems quite in character, and Jim Selbee makes a satisfactory snake as villain number two.

There are many exploitation possibilities—the most obvious being a beauty contest.

It will not be necessary to wrack your brains on exploitation ideas for "Recoil" as it has been chosen as a National Tie-Up film, and in booking it you will have a wealth of made-to-order exploitation free in tie-ups with nationally advertised products.

Up-to-Date Melodrama With Radio and Aero Trimmings Possesses Popular Appeal

Samuel DuPrez	George MacQuarrie
Jean Gagon	Bela Lugosi
Craig Burnett	Antonio D'Algy
Lucile Vantuy	Leonora Hughes
Madame Rosa	Mme. La Violette
Mary	Betty Jewel
Peter Leslie	Aubrey Smith

The descent of John Leslie's aeroplane in a Canadian hamlet leads to his acquaintance with Diane DuPrez. News of his wealthy father's death brings him back to New York, where Diane appears later. Her rustic manners and garments contrast unfavorably with the society atmosphere in which Leslie moves. She accepts James Dunbar's apparently honest offer to send her abroad to study music and absorb culture. Leslie weds her on her return but is led to believe her false. Diane goes back to Canada, Dunbar following. Leslie learns the truth, arrives in his plane, thrashes Dunbar and is reconciled to his wife.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan release ought to make money for the exhibitor wherever it is shown. It is extremely up-to-date in the true sense of that phrase as applied to showmanship angles, making the most of radio and aeroplane, offering elaborate settings, society atmosphere contrasted sharply with the frozen, snow-covered wastes of northern Canada, melodramatic incidents and romantic love interest.

This is the sort of thing which is bound to please nine out of ten movie patrons. It matters not a whit that the story at times skids perilously over very thin ice, so far as probability is concerned, the fact remains that it hits up a high-speed gait all through its eight reels, throws the emotional valves wide open, burns up sensational fuel recklessly and presents a rich variety of charming scenic views; the whole comprising what is known to the trade as a film with sure popular appeal.

Another point in its favor as a box office asset is the manner in which sympathy is piled up for the heroine from the start. Diane's New York debut, when she realizes that the lover who idolized the lady of his heart in far-off Canada, is ashamed of her social shortcomings amid more aesthetic surroundings, presents the French-Canadian girl as a real object of pity, and nobody in the audience is apt to blame her for accepting the seemingly friendly offer of the designing villain to finance her trip abroad, for the purpose of acquiring much-needed culture.

The narrative begins with the descent of Leslie's aeroplane in Canada. There is a big thrill punch neatly put over when he faces a tearing blizzard with Diane and is injured. Another good modern touch is the introduction of the radio by means of which a message is sent summoning the hero back to New York on account of his father's demise. Diane is compromised by having unwittingly spent a night during the storm with Leslie in a cabin, he also incurs the enmity of another suitor, and in this fashion the love interest is built up, with much speculation engendered as to the future of the pair.

The action shifts to New York and the whirl of life against luxurious backgrounds with lavish interiors of costly residences, gilded cabarets, etc., offering a telling contrast to the bleak Canadian wilds. No expense has been spared in filming the feature, and the photography, both as regards exterior and interior shots, registers as the acme of skilled camera technique.

You get another contrast jolt when Diane returns from Europe, dolled up in the latest fashion, her wild flower beauty transformed into a hot house plant of alluring splendor. Dunbar's exposure of the girl as a supposed light-of-love, whom he has been supporting, her retreat, broken-hearted and wretched, to the scene of her former drudgery follow in due course.

You will find "The Rejected Woman" a title with good exploitation possibilities, the broadcasting scenes are worth playing up and probably tie-ups with radio stores can be arranged. Don't hesitate about praising the story's romantic glamor, its decisive thrills, magnificent settings and society lure. Tell the women folks about the gorgeous gown display, boost the film's photographic excellence and mention the names of Conrad Nagel, Wyndham Standing and Alma Rubens.

OFFERS CONVENTIONAL PLOT

'Crossed Trails' Suitable for Theatres Where Bill Is Frequently Changed

CROSSED TRAILS. Independent Pictures Photoplay. Author, James Ormont. Director, J. P. McGowan. Length, 4,900 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bandy Dawson	J. P. McGowan
Tom Dawson	Franklyn Farnum
Alice Dawson	Billie Bennett
Mary Morgan	Alyse Mills
Buck Stoman	Mack Wright
Tom Dawson (eight years old)	Buck Black

Tom Dawson is manager of the Western Stage Line. Many robberies of the stage coaches take place, and Tom is kept busy pursuing the bandits, one of whom is the father of Mary Morgan, the girl he loves. After various adventures Tom captures the outlaw leader, known as Pepper Baldwin. The latter turns out to be Tom's father, who deserted his wife and child years before. Tom also finds his mother. His father dies. Tom wins Mary.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A WESTERN picture offering a rather conventional plot, with action fast in spots, but frequently dragging, "Crossed Trails" isn't a film of strong entertaining values. Considered as a box office asset, it belongs in the doubtful list, may fill a program gap in houses where the bill is often changed, but possesses no appeal for discriminating audiences.

The story depends altogether too much on coincidence to be in the least degree convincing, even when melodramatic license is allowed for, and the complications which ensue when the hero's daddy turns out to be the notorious outlaw whom the son has captured, veer dangerously close to burlesque, and are apt to provoke merriment instead of sentimental stress in the minds of spectators.

It is only when hero Tom and his men get mixed up in battles with the bad chaps, or some spectacular horse-riding stunts are introduced, that the feature dispenses a little of the excitement tonic one naturally looks for in average Westerners. The chief trouble seems to be that the interest isn't sustained. Director McGowan evidently had a hard time trying to make the situations interlock properly, due to the uncertain quality of his subject matter, the natural result being five reels, conspicuously padded and of uneven merit.

The camera work is good of its kind, the locations well chosen and the atmosphere colorful. There are some remarkably fine long shots, and Tom's rescue of Mary Morgan from the runaway stage is cleverly filmed.

You can exploit this as a Westerner with some good scenic angles, a love romance and the usual riding stunts, but be careful not to give your patrons the notion that a fine melodramatic treat is in store for them. It is one of these pictures that the wise showman will refrain from boosting too strongly, because of the after effects which might follow.

IS STIRRING MELODRAMA

'Dangerous Trails' Mingles Mystery Theme With Thrills and Fast Action

DANGEROUS TRAILS. Ambassador Pictures Photoplay. Author and Director, Alvin J. Neitz. Length, 5,750 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Grace Alderson	Irene Rich
Steve Bradley	Tully Marshall
Inspector Criswell	Noah Beery
Roland St. Clair	Allan Penrose
Jean Le Fere	William Lowery
Wang	Jack Curtis
Beatrice Layton	Jane Tallent

Steve Bradley, dance hall proprietor in the Canadian Northwest, is in league with Jean Le Fere and Wang, opium smugglers. Steve is engaged to Grace Alderson, singer in his resort. St. Clair, Northwest Mounted Police detective, goes on the smugglers' trail. Grace vamps him and they fall in love. In the finale, after many wild adventures, the smugglers are captured. Grace turns out to be in the employ of the police and marries St. Clair.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A STIRRING melodrama, with an uncommonly well turned mystery angle, splendidly maintained suspense, thrills galore and interesting love romance, "Dangerous Trails" possesses undeniable audience appeal and should prove a valuable box office attraction for all communities where virile, fast-moving films are in demand.

Features with the Northwest Mounted Police figuring largely in the action are apt to be looked upon suspiciously by exhibitors in general, owing to the unhappy fact that they have virtually been "done to death" on the screen in the past. But the showman can rest assured that, although the hero as well as the heroine, are members of that much-filmed body of gallant law-enforcers, "Dangerous Trails" is well worth booking. For it differs pleasantly from its predecessors exploiting the bravery of the Canadian officers, by presenting a story with many original situations and a mystery theme which defies speculation until it is cleared up in the final reel.

Take the case of the heroine, Grace Alderson, for instance. Usually it doesn't take the confirmed moviegoer long to dope out just what the principal female character is up to, no matter what sort of a secret hand she may be playing. But Grace, as the fiancée of the dance hall proprietor, who uses his resort to conceal his real business of opium-smuggling, is a sure-enough screen puzzle. Posing as a singer, vamping St. Clair, the detective, who naturally falls in love with her, she keeps everybody in the audience guessing as to what kind of a double-cross she intends working, and on whom.

There is some great snow scenic stuff, including a mad flight by the smugglers and heroine through a blinding storm and St. Clair's perilous trip to the official outpost on foot in the teeth of a howling blizzard. The climax comes in the United States, when the Federal officers aid St. Clair to raid Wang's Chinatown den, rescue the girl and pinch the criminals, all very well done and highly satisfactory to the on-lookers.

You can exploit this as a Canadian melodrama vibrating with exciting moments, offering an alluring romantic theme and replete with slam-bang-action. Make it plain that, although "Dangerous Trails" deals with the Northwest Mounted Police, it runs along original lines, else your patrons may fight shy of it. Irene Rich, Tully Marshall and Noah Beery are the members of the cast whose names possess the greatest drawing value.

'Mile-a-Minute-Morgan' an Amusing Mixture of Fun and Thrills

MILE-A-MINUTE-MORGAN. Sanford Productions Photoplay. Released by Aywon. Author Not Credited. Director, Horace Carpenter. Length, 4,900 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Paul Bunyon, Jr. Matty Mattison
Patricia Jennings Vivian Rich
Chester Jennings LaFayette McKee
Cissy Green Gene Crosby
Kenneth Winster Leonard Clapham

Paul Bunyon, disowned son of a millionaire, and his pal, Philo Brown, obtain jobs in a lumber yard of which his father is proprietor, under assumed names. Paul falls in love with Patricia Jennings, daughter of the manager. Philo boosts Paul as a fighter, known as Mile-A-Minute Morgan, and the supposed fistic wonder is forced into a match with professional Duke Brogan. Paul intends to skip out, but Patricia persuades him to stay. Kenneth Winster steals the purse money and abducts Patricia. Paul knocks out his opponent, pursues Winster and the latter is thrown over a bluff and killed. Paul wins his father's forgiveness and Patricia's love.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A GOOD Western comedy-drama, which ranks as an excellent program attraction, "Mile-a-Minute-Morgan" will amuse the majority of movie patrons and should do uncommonly well from the box office standpoint, especially in the neighborhood and smaller houses.

The plot is light stuff, a mixture of fun and thrills, with a seasoning of romance, not to be taken seriously at any stage, but extremely amusing and holding its interest from start to finish. Horace Carpenter is responsible for the direction and has done a thoroughly workmanlike job, keeping the action moving at a lively clip, interpolating crisp bits of comedy just where they are needed and showing considerable ingenuity in shaping the situations so that one slides smoothly into the next, never losing sight of the story's main theme, despite its wealth of detail.

The fun starts early, with the introduction of the hero and his chum as stowaways on board the steamer Yale, and the girl in the case as a beauteous passenger, the trio re-appearing later at the lumber camp, where the men get jobs and the lady turns out to be the manager's daughter. Events move thick and fast, when Paul Bunyon's indiscreet pal booms the former as a pugilist of tremendous valor, thereby drawing him into an unwelcome match with a professional scrapper, and the glove bout which ensues is a sure-enough thriller, warranted to stir up the spectators to the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

Paul's chase of the villain, rescue of the girl and Winster's plunge to death over a bluff, are all melodramatic episodes put over in bully style, hokum, to be sure, but well handled, and with plenty of judicious comedy relief to keep the balance even.

Matty Mattison plays the hero with particular attention to the humorous possibilities of the role and scores a decided hit, aided immensely by sprightly Billy Franey, as Paul's trusty, if erratic pal, Philo Brown. Mattison and Brown register as a great pair of mirth-creators, natural comedians both, who never miss a point in the laugh-raising game. Also, Matty's work in the big fight scene, should not pass unnoticed, for he shapes up like a born ringster. Vivian Rich is a winsome heroine and the support is adequate. The photography includes many impressive exteriors, the lumber camp shots deserving especial praise, and the lighting effects are pleasing.

For exploitation purposes, play up the fight scene, the lumber camp locations, dwell on the story's bright comedy angles, dramatic sequences and thrills. Matty Mattison is fast becoming a screen favorite and his work in this feature will go far toward increasing his reputation. Mention his name and that of Billy Franey, another comedian who has a wide circle of admirers.

IS COLORFUL SHEIK FILM

'Son of the Sahara' Produced Abroad, A Triumph of Realism

A SON OF THE SAHARA. First National Photoplay. Author, Louise Gerard. Director, Edwin Carewe. Length, 7,603 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Barbara Claire Windsor
Raoul le Breton (Cassim Amme) Bert Lytell
Captain Jean Duval Walter McGrail
Rayma Rosemary Theby

Raoul le Breton is brought up as son of a sheik of an Arab tribe. He is college bred and falls in love with Barbara Langham, who first accepts and later dismisses him, when she learns of his native birth. Back in the desert, Raoul plans revenge. In a raid he captures Barbara, her father and Captain Jean Duval, a rival. She is sold as a slave but secretly purchased by Raoul. French troops rescue the captives, but in the meantime it transpires that Raoul is the offspring of white parents, and he and Barbara find happiness together.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS is good romantic melodrama, screened against wonderful backgrounds, and its colorfully realistic atmosphere is accounted for by the fact that Director Edwin Carewe and his players hiked across the sea and made the picture right among Algerian villages, besides having the broad expanse of the desert for a stage.

There have been many sheik films, too many indeed, for not a few of them flivvered and drew box office blanks, so that "A Son of the Sahara" was perhaps a risky experiment on the part of the producers. But in view of the results attained, the risk appears to have been justified. Exhibitors in general should find the feature a valuable box office attraction.

From first to last the film must have cost a pretty penny, when the expedition abroad is taken into consideration, but at that, Mr. Carewe got the worth of his money, we think. Certainly the desert scenery and exotic beauty of the other foreign localities couldn't be duplicated here by the most artistic of studio sets. And the camera shots of the real thing in the line of Algerian gardens and buildings, the frowning mountains fringing the edge of the sandy wastes and ancient Arabian towns, are mightily attractive.

As for spectacular effects, they are there in plenty, the skirmishing between the French troops and tribesmen, in which thousands of horses and camels participate, is as fine battle stuff as has ever been screened. And the story moves swiftly, the thrills, love episodes, the auction of the heroine in the slave market, the final attack by the white cavalry, grip the attention and hold it until the climax comes, with the revelation of the hero's identity and union with the girl he loves.

Play up the sheik element in your exploitation, but be careful to add that "A Son of the Sahara" was made right in the location called for by the story and is not to be confounded with the average sheik picture of ordinary merit. First National has issued a press sheet containing many suggestions for billing this feature, of which the exhibitor would do well to avail himself. The love interest, the thrills and melodramatic punch of the picture should be emphasized and the names of Claire Windsor, Bert Lytell, Walter McGrail, Rosemary Theby and Montagu Love are worth featuring.

Colonel Dodge, a gay old dog, is reaping the reward of one of his follies. He is threatened by an old flame, who has a packet of incriminating letters to back up her claims. The Colonel leaves for Florida, accompanied by his daughter. Soon after, Arbutus, his trailing Nemesis, comes to the hotel with a friend, Miss Pink, who is secretly employed by the Colonel to filch the all-important letters. As a result of the confusion which follows, the Colonel hires Lester to steal the letters. Lester is also retained by Miss Arbutus to keep an eye on Miss Pink; and the latter hires Lester to steal the letters from Miss Arbutus. During the next few days the letters change hands no less than fifty times ending up in an unforeseen denouement which shows the Colonel taking Miss Arbutus as his lawful wife.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

IN again, out again, "Finnigan" would describe rather concretely the development of the situations in Principal's uproariously funny screen version of the late Broadway stage success, "Listen Lester."

The first thing that caught the reviewer's eye was the striking array of screen talent, and with such names on the list as Harry Meyers, Louise Fazenda, Alec Francis, Eva Novak and Lee Moran, the writer felt he was in for an interesting time. He was not disappointed. Gags of a real entertaining order flowed thick and fast and the acting throughout was of the sort that makes comedy features a boon to the recreative life of the tired business man.

With due respect to the waggishness of Lee Moran, who, as the sprightly hotel clerk, in answer to the irate patron's query, "Who made my bed?" replies "Sears, Roebuck!" the quips and comedy devices are made part of a fairly convincing story form; in other words, there is a plot endowed with the red corpuscles of coherent continuity, and a straighter story form than might be expected of material which seems essentially adapted to a musical comedy vehicle.

Alec Francis, as the gay old philanderer in the garden of folly, contributes an excellent and convincing performance. Harry Meyers has you figuratively on your toes waiting for the unexpected to break. It doesn't but you laugh anyway, for Harry is droll. Very much so. Eva Novak, as the Colonel's daughter, lends a variety of charm and steadiness to the hectic proceedings centered about the much mooted letters, and Louise Fazenda, to use racy parlance, breezes in under the dramatic wire with oodles of plaudits to spare.

George O'Hara's ring experiences in the Fighting Blood Series serve him in good stead, when as one of a rescuing party to save the Colonel's daughter and Miss Arbutus from the sinister attentions of drunken sailors, he veritably "cleans up." "Sock, sock sock, the boys are socking," is his delightful little refrain, which spells a funeral dirge for those on the receiving end of the fistic barrage.

"Listen Lester" is clean, wholesome entertainment. Make much of the fact that the cast comprises a full list of sterling performers. You might, in exploiting the picture, broadcast a herald in letter form. As a last word, the reviewer might add, let us have some more "Listen Lesters."

Keep Your Spring Programs Strong with Paramount Pictures

BIG BROTHER—Cannon & Trescott, Orpheum Theatre, Elsberry, Mo., write: "Boys, here is a picture... It will please all who see it." C. H. Douglas, Realart Theatre, Los Angeles, calls it "by far the best feature Paramount has released this year." A REAL bet, that's a cinch! (Scenario by Paul Sloane.)

CALL OF THE CANYON—Here's a great chance to tie-up with Zane Grey's latest novel, which is a best seller everywhere TODAY! The picture is there. "Will please them all, no matter how particular," says William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City. (Directed by Victor Fleming. Scenario by Doris Schroeder and Edfrid Bingham.)

TO THE LADIES—A light, breezy comedy ideal for warm weather. "A delightful comedy-drama which pleased my patrons," is the comment of among many others, Ernest Liggett, Liggett Theatre, Madison, Kas. (From the play by Kaufman and Connelly. Scenario by Walter Woods.)

SPANISH DANCER—Many say it's Pola's greatest. A fast, romantic drama, fine for Spring and Summer. Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich., writes, "A special in every sense of the word. Star great, cast splendid." (By D'Ennery and Dumanoir. Scenario by June Mathis and Beulah Marie Dix.)

Tried and Proved Pictures

A Small Town House in A Big City

Manager Tells How He Keeps Them Away From Broadway

SCARCELY more than a stone's throw from New York's far-famed and brightly lighted Broadway, concealed behind rather dim lights as though it feared to show itself, we recently discovered one of the great Metropolis' small town theatres: Neighborhood house, it is classified as, but in reality it is as truly a small town theatre as any which the most obscure village in the country can boast.

Perhaps it seats many more people, perhaps it houses many more pictures, but as far as policy goes, the Photoplay Theatre at Ninety-Ninth Street and Columbus Avenue is just a small town house. We chanced to pass there recently and we stopped in to see Manager Phillips to chat with him about his theatre and his pictures.

Outside we noticed there were billed for showing this week five or six films which we recognized immediately as Tried and Proved pictures. How did ple, and then give them what they liked and enjoyed, he could make them the kind of patrons that would stick by him even if they had to wait six months for a picture they wanted to see.

By a process of elimination he found that it wasn't the star that appealed so much, as the type of story and the title of the picture. They liked sensational titles, and something that hit them between the eyes at first sight was what got them. That, then, was what he would give them.

Now in order to know if the story

Sometimes, of course, it happens that he must take a picture along with several others, and it isn't just what would appeal. In a case like that he very often doesn't show the picture at all. Rather than impose on his audience by giving them something they won't like and losing their confidence in him, he prefers to lose the rental price on the film.

If he does run the picture, he makes it a minor attraction. He arranges to show it in conjunction with some other picture, and thus he gets by without incurring the displeasure of his patrons.

We were interested to know if Mr. Phillips ever rebooked his pictures because his audience requested a reshewing. The answer was immediate and frank. As far as his patrons were concerned if they saw a picture once they didn't care to see it again, unless it was a comedy. Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Buster Beaton, Walter Hiers

THE audience that is seeking romance, action and thrills will find a who'some share of each in Selznick's "Rupert of Hentzau" which has been entertaining audiences over a year.

Manager Phillips do it? How did he get the people to come to his theatre to see old pictures when they might walk over three short streets and see new releases.

He explained it all. When he first took over the theatre he spent some time studying the neighborhood, learning what he could of the people, investigating the policy and the programs of the opposition houses. Then he made some deductions of his own. If he could sound out the tastes of these people, is his type or not, Manager Phillips might readily depend on press sheets, posters and the like. That would be the easier way, but for him, he feels, it is by no means the right way, and so he makes his selections from pictures he actually knows. In every instance where his booking method will allow he takes only those pictures which he knows his audience will like and he makes it a point, as far as possible, to see the films to make sure they are what he wants.

pictures were good for repetition after repetition. As a matter of fact the audience seems to demand at least one a week from these players but just what the picture is doesn't matter so much. If it can still make them laugh for the tenth time it is as good to them as any new comedy.

And Manager Phillips caters to their tastes. He runs, and reruns the comedies, and shows them the feature pictures only once. But in selecting these he chooses Tried and Proved pictures.

'The Old Homestead'

Back Home Story Released by Paramount

BRIEF: The village vamp induces the town weakling who works in the general store to steal for her.
Suspicion falls on Reuben, son of Uncle Joshua and he flees from town. The store keeper who holds a mortgage puts the house under the hammer because the mortgage can't be paid. Just at this time, a hurricane ascends on the village and works havoc. After the storm clears, Reuben is seen to have returned from his wanderings bringing with him, Rose, the vamp, whom he found stranded in Boston. Lem the weakling confesses to the theft. Reuben is acclaimed innocent, the holder of the mortgage relents, and a reunion takes place with everybody home again and happy.

IN the hurricane scene James Cruze has attained a real "thrill" The homely, true to type characters have so worked their way into the hearts of the spectators that when the storm comes which threatens to wipe out everyone and everything, the audience sits tense, hoping against hope that the home folks won't be destroyed.

The picture has something in it that hits a responsive chord which is the fundamental reason why the picture was such a success in New York where it played on Broadway for two weeks, and in all the smaller cities and towns where it immediately became popular and did tremendous business for the exhibitors.

The appeal of the picture carries its own advertising propaganda. By that we mean, that you should let the scenes and titles from the picture, used on lobby, window cards and display boards, talk for themselves. They carry a simple message that will surely get across to everyone.

But there are means of exploitation that are valuable and wise. For instance there is the tie-up with the local insurance agency. In a window with a small model "Old Homestead" they could have posters picturing the storm which almost destroyed the village. Then a conspicuous sign would convey the message:
"Have you insured the old homestead against fire, theft, and destruction? If you haven't our advice to you is to go to the.....
Theatre this evening and see what may happen to anyone's home at any time. Then call us or drop in first thing in the morning and we will be glad to write you a policy."

You might also try this as a teaser: Put an ad in the daily papers reading: "Wanted:
Information regarding the whereabouts of
stead' to see the world and has not returned.
Farmer boy six feet tall, fair hair. (Signed) Uncle Josh Whitcomb."

'The Queen of Sin'

Tale of Sin Released by Selznick

BRIEF: A story of modern sin is told and woven in is the story of the Queen of Sin of ancient times and the well known story of Sodom and Gomorrah.
With these two powerful examples of "the wages of sin" to guide her, Laura Welland is enabled to work out her difficult problem and find the way to true love and happiness.

ABOUT a year ago this powerful drama was released by Selznick and since then it has more than justified the great effort, the time and the enormous expense that went into the making of it. Film audiences were enthralled by this picture wherever it was shown and since the theme is universal and eternal it will doubtless be a safe box office picture for some time to come.

"The Queen of Sin" contains everything necessary to hold the tense interest of audiences. There are massive sets, thousands of people, a thrilling story, floods, fires, destruction of cities, wicked queens and many other angles, all of which can be used to great advantage in advertising and exploiting this picture.

The burning of Sodom and Gomorrah is of course a well known bible story and everyone knows the story of how Lot's wife was turned to salt when she yielded to temptation and turned to look back on the city of sin.
Bible and Sunday school classes will doubtless welcome the opportunity to tie up with a powerful moral picture like this.

If you are clever enough you can get the ministers to use the theme of Sodom and Gomorrah as the theme of their Sunday sermons just prior or during the run of your picture. Many ministers in New York have been referring to current stage plays in their sermons and even discussing the themes of these plays and advising the members of their congregations to go to see certain plays.

"Is the world becoming worse or better?
Has sin increased or decreased since the time of Lot's wife?" These are subjects that any live editor will welcome as the basis of an "argument" in the columns of his paper.

Several facts that will be of great interest to the public can be used by you in your publicity and advertising work and in teaser campaigns. Eighty thousand people were employed in making this production.

Two years were spent in research and two expert archaeological and biblical students verified every incident before any scene was completed. The Temple of Astarte, which was five hundred feet high and equally wide and long, was wrecked by a hurricane after the film was started, and had to be rebuilt. This delayed the production six weeks and necessitated an additional outlay of eighty-seven thousand dollars.

Eight hundred of the one thousand specially erected medieval buildings were demolished in the Sodom episode and ninety aircraft were engaged in the destruction scenes. The structures in one of the episodes were copied from wood cuts of the era of 2000 B. C. Two hundred thousand costumes, thirteen thousand wigs, thirty-eight thousand pairs of shoes, or sandals, seven hundred rugs of antique weave and five hundred pairs of curtains were assembled, manufactured or rented for the production. Seven thousand beasts of various types were, also, used.

These facts can be played up big in all advertising and exploitation matter by the live exhibitor.

'The Flame of Life'

A Coal Mine Tragedy Released by Universal

BRIEF: An ignorant but noble worker in the coal mines, saves the life of the overseer in a mine disaster which almost consumes her, too, and succeeds in winning the admiration and love of the man.

USING the title, "The Flame of Life" as a catch line you can effect a number of successful exploitation stunts. Arrange with the city or town officials to allow you to place on every traffic sign or at each street crossing a sign which reads: "Drive carefully. 'The Flame of Life' is a privilege bestowed upon pedestrians as well as autoists."

If any charity organization is launching a campaign at this time, make a deal to buy a certain amount of their tickets if they will allow this line to be printed with their advertising material: "'The Flame of Life' is due to all. Give and give 'till it hurts."

Or this unusual scheme might net you good results. Costume a man in uniform with the words, "meter tester" on his cap and coat. Let him go from door to door. When the doorbell is answered have him ask how the gas is working. Then he will hand the person an envelope in which is contained a facsimile gas bill on which is printed: "This is not a gas bill. It is an announcement that 'The Flame of Life' opens at the..... Theatre (date). This stunt is sure to get the housewives talking.

A good way to attract the eye is to arrange to burn four or five street torches such as are used for political campaigns, on the block on which your theatre is located. These flares are visible from a great distance and will bring a large number of the curious to your door.

Still another means of getting newspaper publicity is this: announce in your ads that anyone, man, woman, or child, bringing a bucket of coal to the theatre will be admitted free. The coal is to be distributed to the poor by you. This will not only secure for you a most gratifying amount of good will in the community, but will probably secure front page space in the newspapers as a feature story.

And in addition to this you are opening another avenue of exploitation, namely a tie-up with the coal dealer who may chance to be in your neighborhood. With the publicity your picture will be getting from the charity coal idea, signs and pictures in his window linking up his coal and the name of your picture, will probably be very beneficial to him, and of course, to you.

'The Law and The Woman'

Murder Mystery Released by Paramount

BRIEF: A newly married man who has told his wife all about his past relations with a professional vamp, is held for the murder of his ward who claimed to be married to the woman. The vamp has been responsible for his conviction and he is to be executed. His wife's faith in him never wavers and finally on the day of the execution she obtains his exoneration by means of a confession from the vamp, who is the real murderer.

A FINE, big court trial is the big feature of the entire picture. All evidence leads to it, and from it, which is the reason why you should single it out and harp on it and in the process clean up some real fine returns as has been done by numerous other showmen.

In the first place make use of Betty Compson's popularity among movie fans and stress the fine caliber of the rest of the cast to the limit.

There is a fine collection of large lobby photos which, if used with the gilt frames, which are available, will make a very attractive lobby effect.

Letters and postcards carrying the message that the picture is to appear soon at your theatre may be had at the exchanges and should prove valuable for use in connection with your mailing list. Or they might just be distributed as handbills or heralds and in that way they will get wide circulation in the neighborhood.

Titles taken from the picture may well be utilized as catchlines on printed posters which you can place in store windows or nail on billboards and the like. If you think something a bit more elaborate would appeal arrange to have a scene from the picture appear on the poster and have the different catch lines as captions.

The title suggests newspaper feature stories in the form of debates relative to woman's place in the government, her ability as a law-maker, the advisability of having women on the jury, and other such pertinent subjects. This sort of thing always gets a rise out of the public and you can work right in with it by running ads on the same page as that on which the articles appear. You might even announce that you will run some of the more pertinent arguments on the screen before the showing of the picture. This you can easily accomplish by the use of slides made for the purpose.

'The Flirt'

Flapper Story Released by Universal

BRIEF: The pretty, pampered daughter of a rich business man who has no time for his family, is interested only in her own pleasure. When financial disaster descends upon the family she can do nothing to help until the near tragedy of a prison sentence for her father brings her to a realization of what she has done and serves to make her a level headed woman who finds happiness with the man who has always loved her.

IN portraying the life of a frivolous girl who has never been made to shoulder any responsibility, Booth Tarkington has again shown his intimate knowledge of youth and his appreciation for their emotions and shortcomings. And he has done it so well that he has succeeded in making a motion picture with tremendous drawing power out of "The Flirt!"

The picture might almost be said to have a universal appeal which has manifested itself in the reception it has received from audiences all over the country. Houses that had planned only a three days run, found that public demand compelled them to run it for two or three weeks. The Columbia Theatre in Seattle and the Randolph in Chicago did a record business on the picture for practically every performance of the three weeks run. That's pretty good evidence of its powers of attraction, don't you think?

When you are planning for exploitation first consider the value of playing up Booth Tarkington's name. In conjunction with this you should arrange for the sale of the special motion picture edition of the book, using scenes from the picture to put the sale across.

To interest the kids in the film, play up the name of Buddy Messenger who takes the part of the "kid brother" who is always "listening in." If you can arrange it you might get small buttons with Buddy Messenger's picture on them and distribute them to the kids. You may be sure they will get wide circulation.

You might also arrange a tie-up with some automobile agency. Get the best looking car you can and get a pretty girl, well dressed, to ride with the driver who should be a good looking young fellow. The brighter the color of the car, the more attention it will attract. On the windshield should be a neatly lettered sign reading: "This is the car 'The Flirt' wanted. Do you blame her?"

This stunt should arouse profitable interest.

The Exhibitors Round Table

Seattle Consolidation Rumored

Seattle's Film Row was the scene of many rumors concerning the reported consolidation of a number of Portland suburban exhibitors, who are said to have pooled their interests, and agreed on a profit-sharing basis. Bookings will probably be arranged by one man. Exhibitors mentioned in the deal are: W. E. Graeper, Bob White, Stephen Parker, Edward Fautz, G. O. Garrison, W. E. Tibbitts, Mr. McCreedy and Mr. Phillips. If this list is correct the following houses will figure in the consolidation: Union Avenue, Tivoli, Bob White, Alhambra, Echo, Laurelhurst, Highway, Multnomah and Gay.

Selznick Man Joins Associated

Paul R. Aust, manager for Selznick in Seattle, has resigned to become division manager of Associated Exhibitors in Seattle, Portland, Butte and Spokane territories. He will have headquarters in Seattle at the Pathe exchange. Mr. Edward Lamb, assistant manager at Selznick, has been promoted to the management of the local exchange. Lamb is a prime favorite and has the distinction of still holding his first position in the motion picture industry. He came to work for the Selznick Company as cashier, two and one-half years ago. His rise has been steady.

KENTUCKY WILL 'SING THEM AGAIN' AT CELEBRATION

Community gatherings in every town in the state for the purpose of singing again the songs they used to sing is to be a feature of the Kentucky 1924 Home Coming celebration set for the month of June.

The programs will be supplied by the "Sing Them Again" series issued by the Educational Films Corporation. There are twelve reels in all, each including three songs and picturization of the scenes and characters and with words fitted in for singing by the audiences.

The celebration committee is looking forward during June to a homeward flight of more than 200,000 exile who were bred in old Kentucky, and with those who never cared to wander from their own firesides joining with the returning pilgrims in the "Sing Them Again" community concerts the town scribes will probably be called upon to record that a pleasant time was had by all.

EDUCATIONAL RELEASES

Six two reel subjects of widely varying nature will form the backbone of Educational's program for May. Two Christie Comedies of differing character will be released during the month, as will be one each of the Hamilton, Tuxedo, Mermaid and Juvenile brands. These two reel subjects will be supported by eight single reel pictures of the Cameo brand, Secrets of Life, Hodge-Podge, Sing Them Again series, Bruce Wilderness Tales and the new Fun Shop series.

STAN LAURAL in "Near Dublin" strikes a new note in comedies. This Pathe picture shows how many different uses can be made of bricks not including building purposes. Below is the hero in jail.

SHORTS COMING INTO THEIR OWN

THE first concrete results of E. W. Hammons' recently expressed statement that the American public would support theatres devoted to the exclusive showing of short subjects, are contained in an announcement from the Sedalia, Mo., "Democrat" to the effect that the Liberty Theatre of that city would inaugurate a novelty program for its Saturday and Sunday show, consisting of comedy and novelty subjects, all in short length.

The Evening Sun, of Baltimore, has also endorsed the idea in an article running over a full column in length.

"It seems to us," writes "Q. E. D.," their motion picture editor, "that a theatre like this would prove a gold-mine, not only in Baltimore but anywhere." The people who like Short Subjects would prove faithful patrons to such a theatre. The best comedies and news weeklies could always be found there. The orchestra should play all the time and not turn over the comedy to the organ, as it does everywhere these days. With the short subjects all corralled at this house, the other theatres could show feature pictures and nothing else. We would certainly like to see someone build just such a theatre in Baltimore. What do you think of it?"

'THE JUNIOR PARTNER'

Educational!

2 reels

This Juvenile Comedy is full of fun and the kids keep the action and humor going fast from beginning to end. They devote most of their time to thinking up novel schemes for bringing on nervous prostration to the adults of their community and that they do not succeed entirely is through no fault of theirs.

They are given ample opportunity to get in their good work in the country grocery store. Their fertile minds work overtime and some of the stunts they pull off bring roars of laughter, proving that a joke on another person is worthy of a laugh.

The youngsters do their best to ruin trade in the village store. There are tricks hidden in every corner and their pranks are so numerous one is kept on edge in order to miss none of them. A trick stairway offers unlimited amusement and is used to good advantage.

This comedy, although it has many of the pie throwing traits, is clever and entertaining. It will make a good addition to your program.

'THE BONEHEAD'

Educational

2 reels

Don't miss "Poodles" Hanneford in this Tuxedo Comedy. He is a hit. As a jack of all trades around a theatre he is called upon to do an unlimited number of things. He acts as assistant to the actors and is also chief scene shifter and property man.

The best scene is that of a riding act in which "Poodles" acts as the assistant to the bareback rider. He performs daring stunts that will make your hair curl. He is an accomplished rider and his comedy in this particular scene is excellent.

The story deals with a roughneck theatrical manager who decides to rob the theatre safe. He takes the bareback rider into his confidence and after cracking the safe they escape on a horse. "Poodles" comes to the rescue and after a good chase scene he captures the robbers and wins his sweetie.

STAN registers an escape from the jail. He is shown below preparing for the flight. The village constable is afflicted with contrary eyes and Stan takes advantage of the fact to make his escape.

IN THE GOOD OLD DAYS

You can't imagine what good actors monkeys are until you have seen Pathe's "North of 50-50." Above is a bar-room scene from the picture. The bartender passes out the hard drinks to his customers.

'TAXI, TAXI'

Universal

2 reels

You don't know what can be done with a taxi until you have seen Harry McCoy and his partner, Al, at the wheels of two cabs. They accept the jobs to keep the wolf from the door and in order to discourage competition they perform all sorts of tricks to make life unpleasant for competing taxi drivers.

They aim their stuff against a fat taxi driver and try to ruin his business. They discourage patrons entering his cab and once they enter, life is made so unpleasant for them they are glad to get out and patronize the cab of Harry or his partner.

They become too confident, however, and are finally tripped up and forced to beat a hasty retreat.

This is one of McCoy's best pictures. It is clean and fast moving. Many new tricks are brought to play that make this comedy a hum dinger. McCoy has a large following and the use of his name will aid in pulling patrons.

You should book this picture.

'THE BULL TOSSER'

Universal

2 reels

You will like this two reel Western comedy. Pete Morrison is good and he is ably supported by a fine cast. The story is coherent and runs along very smoothly. There is a delightful absence of gun play and heaps of good riding.

Pete has that very bad habit of enumerating his wonderful exploits with little regard for the truth. He never fails to give himself the best of every narrative.

His sweetheart tries to teach him a lesson by humiliating him but Pete always comes up smiling. In order to arouse Pete's jealousy she arranges a picnic with a circuit rider and Pete is forced to drive the wagon to the picnic grounds and is not permitted to join the party.

A bad man arrives on the scene and kidnaps the girl but Pete makes a spectacular bareback ride and rescue his sweetie and all ends well.

In the scene where Pete is driving the couple to the picnic grounds there is a good display of driving. The wagon is sent over the rough road and across fields and every minute it looks as though the vehicle will be dashed to pieces but Morrison handles the reins to perfection.

This is a good picture and your patrons will like it. It is safe booking for any program.

PATHE REVIEW

Pathe

1 reel

This is an interesting series of short shots of various subjects. There is a display of millinery that will appeal to women theatre patrons. The models are easy to gaze upon and the hats are the latest creations from Paris.

"Floating Assets" shows the manner of acquiring land in Mexico. The farmers live along canals and the land is made up of floating islands. When an addition to the farm is required the owner takes his boat upstream and tows home a few acres. It is interesting.

"The Story of Gold Leaf" lets the audience in on the secret of preparing gold leaf for its use in sign painting. The gold is poured in bars and rolled to the thickness of a thousandth of an inch. The last process of reducing the gold is accomplished by hand. Men beat the gold with heavy hammers until it is transparent.

"The Prize of Spain" is a color sketch of Granada. It shows the picturesque types of women in native costume, and some excellent panorama views of the ancient city.

This reel is very good and will make a popular filler.

'WHEN WINTER COMES'

Pathe

1 reel

Paul Terry does his cartoon stuff with good effect. He shows all manner of winter sports with the usual cat, mice, and dog characters. The sled riding and ice boating are cleverly done and one can almost feel the breeze created as the characters whizz by.

This picture is up to Terry's usual high standard and you are safe in booking it. It is sure to please.

'NEAR DUBLIN'

Pathe

2 reels

Stan Laurel makes things hum in this unusual comedy. The scene is an Irish village and great stress is laid on the fighting instincts of the Irish men, women and children, and bricks and clubs are as thick as taxis on Broadway. Many new stunts are introduced that make this picture one of Laurel's best.

Stan is a postman in the village and is in love with the belle of the town. His rival is a brick manufacturer, who makes bricks for both building and social purposes. Stan is thrown into jail on a trumped up charge but escapes and in a battle with his rival he is knocked out by a rap on the head. The villain is jailed and Stan wins the lady.

The scene at the barn dance is cleverly arranged and it shows what a delightful fight can be arranged with the proper setting. It is wonderful in how many different ways a brick can be used as a weapon.

The court scene is also good and brings many laughs. It is full of good clean action and funny situations.

Laurel has made some good comedies but this is by far his best. It is away from the usual run of slap-stick and makes one sit up and take notice. It will appeal to any audience. It is safe booking for any program.

* * *

'NORTH OF 50-50'

Pathe

1 reel

This is a Hal Roach comedy in which monkeys are performers in a miniature village. The story deals with the Northwest Mounted Police and is a satire on the Northwest thrillers. There is gunplay and horsemanship. The monkeys do everything but talk. Their antics are very, very funny.

There is a bad-man who enters a miniature house and robs a safe. He is trailed to the dance hall by a mounted policeman. Gunplay takes place in the room in which are dancers and drinkers who are thrown into consternation. The bad man escapes and seeks refuge at the home of his sweetie. She hides him in the attic but he is discovered by the policeman and is killed in a dual.

This is the second of Hal Roach's "Monkey Doo Dads" and if the series can continue as good as its start it will prove exceptionally popular. It is almost unbelievable the tricks these monkeys can perform. They almost make one forget that they are not human.

This comedy will please and you will make no mistake in booking it.

* * *

'THE PIGSKIN HERO'

Universal

1 reel

There is little to recommend this comedy. Most of the reel is devoted to showing Eddy Lyons expanding his chest and tearing the furniture to pieces. There is no plot and it is hard to make sense of the affair. It is understood that Eddy is a "ringer" for a local football team but is tied to a bed by the rivals. Lee Moran appears on the scene and thinking football uniforms are the latest things in sheik attire he arrays himself in one and is mistaken for the "ringer."

Lee appears on the football field and is forced to play. He doesn't know anything about the game and finally gets the ball and runs out of the enclosed field and is tackled by Eddy who has made his escape. That's all there is to it.

This one will not stand alone. It is very ordinary.

SHOWMANSHIP

Take Your Business Paper Into Partnership

It Will Prove a Real Partner—Rendering Invaluable Service.

You Will Strike Oil In Its Columns

AN important item in the life of the showman is his contact with the world in which he is interested—the world of showmanship. From it he can glean much which will be of benefit if he has established the proper contact. Gold is a medium of exchange, so is the press. The latter is most valuable of all, as it constitutes a medium for the exchange of ideas—thought. For you Exhibitors Trade Review attains the pinnacle of importance as it is a medium for the exchange of ideas in which you are vitally interested. Ideas regarding the motion picture industry and showmanship in all its various ramifications. You require advice, suggestions, information, criticism, news and a wide variety of things too numerous to set down. Your business paper offers you its best thought in each case. It strives to meet your requirements—and should it fail to do so it fails also to provide itself with what the French call a “raison d’etre”—an excuse for existing. And without a reason for living it naturally dies. Its life depends upon its fulfillment of your requirements.

Were you a jockey riding for the first time over an unfamiliar steeplechase course you would be guided by the advice and experience of one who had had a leg up on many a mount over those particular jumps. If he told you to watch carefully at the third hurdle, you would do so. If his advice referred to a tricky water jump you would heed it. In no case would you disregard his words and only after coming several croppers finally arrive at the conclusion that it was wise to listen and learn. In a word, where you could profit by the experience of others you would wisely avoid the much touted “school of hard knocks.”

Thus a business paper does for you what you cannot do for yourself. A staff of reporters, trained experts in the art of gathering and disseminating news, place before you a careful selection of news pertinent to your needs. Men who have spent years in the study of “what the public wants” give you box office low downs on every screen offering great or small. Editors set forth thought on great issues in your industry, and strive always to better conditions for you. Students of Showmanship place their ideas before you for approval. From the four quarters of the country, and from beyond the sea come tales of what certain advertising aids or exploitation ideas have accomplished for others—this information is served up to you in capsule form so you may profit by their experiences.

IN turning to account the experiences of others, Man shows his superiority over the remainder of the animal kingdom. Had he failed to do so we would still be crouching in the dismal darkness of stone-age caverns. Not one whit of advancement can be made unless we utilize the experience of those who have preceded us and profit by what they have proven. Each generation of animals has to learn everything for itself, the torch of experience is not passed on but dies with the individual, therefore they remain inferior to Man. So it is with us. Those who add to their stride through the seven-league-boot experience of others make rapid progress toward the goal.

It has been said that one receives in exact ratio to what he gives. That what

Lobbyology

A Nugget—Not a Pill

Do you treat your business paper like a step-child? Do you take it as you “take” medicine? If so you are working up one good point for a story on “Why Showmen Fail.”

Take a little trip through every page of your trade paper. Careful, expert thought has been given every paragraph, and every column contains ideas made-to-order for application to your business.

Industrial leaders have always time to learn something new about their business and its problems. Prosperity greets the man who avails himself of knowledge acquired by others—who takes his trade paper into partnership.

you get out of life may be measured exactly by what you put in it. May this not also apply to your relation with your trade paper?

Perhaps you are one of those progressive fellowship-of-man chaps who is only too happy to let your brother exhibitor profit by some stunt you have originated, or some inspirational idea that flashed across your mental horizon. If so, congratulations. If not, stop and think how much better it would be if you would lend your co-operation, if you would do your bit toward building up through your paper a mart for the exchange of exhibitors’ ideas. You must not expect to take all and give nothing. It is really a moral obligation on your part to tell your brother exhibitors about what you have done to get a line formed outside your box office. They tell you many a good stunt through Exhibitors Trade Review columns, and as men do after putting over a good one, they sit back, light a cigar and say—“Now you tell one.”

Your business paper, Exhibitors Trade Review, is all that its name purports. It is a paper for the Exhibitor. Your paper. Next to you, yourself, it is of all agencies most vitally interested in your welfare. It has your interests and the interests of your ventures in showmanship right under its vest—next to its heart. It is sitting up nights thinking of ways to help you achieve the twentieth century alchemy of extracting gold from celluloid. If you had an employee who demonstrated half the interest in your welfare what would you do? He would certainly be the white haired boy with you; you’d take him into partnership. Why not do so with your business paper? Make it your confidant, your advisor, your friend. It will always be happy to learn of your triumphs; will help you overcome your troubles; will rejoice in your joys and aid you in avoiding woes. In your trade journal you have a partner which is the most important asset in your business.

IN our industry, especially a business paper partner is desirable—essential. It observes from the center of the circle and not from the outer rim. It steers for you a straight course between the Scylla of vested interests and the Charibdis of that element which, swayed by self interest, would mislead the exhibitor with insincerity. If a picture, or a policy, is a “blank cartridge” it says so. Where praise is due, it is given. Each and every proposition is viewed through your eyes. Its effect on you is considered, its possible benefits to you weighed, its advantages or disadvantages to the industry of which you are the main spring are carefully investigated. Then, after considering your case, consulting the authorities, studying the situation from all angles, as a lawyer gives you his advice, your trade paper forms its policy for your benefit, in protection of your interests, and adheres to that policy through hell and high water so long as there is a chance to squeeze one small drop of advantage for you from the idea.

Should you treat it like a step-child or a favorite son—a partner? If you were seeking a preferential appointment and had a group of friends on the inside who were working for your welfare, you would most certainly hold them tight in an unbreakable embrace. Your paper is in the center of the maelstrom. It hears and sees the wheels of the motion picture industry revolving, and it faithfully transcribes to you how and why the machinery is operating, remedies defects, suggests improvements, exposes flaws, and labors conscientiously and earnestly day in and day out to better conditions for you—to secure for you an appointment to a high place in successful showmanship. Take your business paper into partnership, and you will have the finest and most faithful of business associates pulling with you shoulder to shoulder with every ounce of its ability.

HERE is a window worthy of a great tie-up. It shows how Manager J. J. Kelly, of the Elmwood Theatre, Penn Yan, N. Y., utilized the "Humming Bird Hosiery" tie-up in the Town Dry Goods Company windows when he played Paramount's "The Humming Bird," starring Gloria Swanson.

A COUPLE of letters and a post card or so comprised Harry Reichenbach's mail at Famous Players following the publication of his teaser ads in New York papers on Paramount's "Triumph." Only 32,000 replies in forty-eight hours. Harry was disappointed.

Putting a Punch In Windows

By JOHN M. PALMER

President Palmer Advertising Service, Specialists in National Window Display Advertising

WINDOW DISPLAYS, logically planned and executed in well located retail stores, can be developed into one of the most effective forms of advertising for the progressive distributor. Like many other industries, the moving picture field is just waking up to the possibilities and economy of colorful window advertising when compared with other methods of publicity.

As soon as possible, however, the industry should put its plans for windows on a sound, well planned basis if there is to be any permanence to the idea. The experimental stage can be overcome at once and the "tie-up" window should be professional and forceful instead of cheap and hodge-podge-like. It must be remembered that there is only one reason why a movie tie-up is allowed to appear in a merchant's window. It must help him sell goods. He is not a philanthropist turning his window over to you for your benefit. The merchant can't possibly make a profit on the picture he helps to advertise—he doesn't sell tickets at a profit and you'll find that it's practically of no avail to offer him cash in return for his window, although perhaps occasionally the courtesy of a pass might be appreciated. What the merchant does want above everything else in return for his window is something that will help him sell his goods.

His window is as valuable to him as your very screen to you. It's his show place—his chance to stop and hold the attention of the passing crowd. He must get results from it. Therefore, in planning and executing "tie-ups," remember it is the merchant's window you want—that you must get your publicity through making his own window more valuable to him.

The drug stores offer the most advantageous facilities of the window tie-up, because their owners are better trained window men than any other class of retailers and because there are many drug stores in every city which give a splendid chance for the duplication of windows and a multiplicity of displays. Likewise, the drug manufacturers have advanced thought regarding display work since they have the proper class of retailers to work them out, and many perfumes, soaps, cosmetics offer excellent "tie-ups" with pictures and film stars.

Of course there are many other classes of tie-ups which will be most carefully developed for your benefit and explained to you through columns of this journal. Clothing, haberdashery, styles, all sorts of wearing apparel, will constantly offer the manufacturer excellent tie-ups, and through the national chain of distributors a method of obtaining timely windows will mean that such campaigns will be backed up strongly by the manufacturer and that he will furnish the best class of display material for the retailer.

THE ideal tie-up, a number of which are being developed at the present time is that which includes the manufacturer furnishing fine new display material who, through the tie-up system, has developed a plan to enter the windows of five or ten thousand drug stores, timing these windows so they will appear in the various cities of the country at the time when the picture is being shown in these cities. Such a campaign, because of the drawing power of the windows, will attract the passerby, who will not only receive a strong selling message regarding the advertised product for sale at that store, but will also remind him that the picture is playing at your theatre and that if he has not seen it he is missing a good bet. Such a campaign will work out to the advantage of the manufacturer, retailer, and the moving picture exhibitor. Although at the present time, the idea of tie-ups on a national scale is in its infancy, it is indeed a husky infant, and the best-experienced organizations in the country on windows are working out solutions to the various problems presented.

You will be interested in knowing that the Palmer Advertising Service, Inc., of New York City, is giving its best attention to the work, right along with the experts on EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW National Tie-Up Section. Palmer Advertising Service has successfully created window campaigns for a large number of the best known advertisers and, in addition to owning its own modern lithographic plant, it has window display organizations in the fifty largest cities, which actually install complete retail windows for manufacturers.

THIS is a service which will be explained more definitely in a later article, for it is one of the strong plans which national manufacturers will readily seize upon as the general tie-up system develops. The success of the whole tie-up system, which is planned to be of the greatest benefit to the individual exhibitor, will be no stronger than its weakest link therefore, it will be up to the exhibitor in every instance to do everything within his power to strengthen the system by wholehearted industrious co-operation. The system is planned—do your share.

NOVEL INVITATIONS ISSUED FOR 'CHECHAHCOS'

A stalwart young woman garbed in furs and leading a gigantic malamut dog stalked into the various newspaper offices this week and deposited upon the desk of the editor a square green box and a huge envelope.

The envelope contained an artistically printed invitation to a special society-press preview of the Alaskan scenic drama "Chechahcos," to be held in the Grand ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton, with supper and dancing in the Crystal ballroom to follow. Paul Whiteman's orchestra will supply melody.

The box contained an Alaskan nugget carefully packed, and a card reading: "A little nugget souvenir from the land where "The Chechahcos" was filmed, with the compliments of Arthur S. Kane, President of Associated Exhibitors."

James Bradford is master of ceremonies for the Ritz affair, and is going to stage an elaborate presentation.

The picture itself is causing considerable comment as it is the first to be filmed in Alaska. It is understood that there are some wonderful scenic shots of the land of perpetual snow, as well as close views of glaciers crashing down, and the Spring break up of the ice in the wild waters of the Yukon. The film faithfully depicts life in the far north during the hectic days when soda clerks and stevedores all rushed through the Chilcoot Pass in answer to the stirring summons of glittering gold.

WHAT'S EXPLOITABLE IN YOUR TOWN?

Lodi, Cal.—Mrs. Bert Kelly, aged ninety-two, appealed to the police here to help find her runaway boy Eddie, aged fifty-two. "I can't understand why Eddie ran away," she said, "unless it was because I told him I was going to bob my hair. It seemed to upset him terribly."

EXPLOITATION—The Lodi exhibitor has a dozen pictures to draw from that will give him a close tie-up with the episode of Eddie, the youth whom bobbed hair licked. Wherever Eddie has flown, its a cinch he'll read the news from the old home town, for every bad boy craves to know what the home folks are saying about his wildness. So the exhibitor can run his ad as a direct appeal to Eddie's better self, and try to lure him home again. For instance—

PERSONAL—FOR EDDIE KELLY

Then any of the following bits—or some other along the same lines, depending upon the picture being shown;

Come home at once. All will welcome "The Ramblin' Kid."

Remember—"Shattered Faith" can be restored. Come home.

"The Shock" has stirred the town. Come back.

Were you "Driven"? Reconsider. Return. Why "This Freedom"? Come back to Lodi.

Hit home again in time for "The Recoil." Are you "Going East"? No better town on earth than Lodi.

Or any of a thousand others. Bring Eddie home and you'll get a lot of publicity.

WHAT'S EXPLOITABLE IN YOUR TOWN? Tell us—and we'll give you the exploitation.

Luck Wins 'Baby Peggy'

The manager of B. F. Keith's Rivera Theatre, Brooklyn, held a lucky number contest during the engagement of Universal Jewel production "The Darling of New York." Baby Peggy is the star of this feature and a very popular doll has been named in her honor. All those who held a lucky number on their ticket received one of the Baby Peggy dolls. This stunt was inexpensive and created comment among the regular patrons as well as in the local dailies.

'Coast to Coast Kid' Reports

William Quick, the old time circus clown now known as the "Coast to Coast Kid," because of his nation-wide ballyhoo with the "After the Ball" minstrel truck, has sent in a report upon his arrival with the ballyhoo bus at Indianapolis.

Of the 860 theatres that have shown the picture since the exploitation wagon has been traveling, 450 have been able to use the ballyhoo. Nine states have been thoroughly covered, and a great deal of extra newspaper space has been gained.

If the wandering minstrel boys reach Los Angeles on schedule they will have spent more than five months on tour.

'Happiness' for Girls' Clubs

Under the auspices of the Cleveland News, which gave the event daily publicity, Laurette Taylor's new Metro picture, "Happiness" was presented at a special showing to the combined girls' clubs of Cleveland and the organizations affiliated with the Cleveland Girls' Council. The Allen Theatre played "Happiness" immediately afterward, taking quick advantage of the publicity. The Allen management arranged the preview with the News, as it did last year on Miss Taylor's "Peg O' My Heart." Naturally the publicity given by the paper helped to put the picture across.

When "Peg O' My Heart" was presented before the Girls' Clubs last year

many members wrote to Miss Taylor praising the picture with great enthusiasm. When she learned that "Happiness" was going to Cleveland she wrote to the Allen and the News asking that the same privilege be accorded the girls this year.

Taxi Tie-Up Touts 'Maytime'

U. K. Rice, Manager, Auditorium Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C., manipulated a taxi-cab tie-up linked with a rain insurance policy to exploit the Preferred Picture, "Maytime." Through the columns of the newspapers an offer was made to defray expenses of any patrons who attended the theatre in a cab between three and nine o'clock provided it rained.

To cover these taxi-fares the house took out a rain insurance policy. It did not rain, however, and the result was that the wide publicity secured for the picture cost the theatre only half the insurance premium. The taxi-cab company was glad to split expenses on the advertising.

Shapely Figures Attract Patrons

Jack Schreiber, Blackstone Theatre, Detroit, used wax figures effectively in putting over "The Temple of Venus" and "Tea With a Kick." For the former he used a draped figure over the lobby which was movable by means of attached cords. The figure was backed up by a drape through which half a dozen shapely limbs—of wax—protruded. He advertised 1,000 Bathing Beauties.

For the other picture he used a life sized wax image of a good looking girl. She was seated at a post on one side of the lobby, with a wine glass in one hand, and her skirt sufficiently elevated to disclose her—er—ankles. Schreiber says lots of people stopped to look—and then lined up at the box-office.

Sure-Thing Business Booster

The public library motion picture tie-up inaugurated by Ina Brevoort Roberts, publicity director of the Cleveland Public Libraries, is attracting great attention in other cities where the idea is being emulated.

The libraries are in an ideal position to arouse interest in a picture, and in turn many productions create public enthusiasm and a desire to learn more of the time and country depicted. Thus it is that a reciprocal arrangement may be made.

A PRETTY bit of exploitation arranged in London by King George, of First National's publicity staff, upon the occasion of a bus and street car strike in the British capital.

The latest from Cleveland is the tie-up on "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." One throw-away (which is not thrown away) features the program of the Stillman Theatre on one side, and on the reverse side lists a dozen novels and almost as many biographical volumes dealing with "Merrie England" in the time of Dorothy Vernon when Queen Elizabeth reigned. There is also a neat book-mark stressing both library books and the motion picture.

Don't overlook your public library. A tie-up with it will prove invaluable.

Puzzle Packs Playhouse

The Olympia Theatre at Grand Mere, Quebec, staged what it calls a "jumbled letter contest" in connection with a serial it is showing.

The picture is "The Radio King" and without mentioning the name, the manager took all the letters in the title, mixed them well, and offered prizes to the patrons who could guess correctly the picture's name.

So it wouldn't be too hard he intimated that there were three words in the title, and gave some hint as to their character. Out of 700 replies 135 were correct. These were placed in a bag and the first name withdrawn received five dollars in gold; the second, two dollars, the following thirteen one dollar each, and the next twenty-five got passes.

Assistance!

When K. H. Blakely, manager of Memorial Hall, Kingfisher, Okla., showed Associated Exhibitors "The Yankee Consul" under American Legion auspices, he sent a "dispatch" on Western Union blanks to five hundred residents.

It was addressed "Uncle Sam, White House, Washington, D. C.," and signed "Douglas MacLean, Yankee Consul." The message was "Send the Navy Quick. Terrible Danger."

* * *

Now You Tell One

Photoplays adapted from books are enjoying tremendous vogue. For instance, "Cytherea," "The Beloved Vagabond," "Recoil," "If Winter Comes"—you can cite examples as well as we can.

Anyway, the story is that one exhibitor wouldn't book "The Ten Commandments" because he said he hadn't read the novel.

FAN exceptional press-book has just been issued by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan for the proper publicizing of the production "Recoil," partially filmed in France.

A special feature of the window card and the six-column newspaper advertising cut is the reproduction of drawings of the heads of the ten girls selected in the Paris Journal contest for the ten most beautiful young women of Europe to take part in the great ball sequence of the picture. The billboard posters are unusually attractive.

The page of exploitation ideas contains one suggestion for a beauty contest newspaper tie-up in which girls are to compare their measurements with those of Venus de Milo and Betty Blythe who plays the lead. Prizes are awarded to those whose measurements are nearest those of Venus or Betty.

BBRITISH exploiters are apparently pat- terning their efforts more and more along American lines, and are meeting with no mean measure of success.

Word comes that the West End Cinema, London, recently staged a "Classical Foot Competition" in connection with the theatre's showing of "Trilby," the First National picture starring Andree Lafayette.

Trilby, you will remember, was far-famed for her shapely feet, and so is Andree Lafayette. So there was a prize equalling two hundred and fifty dollars offered to the girl who could display the most nearly perfect pedal extremities. There was a flood of contestants, and big crowds came to witness the showing of both feet and picture. A noted sculptor was the judge, and the stunt procured plenty of newspaper space.

THE Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, put over a costume designing contest when it showed Metro's "The French Doll." The competition was tied-up with the Cincinnati Times-Star and got big publicity. Prizes ranging from ten to twenty-five dollars in gold were distributed and the final winners were selected by the theatre's patrons.

Additional interest was created by the fact that the winning designs were submitted to Mae Murray, the picture's star, and if she selects any of them for her personal use, the creator of the gown idea will be richly remunerated.

HUSTLER by name and hustler by nature is the manager of the Capitol Theatre at Sacramento, California. When he showed First National's "Twenty-One" he got a lot of newspaper space at very small cost.

The stunt was a revue tie-up with the Nonpareil Fashion Shop. The shop put on a show at the theatre in which "twenty-one" very much alive models were featured. The shop did all the advertising, announcing the theatre's program and including everything that M. B. Hustler himself would have included had he written the copy. And maybe he even did that.

FOLLOWING the tremendous success of the "Humming Bird" hosiery tie-up on the Paramount picture of that name, two similar aids have been arranged for Cecil B. De Mille's current production "Triumph."

The first is a tie-up with the nationally known "Triumph" Hosiery Mills, supplying two thousand dealers. The mills will give three pairs of the finest grade hose as a

FRANK ROBSON, manager of the Empress Theatre, Edmonton, Canada, evidently believes that a few hundred heads are better than one. He got a lot of publicity and some new ideas through a competition titled "What I Would Do Were I Manager of the Empress Theatre." A five dollar prize was the incentive to those who thought they could run the theatre better than Frank.

Other five dollar prizes were offered for the best hundred word review of the theatre's current attraction.

THE new song hit from the Music Box Review, entitled "What'll I Do," will be tied-up with the Frank Woods production "What Shall I Do" starring Dorothy Mackaill.

The Irving Berlin melody while only five weeks old has already become immensely popular and a special title page for it, showing stills from the picture, is being rushed through in time to be ready for the exploitation of the picture at its release date, May 11.

Special re-prints of the cover page for window display purposes will be sent out by the music publishers to all of their dealers and special advertising will announce the number as the theme song of the motion picture and the hit of the New York Music Box Review.

The popularity of this melody is indicated by the fact that Rothafel featured it at the Capitol Theatre last week in a special stage setting with two vocal artists.

THE same reason that causes some folks to prove to themselves that "Wet Paint" is really wet, made a lot of people peer into a barrel labeled "Live Snakes. Danger. Do Not Look Into the Barrel," which recently stood in front of Manager S. C. McGregor's Theatre in Stamford, N. Y.

Those who did not follow instructions craned their necks to learn that Mary Pickford was playing in "Rosita" for the next few days.

THE suggestion to "Make Your Home the Enchanted Cottage" was adopted by merchants of East Liberty during the run of the First National picture at the Liberty Theatre. The handsome art border prepared by First National's art department for a page truck or double truck was brought into play as a border. The heading was the one outlined above.

Space at the top of the page was used by the Liberty Theatre but the rest of the page consisted of advertising copy by merchants and manufacturers dealing in household supplies. The range ran from porch box flowers and ice cream to paint and radios.

SEVEN MONEY GETTING WINDOW TIE-UPS ON 'RECOIL'

TWENTY-FOUR millions of gold-en dollars; the ten most beautiful women in Europe; one American girl fairer than the fairest of these; a box full of jewels worth a Rajah's ransom; wild nights at Deauville, passion's playground; love and license; bigamy and blackmail; drugs and dregs—these are a few of the things that figure in "Recoil." And "Recoil" is the film specially selected as this week's National Tie-Up picture.

"Recoil!" Repeat it. Doesn't the very title arouse your curiosity? Isn't there somehow a thrill to it? A suggestion of horror? A thought of dire retribution—of the throbbing echo of the drums of fate—omnipresent and relentless?

A Tale of Blood and Gold

In a story colored with blood and gold Rex Beach told a tale of mad adventure and terrible revenge. Director T. Hayes Hunter transferred it to celluloid for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, and EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW has now arranged a series of National Tie-Ups which will publicize the picture to your patrons through many windows.

The blonde beauty of Betty Blythe, the "Queen of Sheba" girl, will fascinate your audience as it does the multi-millionaire played by Mahlon Hamilton. And in Mahlon Hamilton you have a star who comes as near as a man may to being a "matinee idol" and still retain his self respect and the admiration of men. How they'll hate the drug-fiend villain, ably portrayed by Clive Brook. And—oh, boy—what a beating-up he draws at the hands of Hamilton!

Fountains of Wine

Imagine an affair where champagne flows from fountains. Those are the kind of "parties" the "Recoil" hero gives to the ten wonderful women with his $24,000,000. At one of these he meets the eleventh woman—the penniless American girl who "horns in" uninvited in order to eat. That very night he marries her. Speed? We'll say so! And that's a sample of the action through every sequence. He literally loads her with jewels. His pulsing passion for her is tremendous—overpowering. Yet what does she do—this New York pauper who a few days before had been heating Heinz's in a tawdry furnished room? In a mad moment she leaves luxury to fly with a fascinating waster—a polished crook, whose very name is not his own. But she paid.

Retribution

In China a debtor is chained to his creditor until he pays—and sometimes a killer is tied to the corpse of his victim. Through his pal, an international detective, the heart-broken millionaire fixes things so that the blonde bride whom he had raised to affluence is tied inexorably to the man with whom she eloped—and whom she comes to hate even more than he hates her. Some revenge—tremendous—devastating—it almost wrecks them all. But in the end comes the calmness that follows the storm of passion. Villain number one slays one of the minor malefactors, and is left to face a stony justice. The harassed girl finds refuge and peace in the arms of her forgiving lover-husband—and what is left of the $24,000,000.

Winner Windows

That's the picture. It offers ample opportunity for tie-ups in the windows of your city. National advertisers "sold" on the value of window displays as mediums of exploitation are working with you on "Recoil." Every window is an additional lobby for you, and each extension to your lobby will point the way to your box-office.

And this extraordinary exhibitor service is yours for the asking. No expense is entailed—no fees—no layout of cash in any way whatsoever. It is necessary only to clip the coupon and immediately the well-oiled machinery of the National Tie-Up idea starts rolling up the box-office score for you.

Exhibitors Enthusiastic

Exhibitors everywhere are enthusiastic. This new service has gone across with a bang. Astute showmen immediately recognized the fact that in National Tie-Up window displays they were presented with exploitation opportunities never before approached in effectiveness. They were quick to take advantage of a chance to benefit by big national advertising—free. The millenium has arrived. Here, in this section, each week, you will receive something for nothing. And that something is not a mere rambling suggestion. It is a concrete, constructive exploitation service, that will actually focus more public attention on your theatre and your attraction than you have been able to draw with any publicity idea previously employed. You cannot afford to ignore a showmanship service MANAGER GOLDSTEIN, Clinton Theatre, New York City, was the first of many wide awake showmen to grasp the great exploitation opportunities offered through National Tie-Up window displays.

"Beau Brummel" was booked to appear at the Clinton within a few days, but the national advertisers tied-up with the picture eleven window displays which were immediately arranged.

Mr. Goldstein says this is the most wonderful publicity plan ever promulgated, and broadcasts to every fellow exhibitor: "Come on in the water's fine!"

which will prove its value if once tried out.

Every time you book a National Tie-Up picture and clip the coupon, you guarantee success to your box-office by automatically securing an array of window displays. With no cost other than that of the stamp necessary to carry the coupon to EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, you secure the whole-hearted support of an imposing line-up of national manufacturers of nationally advertised products. The clipped coupon will bring you a selection of smashing big window displays which will all tout your attraction. Not merely one organization—but a half dozen million dollar outfits will be working for you. Your theatre is bound to benefit by the powerful pressure brought to bear on the buying public through costly campaigns of publicity.

Co-operative Advertising

Turn to page forty-nine and give the once over to a scheme whereby your tie-up partners may secure what amounts to a full page smash in the newspapers for a fraction of the cost. With attention attracted to your theatre and to their products through many windows a full page combination ad will work wonders for all of you. There will be no difficulty in securing the co-operation of your local dealers in this regard. They are shrewd business men or they would not be handling the national products with which the picture is tied-up. They will visualize in a moment the advantages to be gained.

On that page you will also find the "Recoil" ballot. In order to secure the benefits to be derived from the National Tie-Up window displays it is essential that you let us know what tie-ups you prefer. We also request that you advise us as to how we may improve the section, and make the plan still more effective for you.

This is your part of the scheme. Clip the coupon. There is no charge. This is merely one more exhibitor service made available to you through the efforts of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW in your behalf.

Here They Are

"Recoil" is essentially a beauty-picture. Its theme is built about feminine fairness. The central character is Betty Blythe, and the ten most beautiful women in Europe are featured. Therefore this week's National Tie-Ups were chosen with a thought to feminine appeal. Each of them holds an irresistible buying urge, and will create one for "Recoil" which will make your box-office line resemble the gate at the home grounds when the home team's biggest game is scheduled.

Onyx Hosiery

First you have "Onyx" hosiery. This trade name is ever on the lips of American womanhood, just as the product so that every woman in your town may have the tint of hair she most admires in Europe's ten Venuses. The girls will buy "Inecto" and they'll see "Recoil."

Chinwah Products

From Paris, the laboratory of beautifying daintiness, came rumors of a wonderful creation of fragrance. This scent was named "Chinwah." It is your third tie-up. Through Roxtan, Inc., of Paris and New York, you get a window display of all the "Chinwah" toilet preparations put up with subtle smartness of distinctive Parisian packaging.

Deltah Pearls

And there is the "Deltah" Pearl tie-up. Wondrous jewels breathing the mysterious charm of the Orient. Pearls are ever fascinating. Tie-up the treasures so lavishly displayed in "Recoil" with the ravishing beauty of "Deltah," and you will line 'em up in front of this window—and your box-office.

Boncilla Beautifier

A "Boncilla Massage" is as popular in the barber shop as it is in the beauty parlor. It is a nationally advertised face-fixer universally recognized. And in "Recoil," there is a shot of Clive Brook, who plays the adventurous villain, being massaged with the beautifier. Thus "Boncilla" is tied-up with the picture in an appeal to both men and women.

Venida Hair Nets

"Venida Hair Nets," the ones "that rule the waves" because of their excellence and extensive national advertising, are your sixth partner in the exploitation of "Recoil." In addition to the buying urge a "Venida" window will create, "Venida" stages a special contest for you with prizes totaling almost $300—and a premium of three dollars for every 8x10 window photograph submitted. Details of the contest appear on another page.

Nemo Corsets

"Nemo" corsets are advertised and known wherever women care to have beautiful figures. This tie-up makes the seventh on "Recoil," and it gets across marvelously well with the beautiful stills of more beautiful women with which you will combine it in a smashing fine window display.

BETTY BLYTHE AND EUROPE'S TEN WONDER-WOMEN

Here are the eleven wonders of the world gathered together in France by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan for the filming of "Recoil." Your National Tie-Up window displays featuring these beautiful women with the nationally advertised products listed will block traffic at the dealers' windows.

herself is always on her legs. Picture the sheer silkiness of "Onyx" displayed in a window together with stills of Betty Blythe—stills displaying sufficient of her shapeliness to convince the most skeptical that the blonde star approves and wears "Onyx."

STRONG SELLING APPEAL IN PEARLS TIE-UP

Nationally Advertised Deltah Pearls to Exploit 'Recoil'

SHOWMEN playing the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan picturization of Rex Beach's famous story, "Recoil" are offered a splendid opportunity for free high-power advertising and exploitation in the tie-ups offered by L. Heller and Son, Inc., who make and distribute the nationally advertised Deltah Pearls.

It takes imagination of the barest fundamental order to visualize the appeal and artistic pulling power of a window display featuring Betty Blythe, the golden-haired screen beauty, who is seen in the principal role in "Recoil" with a necklace of creme-tinted pearls around her lovely neck.

Rosie O'Grady and the Governor's Lady are mutually as one in their admiration for the gems of the tropical seas. And therein lies the great drawing power of the window display on pearls which embraces a free advertisement for the exhibitor playing the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan attraction.

One pictures the effect of such a window almost to a certainty. Mary, May or Margaret, passes by Smith's jewelry window. Ah, the great feminine impulse halts her in her tracks as she catches the rose-colored tones of exquisitely strung pearls. She admires them longingly, and then catches the further enhancement of their appeal as they appear on the neck of Betty Blythe, who is appearing that week in "Recoil," at a local theatre. Result, a potential patron for the theatre in question.

From this alone, it would seem that showmen should need little urging to step aboard this splendid national tie-up and avail themselves of the many advantages it offers them.

The Eleven Beautiful Women in 'Recoil'

THERE is no room left for doubt that all the beautiful women in Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's ideal picturization of Rex Beach's great story 'Recoil' were made especially beautiful in the picture by the application of BONCILLA BEAUTIFIER.

And the men as well! Not so much to make them beautiful but to make them feel like new men with that "up and coming" look. Think what that means to you Mr. Showman from the angle of building up new patronage interest.

Interests Every Man and Woman Alike

WHEN you take advantage of a BONCILLA Window Display Tie-Up you are attracting hundreds of new patrons of both sexes. Every "up and doing" man knows what a BONCILLA FACIAL means in a Barber Shop. He knows it makes him feel like a "Go-Getter." If he has ever had one, he knows it is an integral part of the pep formula for men who are Builders of Big Things.

And the women! You cannot over-estimate the interest you can arouse among the feminine fans of the silver sheet. What woman does not know that BONCILLA preparations are superlatively the outstanding beauty steps to healthy elegance.

The guarantee behind the BONCILLA METHOD teaches THAT! Why? Because these seven things are guaranteed as results or her money is refunded:

1. Clear the complexion and give it color.
2. Cleanse and close enlarged pores.
3. Eliminate excess oiliness.
4. Remove blackheads and pimples.
5. Lift out the lines.
6. Rebuild drooping facial tissues and muscles.
7. Make the skin soft and smooth.

ONYX HOSIERY LINKED WITH 'RECOIL'

Famous Footwear Offers Windows to Alert Showman

PERSONS looking for tie-ups of a national character could hardly find one with a name that means more to the man on the street, then the reading public and the country at large than the word "Onyx."

The very word "Onyx" conjures up visions of a young good looking lady with a shapely foot displaying the well-fitting hose. Or as seen in myriads of sign-boards, subway trains, trolley cars and direct-mail booklets, a young lady at a counter, while a sales girl lays out several pairs of stockings of varied description, for the choice of the fair prospective-purchaser in question.

Suffice to say that the prestige and good will built up through many years of national advertising and trade satisfaction to customers is something that figures as a mighty momentous asset to the party fortunate enough to enlist it in his business behalf. That is exactly what EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW has effected for showmen playing the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan picturization of the famous Rex Beach story, "Recoil."

Through its National Window Tie-Ups project the review is able to offer exhibitors a chance to avail themselves of free window publicity, the value of which can be estimated in the highest terms. Onyx window displays are something that are not passed up with impunity, and something in which business men outside the hosiery industry rarely have the opportunity to figure. But showmen have that very opportunity offered to them now.

A window display in which stills of Betty Blythe, heroine of "Recoil" figure prominently can be well calculated to crystallize the desires of window shoppers into a theatre-ticket buying mood. In other words, the showman can add to the many people who pass his theatre's doors just as many as stop to look at an Onyx Hosiery display and consider this additional quota just so many more potential prospects for his show.

All the showman has to do is to clip the coupon in the Onyx ad, sign his name and send it to the office of the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW. The National Tie-Up Editors will do the rest.

NEMO CORSET DISPLAYS WILL HELP SHOWMEN ON 'RECOIL'

Nemo Corsets, nationally advertised in magazines, window cards, in great poster signs on the high-roads and by-roads of the country and through an infinite variety of other mediums, endorses the fact that the show window is one of the greatest factors in moving the retailer's merchandise off his shelves.

In consequence, this corset concern, whose products are known to and probably worn by more women than any other corset on the market, gives a good deal of time and study to all the considerations of window dress in order to get up displays which are the very quintessence of distinction, artistry, and selling appeal.

With this thought in mind, the showman playing Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's splendid screen version of Rex Beach's "Recoil" has something which should fill him with the highest enthusiasm, so far as acquiring the benefits of free advertising and high-power exploitation is concerned.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, in working out its National Tie-Ups project on "Recoil," has conscripted the aid of the Nemo concern in getting free window displays for exhibitors playing the picture.

'RECOIL' HOOKED UP WITH INECTO HAIR TINT

Beauty Reclaimer Gives Showman Fine Tie-Up Opportunities

IN these days of striving for the best, particularly in feminine beauty attainments, where the best is made possible by inventive processes and discoveries which go many steps further than the best nature herself can sometimes offer, a nationally advertised product like Inecto Rapid Hair Tint is an aid of no mean value, if it can be conscripted to exploit a film.

That opportunity is now offered to exhibitors showing the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan screen attraction, "Recoil"—an adaptation of the famous story by Rex Beach. Inecto, a name as widely known to ladies, as Rubberset Shaving Brushes and Ricoro Cigars are known to men.

The Inecto product is a new and rapid hair tint so like the living pigment of nature as to be indistinguishable. It is a hard won triumph of chemistry the value of which is appraised in high terms by hair dressers all over the country. On such a firm foundation, exhibitors playing the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan feature will benefit from all the inferred prestige and influence that national advertising gives to a product, if they but show the least inclination to avail themselves of the opportunities offered them.

The character of the width and breadth of the Inecto advertising message may more readily be seen when it is told that during the month of May, 1924, advertisements of Inecto Rapid will appeal in National magazines whose circulation totals 14,844,000 copies. These are: Vogue, Vanity Fair, House and Garden, Delineator, Designer, Photoplay, Motion Picture, Beauty, Harper's Bazaar, Fashionable Dress, Pictorial Review, Cosmopolitan, Woman's Home Companion, Gentlewoman, Red Book, and Monthly Fashion Book.

REAP RICH REWARD WITH VENIDA WINDOWS

VENIDA Hair Nets, known the country over through intensive advertising in national magazines, is stimulating intensive interest among dealers handling this product—and they are legion—by reason of the national window contest prizes being offered by the national distributor for the best displays of the well-known commodity.

With the further announcement that Venida Hair Net advertising and prestige are being projected to co-operate with exhibitors playing the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan feature, "Recoil," the showmen in question have before them an opportunity for displaying their showmanship genius, which can be best described as extraordinary.

Local merchants handling the Venida product are in a high state of enthusiasm to make a play for window display prizes. Could anything be more opportune for the showman? Get in touch with the store-keeper. Show him the national tie-up section. He'll see at once that Old Dame Opportunity is serenading him with a brass band. Meanwhile, clip the coupon from the Venida ad and let us pull further strings for you.

BONCILLA BEAUTIFIER TO BOOST 'RECOIL'

Window Displays Will Exploit Films for Entertaining Exhibitors

BONCILLA BEAUTIFIER, a classic clay pack nationally advertised as well known in the gentleman's barber shop as it is in Milady's boudoir and beauty parlor has been added to the list of National Window Tie-Ups in connection with the exploiting of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's screen version of the famous Rex Beach story, "Recoil."

It now remains for the exhibitor showing this excellent picture to get up on his toes and show what he knows about advertising value of a Boncilla display to him. This he can best do by clipping the coupon in the Boncilla ad, appending his so-called "John Hancock" thereto, and sending it post haste to the office of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, whence further arrangements will be effected without any additional trouble or expense on his part.

The Tie-Up Editor will first call attention to the fact that hundreds of thousands of people—folks in the nooks and hamlets of the country as well as residents of the big cities—are in one way or another acquainted with the trade name of Boncilla. National magazines, placards in barber shops, posters in drug store windows and other mediums that make their appeal through printers' ink, have brought the significance of Boncilla to the public's attention.

With the prestige and influence gained by such broadcasting linked up with a display which exploits "Recoil" for the showmen playing the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan film, it is safe to say the exhibitor is being offered an opportunity which money alone could not buy.

"Boncilla Facial Makes You a Go-Getter," says one of the placards and it is a safe bet that the acceptance of this free tie-up proposition on the part of the exhibitor establishes him once and for all as a go-getter. The display will adequately tie-up with the picture in so far as suggesting the atmosphere of the film is concerned. Betty Blythe, the beautiful principal of the screen story, will serve as a subject around whom appropriate catch lines will be woven to enhance the appeal and give impetus to the interest of both picture and merchandise.

Step aboard a Boncilla window display tie-up and win yourself additional, additional patrons.

WIN PATRONS FOR 'RECOIL' VIA BEAUTY CONTEST

ONE of the best exploitation angles which you have had in a long time is the International Beauty Contest. J. Parker Read, Jr., producer of "Recoil," staged a big beauty contest in Paris in order to get representative beauties from every European capital to take part in certain scenes of the picture. Following is a list of the names of the winners: (1) Flora MacLeod, Scotland; (2) Mary Evelyn Carven, England; (3) Alexandra Vladimir, Russia; (4) Lucia Fabiani, Italy; (5) Charlotte Dreifus, Switzerland; (6) Corinna Zafropoulos, Greece; (7) Christiane Erkerberg, Denmark; (8) Gaby Etienne, France; (9) Yvonne Villatte, Belgium; (10) Lolita Romero, Spain.

In the set of stills furnished by your exchange will be found a still showing Betty Blythe and the ten prize beauties. This will be found useful for reproduction in connection with feature stories, of which several describing the contest will be found in the press section of this campaign book. Then stage a local contest on your own hook.

Chinwah—'Recoil'

A Beauty Tie-Up DeLuxe

Betty Blythe Sets New Beauty Style

Whether it be the CHINWAH Extract, Toilet Water, Face Powder, Talcum, Cold Cream, Vanishing Cream, Lemon Cream, Tissue Cream, Saché Soap, Lip Stick, Lotion, Brilliantine, or any of the compacts there is always that elusive and delightful fragrance that spellbinds with mystery. That is why Betty Blythe chose Chinwah in her makeup for "Recoil."

WHEN Rex Beach wrote "RECOIL" he surely must have had CHINWAH in mind because it is a story of BEAUTY AND LOVELINESS. A story of eleven prize beautiful women!

Shades of Powder, Rouge and Lipsticks! What CHINWAH can do for a woman is nothing short of a marvel! And what a CHINWAH Window Display Tie-Up can do for Exhibitors who book and play "RECOIL" comes under the same heading of possibilities.

It is a showman's opportunity for street lobbies of beauty. A gateway to capacity houses. A sure-fire way of increasing profits.

The Beauty of a NEMO Window will attract all women to your message

A NEMO Corset Is First Beauty Essential

ALL WOMEN, of course, want to be beautiful. When you play Rex Beach's story of "Recoil," your first exploitation step, therefore, should be a window display tie-up with the first step in the beauty formula for women. That means a tie-up with NEMO Corsets because no woman in the world can be really beautiful without the perfect figure which NEMO gives her—the beauty lines that distinguishes her from those not wearing NEMOS. Incidentally every woman knows all about NEMO—knows that to wear them means being in style—and her attention is always attracted to any NEMO Window Display. By special arrangements with the Producers of the picture, you can have all NEMO windows in your town changed to NEMO-'RECOIL' windows, telling about your Rex Beach attraction. And all you have to do is sign the coupon when you have booked the film.

THE NEMO Window Display is sparkling in its attractiveness. There is a five color cut-out, 30 by 40 inches, depicting the Potal of Fashion to Nemo, the House of Complete Corsetry. In conjunction with this cut-out, we are offering eight beautiful photographs. Two of them are about 19 by 24 inches, and the other six, 14 by 17 inches. These photographs picture the Seven Ages of Corsetry.

CHINWAH PRODUCTS TO EXPLOIT 'RECOIL'

Distinctive Window Displays Offered Exhibitors Playing Film

TO those who use cosmetics or powders in any form, and for that matter to those who don't use such products, but who know how to read English, the name Chinwah immediately conjures up visions of talcs, perfumes, face powders, compacts, toilet water, lip sticks, vanishing creams, soap, and lotions of myriad descriptions.

For "Chinwah" is enblazened in large signs on the highroads and byroads of the country, in drug store windows, in the advertising columns of national magazines, and in the mouths of folks who make of purchasing an art.

With a name of such distinctive attributes the showman playing Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's "Recoil" is offered an opportunity to tie-up on window displays, such displays to figure in the windows of the local druggist, beauty parlor or any of the variety of stores that handle Chinwah products.

A picture of Betty Blythe, the beautiful heroine of the screen version of the famous Rex Beach story, together with sundry stills in which the ten most beautiful women in the world, as seen in the film, will be the basis of attracting the interest of passersby to both the merchandise and the fact that the film is being shown at the local theatre.

Fairly bristling with human interest, a display of this character is well calculated to inspire the feminine irrepressible with a desire to see for herself just what the film has to offer. Thus, the showman is given an opportunity to figure in an exploitation project which costs him nothing and can be procured by the clipping and signing of the coupon in the Chinwah ad. EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW will do the rest.

FOR CHINWAH WINDOWS

This still showing Betty Blythe and Mahlon Hamilton, principals in Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's "Recoil" is an appropriate nucleus for a Chinwah display, in which the local theatre is exploited free.

HERE'S the showman's big chance for getting in strong with local merchants, knocking down some first class publicity, and perhaps winning some prize money on the side.

Venida window displays are a hot-bed of energy these days. Merchants handling the Venida Hair Net are outdoing one another in attractive window displays in an effort to win a prize. Hop in on the chance for getting unusually fine space for yourself. The National Venida Hair Net Tie-Up with the new Goldwyn Cosmopolitan picture, "Recoil," gives every showman booking the picture a rare opportunity for getting his ads across through displays on which all attention is now centered. Stills from the picture and Venida Hair Net ads. Each calls attention to the other. Make the most of the opportunity. Tie-up with local merchants.

Show Your Local Merchants This:-

MR. MERCHANT. Are you trying for one of the Venida Hair Net Display prizes? There's a man who can help you double your chances. It's your local showman. Get the benefit of his showmanship experience and combine it with your merchandising knowledge. He can give you ideas and material for making your window different and better than the next fellows.

Get together with him on the proposition. Offer him half of the money if you win one of the prizes. It's worth it to you to get his co-operation and the material he can give you for your display. He has something you can't get anywhere else—pictures and posters from "Recoil." They'll dress your window up and put it across with a bang. With his help you can get what you may not have gotten without him—a cash prize and increased sales.

A Deltah Pearl Window Display Tied Up With Betty Blythe, star of Rex Beach's 'Recoil.'

The Final Touch of Charm Is Pearls— The Greatest 'Recoil' Tie-Up Is 'Deltah'!

FIGURE out for yourself how the above beautiful window display of DELTAH PEARLS can be made to sell your show at the same time it sells pearls—in the case of Betty Blythe in Goldwyn's picturization of Rex Beach's famous story "RECOIL"

As you will learn when you see this clever picture, the story deals with Europe's ten most beautiful women and an American Beauty—Betty Blythe. You hardly need to be told that the final touch of charm and beauty is always—pearls. And that all beautiful women wear DELTAH PEARLS!

The Window Display Tie-Ups on DELTAH PEARLS are yours for the asking. Simply sign the attached coupon and get in the co-operative band-wagon of showmanship. It will mean more dollars for you at the Box-Office and more sales for merchants.

WHAT delight pearls bring to every woman! Their touch of distinction completes the newest frock. The knowledge of their aid to beauty.....no other gem is so completely woman's, no other can bring such assurance. No other tie-up can bring such assurance of increased box-office receipts as a Deltah Pearl-Recoil Window Display. A beautiful window and a story of women linked with beautiful pearls.

Seven 'Recoil' Box-Office Windows

IN order that we may attain perfection in the National Tie-Up idea, it is essential that we have your constructive co-operation. As your trade paper we wish to help you in every way possible. Therefore we ask your ideas as to how the big plan of securing windows to publicize your attractions may be improved upon.

In the first place please indicate upon this selective ballot the products which you most favor as tie-ups for "Recoil." Mark them in the order of your preference—one, two, three and so on. Thus we may know what type of product you find most effective in directing the public to your box office through the medium of many window displays.

VENIDA Hair Nets

Having marked the ballot with your choices in order of preference, mail it in to Exhibitors Trade Review together with your ideas as to how the publicity plan may be improved. We want to make things as easy as possible for you, not only from our standpoint, but also from that of the national manufacturer with whom you tie-up. Doubtless some things will occur to mind through which this paper, and the national advertisers with whom you will be brought into contact each week, may co-operate with you even more closely.

Every suggestion received will have the closest of attention, and every idea which can be utilized to increase the efficiency of the National Tie-Up Section will be instantly acted upon. This is an exhibitor service created for you for the purpose of lining up every possible patron at your box-office. The scheme has been a bigger success than any exploitation idea thus far undertaken. With your help it will be the most far reaching development in modern showmanship. It will in truth fully introduce a new era in exploitation.

Read carefully what Jack Goldstein, of the Clinton Theatre in New York City, has already accomplished. Goldstein has the distinction of being the first showman to seize upon the National Tie-Up idea. He telephoned in to this office immediately upon reading last week's issue. Although "Beau Brummel" was booked to appear at the Clinton within a few days, the fine co-operation of the tie-up manufacturers secured for him sixteen windows in eleven of the best stores in his vicinity. The result is that despite the keen competition of three other theatres in his immediate neighborhood, one of which is a Loew house, Goldstein has extended the run of the Warner Brothers picture classic for half as long again as the original booking called for. Does this prove to you the value of National Tie-Ups?

A DISH FIT FOR A KING

In this entertaining scene from Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's "Recoil" the guests are treated to a supper divertissement which makes the "Four and Twenty Blackbirds" dish seem tame and prosaic in comparison.

Get Together With Local Merchants For a Co-Operative Newspaper Ad

NATIONAL advertisers, sold on the value of window displays as mediums of exploitation are working with you on "Recoil." Local dealers, handling the products of these national advertisers, will likewise see the unquestioned selling power of a co-operative newspaper ad, for it practically gives each individual advertiser a full-page "send-off" at the expense of one-sixth of the space.

Co-operative ads of this character are no new thing in the history of film exploitation, but never was the occasion so alluring nor the appeal so inviting as the opportunity now presented.

Six big national advertisers, whose combined products are sold in practically every community that boasts of a store, have thrown their co-operation into the breach of exploiting "Recoil," a fact which will convince the local dealers in these products that an opportune moment is at hand to reap the harvest which might naturally be expected to follow the wide-spread stimulation of interest in the products in question.

Take the tie-up section showing the news matter, advertisements and publicity material and show it to each dealer handling the respective commodities in question, and the matter of getting them all to play with you in a full page co-operative ad should be a question of the time it takes each merchant to read the stuff before he realizes that Old Dame Opportunity is serenading him with a brass band. He'll probably thank you for giving him a chance to come in.

The miniature layout herewith displayed shows how the space might be allotted to each individual dealer, with an ad of your show in the center. Here's a showmanship opportunity for you, which bristles with the bright promise of success, and one that may establish you for once and all time as a live-wire business man and an asset to the community. The diagram gives a graphic illustration as to how the layout might be made. The actual newspaper need not follow this model to a preciseness, for the chances are the newspaper's advertisement will have suggestions to make that will lend typographical appeal and artistic design to each individual and to the page as a whole.

The chances are that the newspaper, recognizing the alertness and enterprise of the showman in getting the merchants together for such a stunt, will be more than glad to give a "send-off" in its editorial columns or news columns, to the exhibitor, dilating on his value to the community.

One can go on and on, exhorting on the good things in store for the live-wire showman playing Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's "Recoil," if he but avails himself of the many advantages the National Tie-Up project offers him. But above all, let him not forget the proposition of the full-page co-operative newspaper ad with his local merchant friends.

SHOWMEN URGED TO USE 'BRUMMEL' TIE-UPS

Window Displays of Six Nationally Advertised Products Available

EXHIBITORS playing the Warner Brothers screen classic, "Beau Brummel," are reminded that the sparkling array of national tie-ups as presented in last week's National Tie-Up Section extends the bright promise of free high-power advertising and publicity for those who have not yet availed themselves of the many opportunities offered.

Again we catalogue the list of national advertisers who have thrown into the breach a generous budget devoted to the exploitation of the Warner attraction. Such co-operation on the part of manufacturers whose products are household terms in every part of the country is unparalleled in the history of film exploitation. These are:

The Glove Industries

The Glove Industries Advertising Committee representing seventy-five percent of the industry selling gloves to one hundred thousand American shops is ready to be your partner in calling the attention of folks in your community to the fact that you are playing the splendid screen attraction, "Beau Brummel."

Fashionknit Neckwear

The lure of neckwear neatly arrayed in a haberdasher's window is too well known to need much exhortation on the point here. And there is a point no showman playing "Beau Brummel" should miss. The famous "Beau" created the cravat. And the house of Fashionknit perfected it. Few people there are, who wear ties or have bought them for

Strive For a Full-Page Co-operative Ad

THE exhibitor with the proper spirit of showmanship lurking in his make-up will not underestimate the opportunity that the article on a co-operative full page newspaper ad presents to him on page 49. The appeal to merchants is undeniably strong, for the potential buying power of each individual ad is tremendously enhanced by the added interest the motion picture tie-ups add to the commodities the dealer handles.

others who don't know the position a Fashionknit tie holds in the field of neckwear. Your chance to capitalize on this fact is offered you in the invitation to write in to the Review for a free window display. The National Tie-Up editor will be your mediator without further trouble or expense on your part.

Personality Clothes

"Beau Brummel" rode to fame on a clothes horse. Shirek and Hirsch of New York have made their Personality Clothes celebrated through the wide-spread medium of national advertising. Your chance to profit by the prestige and good will gained by years of satisfactory business dealing is at hand supply for the asking. Write in for a Personality Clothes tie-up.

Sta-Shape Hats

America's style hats for Twentieth Century Beau Brummels. The hat which has achieved public renown through a half century of improvement and advertising in such papers as the Saturday Evening Post. Frederick Berg and Co., the manufacturers, offer, through the medium of the Review's National Tie-up project, co-operative window displays that help turn window shoppers into movie patrons.

Sampson's Dress Jewelry

The essence of good taste for evening wear. Known the country over to those who aspire to sartorial elegance. Distributors of the nationally known Kum Apart cuff buttons. The showman on his toes will not fail to properly evaluate the pulling power of Sampson window display.

Mineralava Clay

The complexion aid that made Rudolph Valentino famous. A nationally advertised face beautifier and wrinkle eradicator in universal favor. Always associated with famous picture stars, as a tie-up with the Warner screen classic, "Beau Brummel," it is particularly appropriate and suggestive. Window displays include stills of the famous "Beau" going through the exhilarating process of a Mineralava message. An exploitation device of high pulling power and one which reaches both sexes with equal appeal. reaches both sexes with equal appeal.

Exhibitors are urged to take time by the forelock and send in their requests for any or all of the listed tie-ups. The co-operative powers of the National Tie-up Editors will pull the strings, and then watch the box-office reap the harvest.

CORRIDOR LOBBY OF MILWAUKEE'S ALHAMBRA THEATRE

About Theatres— New and Old

THE Queen Theatre at Galveston, Texas, has been remodeled, and re-equipped with up-to-date fixtures.

* * *

Modern Operator—on A Rotating Shutter

IN an emergency the making of a rotating shutter is no difficult task if the following instructions are adhered to:

Measure distance from center of shutter to center of projection lens, and mark the position of the two points on paper.

Strike an arc, and with correct size of spot in correct working position, project light on screen.

Place a piece of tin preferably black in color, in the light beam at the place at which the shutter is to operate at the aerial image if practicable.

Measure diameter of light beam. At the point on the paper representing the lens center, designated at "B," draw in, carefully, the rectangle (if using slide carrier) of light, or the circle (with a compass) if not using the carrier. Be sure to have point "B" as the center of rectangle or circle.

Draw two straight lines from point representing center of shutter shaft designated as "A," to extreme edge of circle or rectangle of light at "B." Measure the degrees between these two lines, which we will assume to be ten degrees. If a projector with a 60 degree time is in use just add the width of the light beam (10 degrees in this case) to the 60, and you have a 70 degrees master blade width.

Nothing has been allowed for lost motion due to worn gears, etc.

If you have a heavy amperage, and a rather slow projection speed, it is necessary that all blades be the same width, if the flickering tendency is to be reduced to a minimum.

However, up to and including 60 amps., projection 75 ft. and up (per minute), it is permissible to make the intercepting blades a full ten per cent less in width than the master blade, with all light spaces equal.

NEW SUBURBAN THEATRE FOR KANSAS CITY

The combination suburban motion picture theatre and store room building in Kansas City has been shaded in the background by the plans of a new theatre to be erected at Seventy-fifth and Washington streets. W. C. Grumm, owner of the site upon which the structure is to be built, announced this week that in addition to a 900-seat modern picture theatre, the building would contain nine kitchenette apartments on the second floor and six ground floor store rooms.

"I am convinced that only in conjunction with such a building could a motion picture theatre 'break the ice' in a thinly settled neighborhood which heretofore has had no theatre," Mr. Grumm said. "It is the revenue to be derived from the building that will make possible the gradual development of theatre patronage. A theatre under such circumstances should be a community center in every respect. There will be some obstacles to overcome at first, to be sure, and that is why store room and apartment space is unusually valuable. I intend to give patrons of my district the best pictures possible for a small suburban house and I hope in this manner to build up a theatre that some day will compare with the best.

The contract date for completion of the building is June 30, but an effort will be made to have the theatre ready for occupancy a month earlier, despite the fact that the work started only this week. The walls will be brick with terra cotta trim. S. B. Harbet of Kansas City is the architect. The total cost of the building will be about $85,000.

Correct Lighting Advantages

The Wagner Electric Company, of St. Louis, advertise a projection light that is the whitest, steadiest, easiest to control and the easiest to change over. The fact that the best operator in the world with the finest projection machine and screen will not show a picture to best advantage if the light is poor is well known to all motion picture men.

Dependable Electric Current

Clear projection which will not cause eye-strain or fatigue is to be desired above all things. The Universal Motor Company of Oshkosh made a four cylinder electric lighting plant that may be installed in the basement, in the booth, or outside of the building. It takes care of any variation in load automatically, so that it is not necessary to have anyone look after it during the show. It is compact, light and easy to move and install and generates direct current.

The King of Wild Horses

A Feature

Presenting for the first time Rex the dangerous, untamable stallion

No more dangerous animal lives than a wild stallion at his worst. He does not fear man; he fears only his ropes and rifle. Give him a chance to catch a pursuer unarmed, and he will trample him into the dust. Rex is such a horse, big, black, glossy, fierce. He is untamed. Only one man in the world can approach him, touch him, handle him. That man is not his tamer, he is an accepted friend.

That is the horse that Hal Roach, with infinite difficulty and danger, has made the striking and sensational star of the most remarkable novelty feature ever made.

Infrequently there arrives in the amusement world a story, play or motion picture which might truthfully be described as "different." By different we mean a piece that departs from the hackneyed in theme, from the commonplace in construction, from the ordinary in purpose.

Two years ago blase New York suddenly found itself shaken to its theatrical foundation by the appearance of a play utterly "different" from the ordinary. Powerful in dramatic plot, novel in theme, with a background of quaint European beauty, this play, presented by America's wizard of stagecraft, at once became the sensation of Broadway. Such was the success of

David Belasco's "DEBURAU"

Foremost among the TWENTY big stories chosen by Warner Bros. for its 1924-25 output of "Screen Classics" is this great Belasco stage production. Written by Sacha Guitry, peer of European playwrights, "DEBURAU," with its wealth of dramatic strength, fine comedy, touching pathos and colorful setting, is the ideal story for the screen.

In producing "DEBURAU" for the screen Warner Bros., in association with Mr. Belasco, is bringing into play the full strength of its powerful production force. Perfect direction, skillful acting and artistic arrangement combine to make of it a production that sets a new high standard in entertainment values. HARRY BEAUMONT, who made "Beau Brummel" for the screen, will personally direct "DEBURAU."

That's a second good reason why you should—

WHAT'S IN THE AIR

STATION E. T. R. broadcasting. A program of showmanship spice and news meat that prevents malnutrition of the box-office.

"Can a woman successfully run a motion picture theatre?" is a question recurrent on the lips of film folk who have watched with curiosity woman's tremendous advance in the world of business and civic affairs. Supply your own answer, after reading the "showwoman" biography on page 16.

And, brother exhibitors, tell us truly, what do you think of the exploitation Big Berthas in this week's National Tie-Up Section? Wouldn't it warm the cockles of Barnum's heart to see the manner in which the Review has connected such world-wide names as Borden's Condensed Milk, Knit Underwears, Sterno Canned Heat, Auto Vacuum Freezer, Thermo Sport Vests, and La Palina Cigars with Associated Exhibitors' wonder picture, "Chechahcos!"

If the window tie-ups effected for this picture don't give every showman playing "Chechahcos" a chance to bat 1000 per cent in the box-office league then we're loco in the upper story and ready for a flip-flop into the nut factory.

And, oh, what a picture! Read George Blaisdell's review and box-office slant on this film, and decide for yourself. One red-hot week for the purveyors of celluloid entertainment! Another grand picture, featuring our own Mary in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" reviewed in this issue. Don't miss it.

And by all that's valuable and of any concern to a showman's interests, keep an eagle eye peeled for next week's National Tie-Ups on First National's "The Perfect Flapper." It will have the exploitation punch of a thousand trip-hammers. Free advertising of a 92-karat caliber, and human interest that stops folks dead in their tracks will feature this scintillating Colleen Moore attraction.

Janet Noon Makes Her Theatre Pay in Dimes

Her Low Prices Are Based on a Preference for a Steady Stream of Dimes Rather Than an Occasional Fifty Cent Piece

CAN a woman successfully run a motion picture theatre? This question is asked many times, but one of the best answers is Janet Noon, owner of the Crescent theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., who has made a living from a ten cent house located in the business center of the city for the past eight years, and who is today regarded as one of the leading exhibitors in her part of the state.

Eight years ago, Miss Noon was a stenographer. In company with two other young women she bought the theatre and discovered right off the reel that there were many things to learn about the motion picture business that meant dollars and cents.

A year later Miss Noon found herself the sole proprietor of the theatre, a 450-seat house, the other two women finding the going a trifle precarious, and dropping out.

One of the first things she discovered was that a motion picture exhibitor, to be successful, must bear a good share of the work himself. When Miss Noon first started running the house, she was an easy mark for some of the film salesmen. She admitted this much in an interview with a representative of the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW. But the salesmen, having "gypped" the woman once, never sold her again. They were the real losers.

After a time, Miss Noon found herself doing business only with dependable exchanges and salesmen. Today she takes the word of the salesman on practically all of her pictures. The salesmen have discovered that the woman is a shrewd buyer, and that although they might sell a picture once by over-rating it, that they lose out in the long run.

Just one man is employed in the Crescent theatre. He is the operator, Frank Heigel, who has been connected with the house almost from the time it became the property of Miss Noon. One of the piano players has been with the house for five or six years with the result that Miss Noon has really surrounded herself with what might be almost termed a family in itself.

"There is one thing that I have found necessary," said Miss Noon, in discussing whether or not the field of a motion picture exhibitor is one that can successfully appeal to women, "and that is to do the work yourself. It's all right to sit back and give orders, but I think too many exhibitors these days are more fond of such things than of actually getting down to brass tacks and by working themselves, save not only the hire of some other person, but also in stopping leaks that you would never know of unless you worked yourself.

"I believe in newspaper advertising. I do not believe in boosting prices. In fact I think it is a foolish thing. My crowd is almost the same night after night, barring of course some heavy storm, or similar thing. I can tell within a dollar or two what my receipts will be two weeks from tonight. I have found out what my audience wants in the way of pictures and I try at all times to fulfill their desires along this line.

THIS means that I can carefully reckon on my overhead and I know just what I can pay for a picture and how much money this picture should make me. I am running a serial once a week, although this is no hard and fast rule, for I occasionally lay off on serials and then start in after a few weeks.

"I have 450 seats in my house. If I fill them twice a night, and I generally do, that means that my night's receipts will run very close to $90. There is always a constant stream of dimes coming through the wicket and say what you will, I would rather have a steady stream of dimes than an occasional fifty cent piece.

"Although my house is a ten cent one, I have never had any trouble with the boys. I think it is all in getting started right. If the youngsters of the city realize that they can not do any cutting up in a theatre, they soon learn to obey the rules and are happier. Instead of being noisy these boys come to me after the show and often ask me when I am to play another Coogan picture.

"I know of no reason why women can not successfully operate a motion picture theatre. They are equally successful with the men these days in other lines of endeavor and I think many time they understand the wants of audiences perhaps better than the men. I do think, however, that if a woman could obtain some previous training along theatre lines before making the plunge for herself that it would be highly advisable. I know when I first started that I had little real conception of the prices that I would pay for pictures. Any woman wishing to enter the exhibitors' field should know this phase of the matter at the very outset. She also must realize that the motion picture theatre is no different from other lines of business, and that personal attention spells success in ninety-nine cases out of every one hundred. It is no pink tea party, I assure you, and yet in the eight years I have thoroughly enjoyed the work and have made what might be termed a pretty good living.

THERE is a great deal in personal contact with your audiences. I know that I could put on pictures which would not please and that within a month my audiences would not be within a third of what they are today. I like to feel that I am a part of my audience, and nothing pleases me more than to stand in the rear of the house and hear an audience fairly howl with laughter at some comedy, or coming out, stop for a moment and express their pleasure at the feature that has been shown.

"When a woman seeks to become the owner of a motion picture theatre, she should bear in mind one thing that is paramount to all others, and that is to do her full share, and a bit more of the work, or as it is commonly expressed to be on the job. Figure out your investment and what you consider a fair return on your money. Figure out your overhead, then determine what you can pay for your pictures and do not be talked into paying higher prices than you can afford by some glib tongued salesman. If men can succeed in the business, then why can't a woman?"

'Stepping On It' With Live Programs Put These Theatres Across

AS an example of the results that may be obtained by persistence, pep, an active brain, and personality, we offer the name of C. C. Struble, manager of the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Ore., as an unusually striking case.

Mr. Struble has been in the show business for some twenty years. Starting as owner of a little picture house in Oskaloosa, Iowa, one of the first in that state, Mr. Struble has owned, and at times managed both legitimate and vaudeville houses in various parts of the country.

About a year ago, Mr. Struble came to Portland to take up the management of John Hamrick's Blue Mouse. Due to strong opposition, matters had not been going too well with this place, and Mr. Struble was up against a real he-man's job. Several managers had tried with but indifferent success to keep the red ink off the ledger.

However, by hard work, and an endless application to the task in hand, Mr. Struble gradually made the people of Portland realize that he was a real showman, who was doing everything in his power to give a little better entertainment at popular prices.

Then he introduced a decided novelty to his patrons. The other first run houses were featuring their orchestras at every show. Mr. Struble went them one better. He featured two orchestras. One in the pit, and the other, a jazz band, on the stage between shows.

This proved such a drawing card that Mr. Struble determined to go a step further. So he tried the jazz orchestra out in the pit.

Instead of this move being a fiasco, as was expected by many of the wise ones, this novelty met with the instant approval of the thousands who were now regular patrons of the Blue Mouse.

Pictures of Jerry Reed's Symphonic Jazz Orchestra appeared in the local papers, for Mr. Struble is a great believer in the power of advertising, and the crowds flocked to the Blue Mouse in ever increasing numbers.

STEPPING on a big production is the one thing Mr. Struble seems to have down to an exact science. "Scaramouche" which played into its third week with no apparent let up in the lines that formed on the sidewalk at every performance, was the subject of some wonderful publicity by him.

The annual auto show happened to be on the week previous to the opening of "Scaramouche," and C. C. lost no time putting into action a plan to bring the notice of the public to his next attraction. A coach, with dummy horses, a cut out figure of the male star of the picture, and a young lady representing the female star, soon occupied a very prominent position in the auto show, and thousands thus had their curiosity aroused to the point where they decided they must see the picture. That this advertising scheme was one of the best ever put over locally is well attested by the fact that on the opening day, all the previous box office receipts were smashed. But the following day this figure was again topped by three hundred dollars. Which all but goes to prove that no matter how dead a house may be, there is always a live wire somewhere who can bring them in if he is given a fair chance. The secret of C. C. Struble's success, if secret there is, lies in the circumstance that he is not afraid to work—work—work.

C. C. STRUBLE

Enterprising and energetic manager of the very up-to-date Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Oregon

SPEAKING of the Blue Mouse Theatre, one is reminded of the excellent showmanship and presentations policy in back of the sister house to this theatre, the Blue Mouse of Seattle, owned and managed by John Hamrick. For example, with the playing of "Scaramouche," space was made at either side of the auditorium, where were posed couples impersonating characters from the picture. The spot was turned on one couple, who sang a duet number, then shifted to the other side for a similar performance. Finally the quartet took up the theme with full orchestra accompaniment.

Striking decorations enhanced the general attractiveness. A dance number with a dainty solo dancer was the second number, closely followed by a herald in court costume, carrying a scroll from which he read the announcement of the picture and retired.

During a brief intermission the herald again appeared and proclaimed the conditions and story surrounding the writing of the "Marseillaise." Lights were thrown on the flower garden where the composer acted out the story as it was being told, finally standing up and singing it at its conclusion. The program was a huge success.

MANAGER STRUBLE'S 'SCARAMOUCHE' USHERETTES

Coincident with his live policy of "stepping on it" with innovations whenever an attraction plays his house, Mr. Struble gave Metro's "Scaramouche" a whale of a send-off in the shape of these appropriately attired usherettes, helping to carry out the atmosphere of the successful picture. Needless to say the plan succeeded.

COLLEEN MOORE, the vivacious and captivating "Perfect Flapper," is here seen surrounded by her startling flapper companions. Sophisticated as is the flapper, she is still child enough to love "dressing up," and each of these captivating lassies has adopted the costume that best suits her. The effort has so tired Phyllis Haver that she is trying to catch forty winks on the inviting couch while the others prance about.

Old Lady Astor Says

CHARLES L. O'REILLY, President of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, is now with his associate officers situated in new quarters. The Chamber has taken about 1500 feet on the ninth floor of the Times Building. As it is on the north the quarters have light on three sides of the building. From his desk in the bow Skipper O'Reilly can look down on the busiest quarter of New York. As the offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State are on the seventh floor of the same building the two exhibitor branches are now close together.

LEW CODY, Goldwyn player, has purchased the motion picture rights to a one act foreign play. He will adapt it for a two-reel subject and appear in it as one of the cast. Only three persons figure in the story. The entire action takes place within one set. The subject is said to be of unusual power.

ADOLPHE MENJOU, who has an important role in "Broken Barriers," a Metro-Mayer picture, holds a degree from Cornell University as a mechanical engineer. As he went to the stage directly from college he never practiced his profession. At the outbreak of the war Mr. Menjou enlisted and went abroad as a private with the Cornell unit. He was mustered out as a captain.

ERNEST TORRENCE, 6 feet 3½ inches in height and one of the tallest men in motion pictures, will be even taller in "The Mountebank," in which Mr. Torrence is going to be co-featured with Anna Q. Nilsson. In the role of the clown his height is increased to 7 feet 4 inches.

CHARLES CHAPLIN is reported at Mount Summit, up in the Sierras, where he is staging a gold rush for his Alaska comedy. The particular spot being simulated is Chilcoot Pass, a name which appeared much in the dispatches from the north country twenty-five years ago. The picture has not yet been titled, but is expected to make eight or more reels. It will not be completed before fall.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH, who went to Italy last month to investigate proposals made him by prominent Italians, is scheduled to be back home on May 8.

JACK DEMPSEY, who is to make two-reel subjects for Universal, will have two directors in his series of comedies. The first subject is being directed by Jess Robbins, and the second will be handled by Earle Kenton, who has been directing the Andy Gump comedies. The two will alternate, one man preparing the script while his brother director is at work on the stage.

HAROLD BEAUDINE, director of Christie Comedies, and Stephanie Tappe, a secretary in the offices of the same company, were married April 27 in Los Angeles and are now in New York on their honeymoon.

RICHARD TALMADGE, starring in Truart productions, is in New York preparing for the first picture of his second series of dramas being made by Carlos Productions for Truart distribution. This is his first visit east in eight years.

DR. SAM ATKINSON, former manager of the Allied Amusements Association of Chicago, is in New York. The doctor guided the destinies of all the houses in the big city for five years. He is a doctor of philosophy and is connected with the department of sociology of Loyola University. He is an authority on censorship, and has successfully combated in several states attempts to fasten that nuisance upon the public. For five years the doctor conducted the Hoyburn Theatre in Evanston, Ill. Just now he is interested in a movement to undohertyize the neighborhood of Chicago, which means to undo the work of a detractor of motion pictures. He is about to start for the coast, where it will be his aim to interest a number of the prominent stars in his campaign.

DR. ATKINSON is an authority on audience psychology. He has lectured before hundreds of gatherings, one of his subjects being "The Movies: Whither Do They Move?" During the "recent unpleasantness" the doctor was a staunch defender of Mabel Normand, and spoke before many women's organizations, to the members of which he appealed for a square deal.

DOROTHY FARNUM, who has done much worthwhile work as a scenarist, is in New York. She came east to confer with David Belasco, on the adaptation of "Deourau," which is to be produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. One of Miss Farnum's adaptations which brought her praise was that of "Beau Brummel."

POLA NEGRI has taken out her first naturalization papers. She has been in the United States since September, 1922, at which time she came from her home in Poland.

IF you are a resident of the Metropolitan district and know anything about "gowf" better get out the old clubs and polish them up if you have not already done so. It is reported that already there are fifty entries for the spring film golf tournament. Among those who have offered prizes are the Film Daily, which has given a special trophy in addition to its big cup; Watterson Rothacker, Motion Picture News; Elmer Pearson for Pathe Exchange, Abe Warner in behalf of Warner Brothers and Jack Cosman of Agfa. George Blair, of the Eastman Kodak Company, has also promised a fine camera.

THOMAS MEIGHAN visited his alma mater, Mount St. Mary's college, at Emmetsburg, Md., this week to attend a reunion and fair. The Paramount star expects to leave in about ten days for the coast, where he will begin work on "The Alaskan."

THE Rev. Henry R. Rose, pastor of the Church of the Redeemer in Newark, N. J., praises Laurette Taylor's "Happiness" as a "fine picture and a gripping story." The Rev. Mr. Rose pays a great deal of attention to pictures and frequently shows them in his church. At other times with a series of slides he lectures on some of the late subjects. The minister is one of the screen's best friends, and has done much to help widen the circulation of worthwhile productions.

JOSEPH DI LORENZO has resigned as general sales manager of Hepworth Productions, Inc. President Cranfield has named Edward M. Hopcraft as his successor.

KANSAS M. P. T. O. HAS IMPORTANT SESSION

Approve Affiliation With Allied State Organizations

AT a meeting of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O., Kansas, which lasted two days, in Kansas City, April 29-30, affiliation with the Allied State Organizations was approved, the long puzzling problems of membership dues was "ironed out" and a policy regarding representation before the joint board of arbitration of exhibitors who are not members of the Kansas association.

All resolutions adopted by the Allied State Organization in Chicago recently were approved. A. J. Moeller, of the Moeller Theatre Service Corporation, former general manager of the M. P. T. O. A., was present at the meeting, a contract being signed with him for the supply of industrial reels to the Kansas body.

Membership dues were fixed at $25 a year. A sliding scale for special assessments, depending upon the size of the town, the number of theatres in it, the capacity of the house and the general business conditions in respective localities, also was adopted. Under this arrangement an exhibitor will have the right of appeal, provided he feels he has been assessed too much.

In the future, exhibitors who are not members of the Kansas organization will not be represented personally in cases before the Kansas City Joint Board of Arbitration. In the past the Kansas body has borne the brunt for many exhibitors who have shown no inclination to become affiliated with the association, or co-operate with it, until pressed for the need of organized aid.

Samuel A. Handy of Kansas City, attorney for the Allied State Organizations, appeared before the directors and gave a report on activities pertaining to the copyright act. Mr. Handy still is confident that victory lies ahead for the exhibitors.

'THE MOUNTEBANK' COMPLETED AT LONG ISLAND STUDIO

Herbert Brenon has completed his production of "The Mountebank," William J. Locke's story, at the Paramount Long Island studio. The picture, which is rich in pathos and humor, gives Ernest Torrence, who plays the title role, an opportunity for some of the finest acting of his screen career. Persons who have followed the production from its beginning say that he will surpass his performance in "The Covered Wagon" with this characterization of the clown in Locke's story.

An excellent cast will be seen in this picture, including Anna Q. Nilsson, Louise Lagrange, Effie Shannon, Katherine Lee, Mme. D'Ambricourt, Neil Hamilton, Maurice Cannon, William Ricciardi and Lawrence D'Orsay.

The picture promises to be as rich in color as it is strong in drama with scenes in the circus, the French variety halls and bits of the world war.

ATLANTA FILM BOARD ELECT

The Atlanta Film Board of Trade elected the following officers for a six months term at their semi-annual meeting held the past week: J. J. Burke, Jr., Metro, chairman; L. W. Clark, Goldwyn, vice-president; I. P. Stone, Vitagraph, secretary-treasurer. The following were elected to the board of directors: W. W. Anderson, Pathe; J. J. Burke, Jr., Metro; John T. Ezzell, Select; Ralph B. Williams, Universal; Arthur C. Bromberg, Progress.

PRESENTING BARBARA LA MARR

This beautiful scene is from Metro's "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." Barbara is shown as the cabaret dancer who causes considerable shooting.

The Film Board of Trade began on May 5 a series of regular monthly luncheons at the Ansley Hotel and have urged that all exhibitors who visit Atlanta time their trips so as to sit in as guests of the Film Board of Trade at these monthly luncheons, the first Monday in each month.

KEITH ORGANIZES AMUSEMENT COMPANY IN CANADA

One of the most important theatre developments in the Dominion of Canada in several years was the organization on April 8 of the B. F. Keith Company of Canada, Limited, with headquarters at Montreal, the concern being established under a Dominion charter with an authorized capital of $5,000,000. E. F. Albee of New York is the head of the Canadian company and through his negotiations a number of important theatres in Eastern Canada have been brought under the one control. The theatres affected include the Imperial of Montreal, which has been operated by the Montreal Operating Company, Limited; the Princess Theatre, Montreal, operated by the Canadian United Theatres, Limited; the Lyric Theatre in Hamilton, Ontario; the Franklin Theatre, Ottawa, which is conducted by J. M. Franklin who has become one of the directors of the new circuit; the Majestic Theatre in London, Ontario, and Shea's and the Hippodrome Theatre, Toronto. All of these houses present programmes of moving pictures and vaudeville. Much interest attaches to the inclusion of the Toronto Hippodrome as this is being conducted under the auspices of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation with an exclusively picture policy, the Hippodrome being the parent theatre of the Famous Players chain of 60 theatres in the Dominion.

NEW THEATRE FOR ALBANY

Albany, N. Y.—There is talk in Albany that the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation, operating the Mark Strand theatre in this city, is planning to build another house here. The idea is to protect the theatre which it now has along much the same lines as it does in Troy, where the same company owning and operating the Troy theatre, took over a lease of the Lincoln theatre. There is a stiff fight in Albany between the Mark Strand theatre and the Clinton Square and Leland theatres.

Exhibitors Must Encourage Independents for Own Safety, Says Burr

PREPARATORY to the issuance of his next year's production schedule, C. C. Burr, recognized as one of the strongest factors in the independent market, has some very interesting remarks to make concerning the lot of state-rights producers and the problems that have and still are confronting them. Mr. Burr's statement in full, which carries with it the weight of five years of consistently good product for the state-rights market, and which gives food for thought not only for the other independent producers but for exhibitors in particular, follows:

"This year, more than any other, we have repeatedly heard the cry 'This is the Independent Year.' This is the year the independents will come into their own. This is the year when the golden harvest is to be reaped." I should like to get on the band wagon and do my share of shouting, but conditions actual, stark conditions as they really exist in the independent market today, prohibit my enthusiasm from getting the better of my real judgment. I have been in the picture business, and in the state-rights end of it in particular, long enough to know what the actual conditions are, and it is in lieu of this experience that my thoughts on the question are offered. The independent rainbow is literally smeared with shadows that momentarily threaten to eclipse it. That is the bug-a-boo, and the only way to eliminate it lies in the hands of exhibitors throughout the country. For many years there has always been a small coterie of independent producers whose product equalled, and in many instances superceded that of the national releasing organizations, yet when it came down to the brass tacks of exhibitor bookings, these pictures upon which the independent producers had expended all their efforts in an attempt to give the exhibitors a real, honest-to-goodness money-making, box-office attraction, were forced to accept at least a 30 per cent cut under the prices usually given for national releases that had nothing more to warrant it than the fact that it was released by a state-right organization. That is the condition as it exists and as it always has been. What chance then, has the independent producer to reap his golden harvest? Why should he invest many thousands of dollars over and above the sum that is usually expended by the rank and file of state-righters whose product is ordinary, when he knows that he cannot hope to get his just reward? Why can't exhibitors realize it before it is too late, that what with the present combines and mergers of the national releasing organizations their only means of protection lies in the fostering and aiding these independent producing organizations that want to, and are capable of turning out productions, that picture for picture match up favorably and oftentimes supercede in entertainment value the product of the national releasing units. Instead of forcing the real independent producer to accept a 30 per cent cut on his pictures, exhibitors should really pay 30 per cent more, for as things in the industry look at present, the independent product is visibly their one and only means of protection from the gouging and iron-rule terms and stipulations of the national organizations. My own pictures, among which are "I Am the Law," "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," and "Sure Fire Flint" have played to tremendous profits at the Chicago Theatre and practically every important first-run house in the country outside of New York. In a majority of instances they have grossed more than the product of the bigger national companies, yet it has almost been impossible to obtain a fair selling price from the independent exchanges and exhibitors merely because they were produced by a state-rights organization. This situation has been gradually forcing the better state-rights companies to reduce their output, and if the same conditions continue to exist, the time will soon come when there will be no such thing as a first-class product from the independent market.

Three years ago our organization made eight pictures, two years ago we produced six, last year we issued four, and for the next year we intend releasing only three.

How, therefore, can we set up the cry: "This is the Independent Year?" The industry will really never know a real year for the independents unless those who buy and book pictures from the independents realize that their only protection and their only real form of insurance lies in the fostering and aiding of those independents who are anxious and capable of turning out pictures that can positively measure up to the product of the national producing and releasing organizations.

SELZNICK TO DISTRIBUTE SELCO PICTURES

Will Also Distribute Hodgkinson Pictures in Australia

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the executive offices of Selco Pictures, Incorporated, that a contract has just been signed by Selco Pictures and the Selznick Distributing Corporation, whereby the world rights for the distribution of Selco product is acquired by the Selznick organization.

J. W. Schlieff has been put in complete charge of the acquisition of product by Selco, it is officially stated. He declared that although he was not prepared to give complete plans of the company for the forthcoming season, there were many important deals under way, and negotiations are nearing completion with several prominent producers. "Missing Daughters," a Choice Production, with a cast including Eva Novak, Eileen Percy, Pauline Stark, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Robert Edeson, Sheldon Lewis and Walt Whitman, has already been announced, and the titles of other releases will be made known shortly.

E. J. Doolittle, manager of the foreign department of Selco Pictures, announces the completion of an important deal with Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan whereby Selco is to handle in Australia product of Distinctive Pictures. Among the Distinctive Pictures included in the arrangement are "The Green Goddess" with George Arliss, "The Rejected Woman" with Conrad Nagle and Alma Rubens, "The Steadfast Heart" and "Second Youth." Mr. Doolittle stated that a second big deal, for the handling of Hodgkinson pictures in Australia, had also been signed.

L. J. Sand, President of the Consolidated Film Industries has been added to the Board of Selco Pictures, according to announcement just made.

Allied State Organizations Confer Regarding Arbitration

A COMMITTEE from the newly organized Allied State Organizations,

W. E. SHALLENBERGER

President of Arrow Films who has just returned from a trip through the South. He is optimistic concerning the outlook for his company's future.

owners, met on May 5 with Charles O'Reilly, president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and discussed the arbitration situation. It was brought out that the Arbitration Board in 31 exchange centers handled over 3,500 cases in 1923, involving many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The meeting was held in the offices of the M. P. P. D. and many subjects were discussed as the new organization is anxious to get all matters straightened out in preparation for an active season.

The committee of theatre owners included W. A. Steffes, president of the Minnesota organization; J. R. Deniston, president of Michigan; R. R. Biechele, president of Kansas and H. M. Richey, secretary of the organization.

At the organization meeting in Chicago it was decided to start the new organization along the right path and do everything possible in the interest of the members. A committee was chosen at that time to take up the arbitration matter and the conference in New York was the result.

The states represented at the meeting were Minnesota, North Dakota, Michigan, South Dakota, North Carolina, Texas, Indiana, Virginia, Missouri and Illinois.

The committee feels that it has accomplished considerable during the New York conference and will have good news to report to the members.

'FAST STEPPERS' HITS HIGH PLACES

New Sullivan Series Will Surpass 'Leather Pushers' in Appeal

UNIVERSAL'S new two reel series featuring Billy Sullivan of "Leather Pusher" fame, strikes a unique note in short subjects. The series is made from stories by Gerald Beaumont, who knows the racing game upside down. The scenes are laid in Tia Juana and the racing flashes are immense. There is thrill, heart interest, and love in each picture, and that makes a pretty good combination. The series was directed by Edward Laemmle.

Each picture is complete in itself and each is worth the price of admission. They could be stretched and padded here and there and each would make a first class feature. They have all the settings and situations that are used in high class productions, but we have seen many "supers" that measure far below entertainment value of these pictures.

Billy Sullivan proves that he does not depend upon his fists to get by. He is an actor. He has an appeal in his new pictures that brings out his personality, and his broad smile is a winner.

Shannon Day does some clever acting. She is known as "The Fiddlin' Doll" who plays a violin in a Tia Juana cafe and during her idle moments is Billy's sweetie. The pair is aided and abetted by James T. Quinn, who, by the way, is an excellent character.

We advise exhibitors to hook up to this series. It is good.

PARAMOUNT EASTERN STUDIOS WORK AT TOP SPEED

One period of production activity at the Paramount Long Island studio has ended and another is beginning. Three new pictures will be started this week and next and shortly after that a fourth will be under way.

Allen Dwan has completed the cutting of "Manhandled," and has started work with Gloria Swanson on an adaptation of "The Queen's Love Story," by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Valentino has finished "Beaucaire." He will start work under the direction of Joseph Henabery in "A Sainted Devil," an adaptation of a story by Rex Beach.

Irvin Willat will remain in the East to make the so-called "Story Without a Name," at the Famous Players Long Island studio.

Thomas Meighan, whose unit has been working constantly in the East since the production of "Woman Proof," will go to the Coast to make his next picture, "The Alaskan," under the direction of Herbert Brenon. He will return to the East immediately after finishing this picture.

The production schedule at the Famous Players Eastern studio as arranged at present calls for the making of four pictures at a time throughout the Summer with the possibility that a fifth unit may be added.

C. B. C. LINING UP SERIES OF PERFECTION PICTURES

This week has been an extremely busy one for Harry Cohen of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. He has devoted practically all of his time searching for possible material to be used as film stories in the new series of Perfection Pictures to be released by C.B.C. this coming season.

Mr. Cohen stated that he has secured the motion picture rights to eight stories. These stories contain the necessary box office punch as suggested by the following titles: "The Battling Fool," "Fatal Kiss," "Women First," "The Woman Hater," "The Fearless Lover," "A Fight for Honor," "All for Love" and "The Price He Paid."

Shooting continuity has been completed on "The Battling Fool."

A bit of news of interest to the trade is that of the completion of Elinor Glyn's "How to Educate a Wife" at the Warner Brothers west coast studio. The print of this picture is now enroute to New York. It will go into the Rivoli or Rialto Theatres on May 18 for its premiere.

Its arrival is being awaited with eagerness by the Warner executives, who are "het up" at the wonderful box office title. They are equally curious to see the results of the Monta Bell's direction in his second Warner picture.

ENGLISHMAN PERFECTS COLOR PROCESS

New Process Makes Color Film Commercially Possible

SPECTRUM FILMS, LTD., of London, has developed a method of taking colored pictures that is receiving the attention of the motion picture industry. The company has made numerous demonstrations in England, and the trade press has been lavish in praise of the work. It is understood the color process costs very little more than ordinary prints and if all reports are correct we may see colored pictures as a commonplace thing.

The "Era" says:

Claude Friese-Green, son of the late W. Friese-Greene, who was known as "The Father of the Film," has perfected a process for the successful application of colour to cinematography of which Spectrum Films, Ltd., gave a practical demonstration at the Holborn Empire last week. This was chiefly embodied in a film entitled "A Quest of Colour," in which were shown, in all their natural colour and beauty, such notably picturesque locations as Windsor Castle, Hampton Court, Warwick Castle, Salisbury Cathedral, Mount Snowden and the Norfolk Broads. In all these scenes the introduction of colour was eminently successful, and as we are told that coloured films may be produced almost as cheaply as the black and white ones there is every reason to be hoped that they will be generally adopted. The beauty and effectiveness of this colour process is by no means restricted to scenic subjects, as the Margaret Morris dancers exemplified. These clever dancers first appeared in the flesh, and subsequently in the picture, when the colours of their costumes were accurately reproduced. This process is being used in making the cinematograph record of the Mount Everest Expedition of 1924.

The inventor expects to make a demonstration in this country in a short time. He will leave England the latter part of this month with his assistants.

'WHEN A MAN'S A MAN' CONTINUES TO STAND 'EM UP

Additional reports from all over the country on Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man" further attest to the popularity and box-office record-breaking proclivities of this First National release, produced by the Principal Pictures Corporation. Letters and telegrams from exhibitors whose theatres have created new box-office records with "When a Man's a Man" continue to pour into the First National offices.

Following its opening at the Dome Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, last week, the manager of that playhouse enthused over "When a Man's a Man" in the following telegram:

"'When a Man's a Man' had splendid opening in Youngstown. Standing them up from one-thirty on and equalling best house records. Eleven hundred capacity at forty cents top. Twelve hundred net."

CLARA BOW IN 'BABBITT' CAST

Clara Bow, who is representing the American flapper in Hollywood, has been loaned by B. P. Schallberg, president of Preferred Pictures, to Warner Brothers for one of the principal roles in the coming picturization of Sinclair Lewis novel "Babbitt." The popularity of this eighteen year old actress has advanced rapidly through her performance in "Down to the Sea in Ships," "Maytime," "Black Oxen" and "Poisoned Paradise." Her part in "Babbitt" brings her score for picking big roles, up to five.

Marie Prevost and Monte Blue make a charming hero and heroine and contribute much delicate humor to Elinor Glyn's "How to Educate a Wife," a Warner production ready for release.

Every Week You Will Find Them Invaluable Because Constructive!

Your Suggestions and Criticisms Are Sincerely Solicited

IN spite of himself David Drene, prominent sculptor finds himself falling in love with his winsome young model whom he has planned to use as an instrument for working his revenge on the man who stole his wife and thus spoilt his life.

IT is not easy to find you love the girl who adores your best friend especially when, unknown to that friend, you have been the one responsible for his wife's suicide. John Greylock is learning that it is a very difficult situation to face.

STOCKHOLDERS REELECT PATHE DIRECTORS

Reports at Annual Meeting Show Improvement in Business

THE annual meetings of the stockholders and Board of Directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc., were held on Tuesday afternoon, April 29, at the Pathe Home Office, 35 West 45th Street, New York City. The stockholders reelected for the coming term the same Board of Directors that served during the year just closed. The Board of Directors is constituted as follows:

Edmund C. Lynch, Paul Fuller, Jr., Elmer Pearson, William Fellowes Morgan, Charles Pathe, Bernhard Benson, Gaston Chanier, Jansen Noyes, and Lewis Innerarity.

Following the adjournment of the stockholders meeting, the Board of Directors convened and re-elected last year's officers as follows:

Edmund C. Lynch, Chairman of the Board of Directors; Paul Fuller, Jr., President; Elmer Pearson, Vice-President and General Manager; Bernhard Benson, Vice-President; Lewis Innerarity, Secretary and John Humm, Treasurer.

The splendid business record made by the Pathe organization during the year 1923 and the efficient management of the company's affairs under the capable administration of Vice-President and General Manager Elmer Pearson were warmly commended by both stockholders and directors.

Pathe's plans for the coming season were also discussed in detail and while these plans are of a magnitude greater than any heretofore contemplated, it was the unanimous opinion of the members that Pathe, in view of its past achievements and the especially good business outlook, would carry through these plans to a successful and prosperous consummation. Officials declared it to be their confident opinion that Pathe's superior feature and short-subject output during 1924 will win for the company a volume of business surpassing by 35 per cent or 40 per cent that done in 1923.

INDEFINITE RUN FOR 'GIRL SHY' ON BROADWAY

Following its extended run at the Mark Strand Theatre on Broadway, "Girl Shy," Harold Lloyd's latest screen success for Pathe, will be given an indefinite run at the Cameo Theatre, B. S. Moss' first-run theatre at Broadway and 42nd Street.

The engagement at the Cameo is in response to the overwhelming demand for an extended engagement on Broadway of what public and press alike acclaim as Harold Lloyd's greatest screen achievement. The production will be given an elaborate presentation at the Cameo, opening there about the last week of May.

'POISONED PARADISE' SCORES

B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Picture, "Poisoned Paradise," established its box-office power at its recent engagement at the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, New York, where it was shown last week for the first time in the east.

The picture was lauded by local reviewers. Marion Frances in the Syracuse Telegram said: "This new Schulberg production gives the motion picture public an interesting peep into the actualities of life in the great gambling resort, with thrilling action and minor plots that add zest to the flavor of realism.

DESERT ATMOSPHERE

Edwin Carewe took his company to Africa to make his First National picture, "A Son of the Sahara." The scene above shows the cast taking lunch on the sands of the Sahara. Note Lytell with a bottle.

Clara Bow, whose rise in silver sheet fame is steadily increasing, does some good work as the petite Margot, Harlan gives a refreshing interpretation of the young artist who manages to beat the game. The action is quick and thrilling."

AID TO THEATRE OWNERS

Albany, N. Y.—Governor Alfred E. Smith has signed an amendment to the Labor law relating to the application of the Standard Building Code to cities throughout the state. This will free theatre owners of the objectionable features embodied in the proposed standard code on which public hearings were held several weeks ago in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Albany and New York. The bill becomes a law at once and under its provisions the proposed standard code will not apply to New York City or to other cities in the state that have a bureau of buildings charged with the duty of enforcing a building code enacted by the legislative body of the cities themselves.

'49' GOES TO BOSTON

Messrs. Patton and McConville, leading lights of Independent Pictures, Inc., Boston, came over to the Arrow office last week leaving Heffron to keep the home fire burning in their new offices.

W. E. Shallenberger screened several chapters of "Days of '49" for them and it sold itself. Boston and "points East" will have a new series of thrills and throbs because when last seen on the limited they were laying out an extensive intensive exploitation campaign that will make the New England centers of culture sit up and take notice.

SCHROEPPPEL AT SALAMANCA

Otto T. Schroepfel who resigned as manager of the Strand theatre in Salamanca, N. Y., to accept the position of treasurer of the Shubert-Teck theatre, Buffalo, is going back to the Salamanca post on Monday, May 12, succeeding Walter Trask. It is reported that Eddie McBride, assistant treasurer, will become treasurer at the Teck. Mr. Schroepfel is one of the best known theatre men in western New York. He has occupied several positions along Film Row and has managed several motion picture houses in this part of the state.

WESTERN JUDGE GIVES IMPORTANT DECISION

Ruling on Tax Question May Affect Many Delinquent Tax Payers

THEATRE managers are guilty of embezzlement if they fail to turn over to the collector of the Internal Revenue Department funds received as federal taxes on admission tickets, according to an opinion just handed down by Judge Tillman D. Johnson, of the federal court, sitting in Salt Lake City. Judge Johnson said the offenders may be tried under section 47 of the U. S. penal code.

The former manager of the State Theatre, David Schayer, now known as the Victory, was charged with failure to pay a tax. He was also indicted under the penal code for embezzlement. Schayer pleaded guilty, but counsel submitted and argued a demurrer to the indictment. It was claimed that the condition of the creditor and debtor existed between government and defendant as is the case where jewelry or other articles are manufactured by firms. There could be no embezzlement in this case as the funds do not belong to the government until paid over.

The court held that the manager of the theatre does not pay the tax on admissions, but collects money for the government. Revenue taxes, the judge declared, fall into two classes: those required to be paid by the seller, such as the taxes on beverages, cigarettes, autos and jewelry; and those required to be paid by the buyer such as taxes on amusement tickets. The law specifically says the tax must be paid by the person paying for admission, he declared. The U. S. District Attorney said in the case of admission taxes, the money belongs to the government as soon as paid by the buyer of the tickets. The judge agreed and overruled the demurrer.

PROMOTER SENTENCED

Harold J. Binney, well known for many attempts to promote moving picture production companies, has been sentenced at Butte, Montana, to from three to six years in state's prison, in connection with the Cigilante Motion Picture Producers company. Binney nipped a number of prominent men for stock. He was arrested several months ago in Santa Rosa, Cal. He has operated in Seattle, Los Angeles and other coast cities, and also has a long record of worthless checks behind him.

FILM LABORATORY FOR WARNER BROTHERS

New Plant Complete in Every Detail for Company's Products

WARNER BROTHERS are showing the progressive stuff out of which they are made so successively that it is hard to keep up with them. On the tail of their announcements of a group of fast-selling current fiction for future production, comes the announcement that they have built the largest concrete laboratory on the coast.

This three story laboratory is the last word in modern equipment. Because of its completeness and scientific correctness, Warner Brothers were given the lowest insurance rate for any building in the world handling films.

The laboratory, with its capacity of two million feet per week, will be ready for operation the first of June. The Warners will henceforth do their own printing of negatives and positives. In addition to the financial economy thus entailed, the time factor will be an important one also. It means that pictures will be released to exhibitors much more quickly and the work under closer supervision.

The installation of this laboratory, occupying ground space of 140x120 feet, makes Warner Brothers the only independent producing film company owning its own laboratory.

It contains five storage vaults, complete ice plants, filters for waters and chemicals, large ventilating system, three big projection rooms and eight cutting rooms.

This combined with the electrical plant, carpenter shop, scene lofts and property rooms, gives Warner Brothers a 100 per cent complete production equipment located in one unit.

SCREEN IN POLITICS

The screen is playing an important part in the political campaign of Missouri. At the Republican state convention at Springfield, pictures were shown of many buildings erected at state institutions during the administration of Governor Hyde.

Delegates also were shown films of state road work in progress and improvements of various kinds. The policy of using the screen to depict the work of an administration is much more forceful than a dozen speeches, an influential Kansas City politician has declared.

DAYLIGHT MOVIES POSSIBLE WITH NEW MACHINE

A new feature was introduced last week in connection with the tenth anniversary celebration at the Mark Strand, when a novel device was exhibited for the first time at any motion picture theatre.

Never before has a theatre exploited its presentations in the lobby through the use of a motion picture projector, and this one is unique in that it shows pictures in broad daylight.

This latest mechanical development in the field of motion pictures is the invention of George R. Macomber of this city, who has been seven years in developing and perfecting the device at an expense which is reported in excess of $100,000.

The machine has the appearance of a phonograph cabinet, operating automatically and continuously, rewinding the film without any attention whatsoever. In brief, its operation may be described as "motion pictures in perpetual motion." Eugene L. Delafield, President of the Picturola Corporation, which is making this first theatre showing of this new device, is authority for the statement that it will mark a new era in connection with the utilization of motion pictures for commercial, industrial and educational purposes, for it "speaks" the universal language.

BOARD OF TRADE DINNER

Albany, N. Y.—There was a big dinner in Albany on the night of May 2, and which included about everybody along Film Row. The affair was in the nature of a get-together dinner and was presided over by Robert Bendell, head of the Albany Film Board of Trade. About 100 were present.

TORONTO AUTHORITIES CURB PRESS AGENTS

Place Ban on Popularity Contests as Initial Move

THE authorities at Toronto, Ontario, have decided to sit down on the press agent and—they have already sat down on him hard in one or two spots. The Police Department, through Chief Dickson, has announced that it already has enough to look after in the chasing of bandits, bank robbers and murderers without worrying their heads over spectacular stunts that are engineered by press agents for theatres and others.

The first move to take the sting from the publicity broadcasts was the decision to ban pretty girl popularity competitions on the ground that they are violations of the Criminal Code. These contests have been quite popular in theatre neighborhoods, and everybody has been satisfied all around except the unlucky competitors who did not win the beauty or popularity award.

One of the last of the popularity drives was staged under the auspices of the Park Theatre, in the Northwestern section of the city, and great business was done at the box office. The prize winner secured 18,000 vote approximately and others had almost as many coupons from theatre patrons in the couple of weeks, thus indicating the popularity of the stunt.

A similar popularity stunt under the auspices of the Danforth Theatre, Toronto, has been halted, it is said, along with other similar projects elsewhere in the city.

The Police Department also rapped the knuckles of a number of neighborhood theatre proprietors because of their alleged leniency in permitting children under fifteen years of age to enter the theatres unaccompanied by adults. Officers conducted a round-up and secured six cases but those summoned were remanded by the Magistrate to secure the evidence of the children themselves. Exhibitors summoned included Allen Liscombe, Louis Feegan, A. Lester, J. Cohen, S. Freedman and H. Alexander.

MARYLAND M.P.T.O. HOLDS VERY INTERESTING SESSION

That the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland intend to keep in the advanced ranks among the exhibitors of the United States was very evident at a largely attended meeting held in the Emerson Hotel in Baltimore on May 1.

President Durkee was in the chair and handled the session in an expeditious and practical manner. Representatives of approximately one hundred and fifty theatre owners were present and the meeting at times was of the most animated character. Among the outstanding matters discussed were those relative to legislation both in the State of Maryland and Washington and relative to the outcome of moves at both capital centers on behalf of the exhibitor. This discussion demonstrated a familiarity with the work of the exhibitors which was only the work of close application and study, as in many instances some of the elements brought to the front were obviously of a complex nature.

LEE-KIRKWOOD CAST

A real all star cast has been assembled for "Another Man's Wife," the third and last of the Lila Lee-James Kirkwood productions for Hodkinson. The four principal roles will be filled by James Kirkwood, Lila Lee, Matt Moore and Wallace Beery and the main supporting parts will be filled by Russell Powell, Chester Conklin and Ralph Yearsley.

DAYLIGHT MOVIE MACHINE

'THE CHECHAHCOS' HAS NOTABLE PREVIEW

*Showing at Ritz-Carlton Speaks Well

THE much discussed Alaskan made production "The Chechahcos" has its premier showing at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York, May 1 before an audience of new paper and magazine writers and exhibitors. Comment indicates the picture to be a decided hit, and a sure-fire box office attraction.

While naturally it is a scenic masterpiece, it has the added advantage of a story replete with heart interest and thrills. No angle of box-office appeal has been overlooked.

The staging at the Ritz-Carlton was masterly. One entered the grand ballroom reception foyer to be met by a weaving ray of multi-colored lights, all of a cold tone. Three beautiful white silk drops were hung at the stage end of the ballroom. Three flood-lights with specially painted lenses threw on these drops in varied colors scenes from the production. As the Paul Whiteman Orchestra started the house lights were slowly dimmed down and the lights on the "drops" intensified. The overture ended, a singer rendered the stirring Johnson number "The Mush-On." Then the center curtain slowly parted and an introductory reel showed scenes of President Harding's visit to Alaska and to the location of "The Chechahcos" company. The final scene showed the company arriving on location in a government train. This shot dissolved into the main title of the feature.

Scenes showing an explosion on the boat were intensified by means of sheets of flames on the side screens. Throughout the picture the side screens were used for softly floating pictures of snow and ice, but so cleverly were these handled that they in no way detracted from the main feature.

The special electrical effects were worked out by Fred Murray, electrical scenic artist for virtually all the big musical comedy and dramatic attractions. Details of the presentation were in the hands of James C. Bradford and H. Elliott Stuckel, of Associated Exhibitors, was in general charge of arrangements.

Associated Exhibitors started the production on its way with a big hurrah and the initial presentation left nothing to be desired.

F. B. O. Schedule

That F. B. O. plans an exceptionally active season is shown by the announcement that the company will make between 36 and 40 pictures this year of which 12 will be superfeatures, 12 specials, and 12 western and out of door pictures. In addition there will be another two reel series to follow the Telephone Girl. Among the supers will be four by Emory Johnson and four Santel Productions. The first productions will be "The Spirit of the U. S. A." and "Fools in the Dark."

OTTAWA FOR DAYLIGHT SAVING

Ottawa, Ontario, is to have daylight saving once more, regardless of what the rest of Canada does, according to announcement made at the Ottawa City Hall on April 15, a formal motion having been presented in the City Council for the advancement of clocks from the end of April to the end of September this year. In Montreal, which is Ottawa's nearest civic neighbor of importance, a considerable number of storekeepers and large employers of labor have organized a Daylight Saving Association for their own observance of "summer time," regardless of what the Montreal civic authorities do in the matter.

TRUSTEE APPOINTED FOR CANADIAN COMPANY

Decision of F. B. O. to Do Own Canadian Distributing Causes Action

ANNOUNCEMENT was made at Toronto, Ontario, on April 26 of the appointment of a trustee for the United Exhibitors of Canada, Limited, with headquarters at Toronto, the business of the company being placed in the charge of the Capital Trust Company, Limited, as trustee. This development occurred following the decision of the Film Booking Office to organize a direct chain of F. B. O. branch exchanges in six Canadian cities to take care of Canadian distribution. United Exhibitors of Canada, Limited, was organized last summer as a film distributing enterprise under the auspices of a number of independent exhibitors and others. Several months ago announcement was made of the appointment of Phil Hazza, former branch manager at Winnipeg for Universal, as general manager for United Exhibitors. With the opening of the new F. B. O. offices in the Dominion, Mr. Hazza took charge as Canadian general manager for F. B. O.

United Exhibitors was an outgrowth of the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Limited, which was organized a number of years ago under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Protective Association of Ontario, with J. C. Brady, proprietor of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, as president. This association became extinct with the organization last fall of the M. P. T. A. in Canada. An almost parallel development was the establishment of United Exhibitors as a successor to the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange and there were some who were inclined to link the name of the M. P. T. O. with that of United Exhibitors of Canada.

The withdrawal of F. B. O. to form its direct Canadian branches undoubtedly led to the present position of the Exhibitors' exchange.

ARMY MEN SEE 'AMERICA'

Military men who know the thrill of high adventure attended in a body at the Wednesday evening, May 7, performance of D. W. Griffith's "America," at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre. The orchestra floor was reserved by the New York Chapter of the Military Order of the World War, an organization composed entirely of commissioned officers who served in the World War, and of which Brigadier General John H. Bradley is commander. The theatre was specially decorated, and speeches were made by officers of both the army and the navy prior to the opening of the performance and during the intermission. The Fifteenth Regiment military band was present and furnished music during the intermission. Members sold the tickets at benefit prices to raise a fund for the chapter through which needy and disabled soldiers are aided.

GRAND CANYON FROM AIR

One of the most thrilling air pictures ever made is contained in International Newsreel No. 38. It is a motion picture made by two International staff cameramen in a flight through the Grand Canyon by special arrangement with the United States Army Air Service—an undertaking involving tremendous risk.

Several flights were made to the Grand Canyon for observation, after which the base was shifted from Las Vegas to Kingman, Arizona, where a better landing field was available. Finally everything was ready for the flight and the planes took off with wind and weather most favorable. At the Grand Canyon the two planes at first flew a thousand feet or more above the rim. Then suddenly one plane dived downward, followed by the other, and descended first one thousand and then two thousand feet below the rim.

In parts the Grand Canyon is more than a mile deep. The pictures show the planes flying through the great gorge. The pilots had expected air pockets and bumpy winds, for at times terrific wind storms sweep through the canyon, but luck favored them with the result that a most astonishing picture was obtained.

LEADERS ALL

Raymond Pawley, Financial Executive

ONE of the lesser known of the important motion picture executives is Raymond Pawley, treasurer of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from its inception. We are speaking of the trade at large, because among those who have to do with the financial side of motion picture making and distribution Mr. Pawley has been a familiar figure for many years.

It was twelve years ago, to be exact, when he cast his lot with the motion picture. Mr. Pawley was in 1912 in the real estate and insurance business in Asbury Park, the big ocean resort town in New Jersey, which state, by the way, is that of his birth, he having been born in Lakewood.

All of Mr. Pawley's business life had been spent in the Park, and among his investments was a valuable bit of unimproved property. On this land he erected a theatre, the Lyric, at that time the largest and best in the municipality, with 1,000 seats.

After a diligent search for a manager for the Lyric Mr. Pawley employed William E. Smith of Newark. After that business problem had been most happily solved the new owner found he was faced by another—that of securing satisfactory product for his fine new house.

It was just at this time that Adolph Zukor entered upon the scene with his first personally made feature product—"The Prisoner of Zenda." Mr. Pawley and his brother organized the Famous Players Exchange and contracted for the rights of the output of the Famous Players organization for New Jersey.

LATER the first picture of Famous Players, "Queen Elizabeth"—a foreign made subject—was taken over for distribution and a second office was opened in Philadelphia.

When the Lasky Company entered upon production the two exchanges added its outlet to their list.

Mr. Pawley was one of the five organizers of Paramount Pictures Corporation, the others being W. W. Hodkinson of San Francisco, Hiram Abrams of Boston, James Steele of Pittsburgh and William L. Sherry of

LEADERS ALL—RAYMOND PAWLEY

BECAUSE prior to his entrance into the motion picture industry he accumulated many years experience in general business; because before coming to the exchange division of the industry he learned the difficulties encountered by the exhibitor and never forgot them; because by reason of the sound judgment he brings to business problems fortified by his wide knowledge of contract forms and business procedure his counsel is highly appreciated.

New York. Mr. Hodkinson became the president of the new body and Mr. Pawley the treasurer.

An additional exchange was organized, in Washington, and Mr. Pawley began distribution of the Paramount product in the territories of New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

In his real estate work Mr. Pawley, although not a lawyer, had had much to do with contracts. Consequently it was the natural thing for him to think along the lines of agreements between business men.

AS the chief fiscal officer of Paramount he supervised the contracts that were drawn between the distributing company and the Famous Players, between the company and the Lasky company and later Frank Garbutt of the Bosworth company.

Consequently it was perhaps a logical outcome of securing a guaranteed product for his exchange that he should seek to secure for that material a guaranteed outlet. So it was that he made contracts with exhibitors stipulating that the latter on their part would take the pictures that his exchange would release.

So far as known these were the first of the block bookings to be made in the East—Mr. Hodkinson previously, as Mr. Pawley learned, had adopted the same methods in the West.

Mr. Pawley retired from the Paramount Corporation simultaneously with Mr. Hodkinson. In December, 1917, at the organization of the Hodkinson Corporation he became its treasurer. At the beginning of the present year at the time of the reorganization, when F. C. Munroe became president of the company, Mr. Pawley took over also the office of first vice president.

Mr. Pawley's experience as an exhibitor always has been helpful to him in handling distribution problems. It gave him the theatre owner's slant on the questions of the trade and an appreciation of the "other side of the shield" as it looks to the man who buys films—in other words, exhibitor needs.

He came into the exchange business without prejudices and at the closing of one era and the beginning of another. Up to that time the bulk of the exchange business had been done by companies like General Film and the Mutual.

EMPLOYEES entering the Paramount exchanges formerly had been affiliated with old line exchanges. Frequently Mr. Pawley was told that "You just can't do this thing that way. It is not being done and never was."

Nevertheless he saw reason why the film business should be any different from the real estate or any other business with the details of which he was familiar. His decision to make contracts with exhibitors promising on the part of the exchange to supply product to them even in advance of its being made and to protect the buyer from subsequent overbidding was one of the occasions when he brought protests from his new assistants.

Two Camps

LAST week Exhibitors Trade Review declared there is room in the United States for but one organization of theatre owners. It reiterates that statement. Conversation with several officials of exhibitor bodies during the past week has confirmed us in the view that the position taken in the issue of May 10 is right.

There is one man above others whose rights in the controversy are paramount—that is the theatre owner less fortunately placed than some and who in many cases has to lean on his brothers for aid in the emergencies that are bound to arise in the course of his business life.

The big fellow is pretty well able to take care of himself.

The president of one of the Allied States Organization in a letter received this week says: "I fully realize the great importance of a national organization of theatre owners. I am very heartily for it, but I have not much hopes of a successful organization at the present time."

Referring to the present head of the National Organization he remarks: "Personally I like Sydney very much." The latter opinion so far as our experience goes is pretty unanimous.

Speaking of the Allied States Organization the writer remarks that it is getting along very nicely handling things in a National way with little expense to anybody.

"We have a system of swapping information and we are going to meet every sixty days," he says, "therefore the expense will not be burdensome on anybody and we will be free of all political entanglements."

"We have in our group all of the large organizations of the South, Middle West and Northwest. We do not get the publicity, it is true, that our friends get, but we don't want it and don't care anything about it. What we want to do, is to accomplish things for the common good of the industry with the least noise possible."

A prominent member of the Theatre Owners living several hundred miles from New York writes that he is heartily in accord with the sentiments expressed by us last week. Also he promises every aid in his power to further the recreation of "one National body."

* * *

IN the city the past week have been several officers of the Allied States Organization, including its chairman and secretary. One point impressed upon us by these theatre owners is the importance given by them to the body as a whole rather than to any individual in it.

This is very fine so far as it goes, but we submit that any successful organization, one which aims to be a "going concern," must have a recognized head. This is true whether the tenure of office be two months or one year.

Exhibitor organization in the United States to-day is marking time. The method of operation of the Allied States body is an expedient purely, adopted because of the surrounding circumstances and the peculiar situation of which it is an outcropping. No one of those who have helped to create it will say that it is the ideal form of exhibitor organization. They do maintain that it serves its purpose at the present time.

That purpose, of course, is to protect the exhibitors in those states which officially have withdrawn from the national body.

The national organization hardly can be satisfied with its present status, with ten states outside its fold—and all of those organized.

Members of the seceding group of states say they have received no invitation to attend the sessions of the national convention in Boston. This may be due to an oversight, or it may have been the intention to send the invitations later on, as there yet remains some time before the get-together on May 27.

We hope this will be done, that the invitations will go to every Allied body. We are not in a position to say they will be accepted, but we will say we think they should be. In any event, the national body will be in the position of having extended the olive branch, without which action on the part of somebody no conciliation will be possible.

* * *

TWO camps of exhibitors means one camp too many. The time to reduce that overhead is now, prior to the Boston gathering.

The Allied body has something tangible to bring to the national body besides membership. It has experience in organization, in the old form and the new.

The differences between the two bodies easily may be settled around one table. The big point now is to get the representatives around it.

The initiative for action that may have large results rests with one man, Sydney S. Cohen. Even if he sends invitations and the results be disappointing or absolutely nil he will have the satisfaction of having done the right thing, the creditable thing, and incidentally the courageous thing.

'DOROTHY VERNON' IS MARY PICKFORD'S BEST

Love Theme Grippingly Dominates Tale of Old England, Lavishly Made and Finely Acted

DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL. Mary Pickford Presents a Marshall Neilan Production. Released by United Artists. Adopted by Waldemar Young from the Novel by Charles Major. Photographed by Charles Rosher. Length, About 9,500 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dorothy Vernon	Mary Pickford
Sir George Vernon	Anders Randolph
Sir Malcolm Vernon	Marc MacDermott
Lady Vernon	Mme. Daumery
Sir John Manners	Allan Forrest
Earl of Rutland	Wilfred Lucas
Queen Elizabeth	Clare Eames
Mary, Queen of Scots	Estelle Taylor
Earl of Leicester	Courtenay Foote
Dawson	Colin Kenny
Jennie Faxton	Lottie Pickford Forrest

Dorothy and Sir John Manners in childhood are by their fathers formally betrothed, the marriage to take place on the girl's eighteenth birthday. Prior to the stated time Sir George Vernon decides the bridegroom shall be his nephew, Sir Malcolm. Rutlands are barred from Vernon lands on penalty of death. Sir John surreptitiously visits Dorothy just before the wedding and introduces himself as Malcolm. Dorothy falls in love with him. When he reveals his identity she spurns him—temporarily. As a result of intrigue Sir John goes to the border and escorts Mary Queen of Scots to his father's home. Elizabeth while being entertained by the Vernons is told of Mary's whereabouts and decrees the death of Rutland and Sir John. Malcolm is prevented from carrying out his intention to murder Elizabeth by the warning of Dorothy and the arrival of Sir John, who slays the conspirator in a sword fight in the Queen's bedroom. The sentence of death on Dorothy and her father and on Sir John and his father is withdrawn. Dorothy joins Sir John when he departs for his year's banishment in Wales.

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

DISREGARD that stilted synopsis. It will give you no conception of the beauty and the poetry, the charm and the majesty of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." Costume picture it is, yes—and a marvelous one at that. But behind it and under it and running through it all the way, from the flash of the initial title to the drop of the final curtain, is a tale of love and chivalry, of the attraction of youth for youth, of the abhorrence of youth for middle age, of a stern and unbending father and a daughter as violent—and as tender—as himself.

Shining through the picture are all the color and glamor and romance of the Elizabethan age, the golden period of Old England, portrayed with all the wealth and all the art of today.

It is a story that will appeal to the intelligentsia and the groundlings. Its appeal to the eye never flags, but above and beyond that and absolutely submerging it is its appeal to the heart.

Tears? Maybe a few, not enough to matter. You have no time for them. You are carried along with the sweep of an absorbing tale, you are transported back nearly four hundred years and are looking in on a drama of life that is being enacted before your eyes. It is 1562, not a year later.

It is Mary Pickford at her best.

And it is the motion picture at its best—and greatest.

The foregoing lines were written just after returning from the showing. Taking up the story the following morning there is no disposition to recant a single word of what has been said.

The production is flooded with high lights—of clash of strong wills, of combat between skilled swordsmen, of intrigue to gain a throne, of gentle plotting between determined lovers—tense scenes alternate swiftly between tenderness and sternness.

The work of Director Neilan and Photographer Rosher match to the full the grip of the story and the skill of the players.

Miss Pickford capitalizes all the experience of her years on the stage and screen. Seeing her in this picture it is hard to believe they have been so many.

In her support is a sterling cast. Allan Forrest as the lover is ideal. Anders Randolph in the role of Sir George, the father of Dorothy, the vitriolic, vindictive and sometimes melting head of the house of Vernon, is capital.

Marc MacDermott is seen as the lover chosen by Sir George after the latter has repudiated the choice made in Dorothy's childhood—a splendid interpretation. Others deserving high mention are Clare Eames as the plain and jealous Elizabeth, Wilfred Lucas as Rutland. Estelle Taylor as Mary Queen of Scots. Courtenay Foote as Leicester and Lottie Pickford Forrest as Jennie Faxton, the maid of Dorothy.

The production is one the exhibitor may advertise with a light heart. He may make a personal appeal to those in his community who rank as the most scrupulous in their selection of entertainment; he may send for the educator and the minister, the professional and the business man and the man who labors with his hands.

He will find it practically imperative that he provide children's matinees—for the picture will visualize for the young as it will indeed for the older all they have read of the "good old days."

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" is a great picture in every sense of the word.

'When a Girl Loves' Possesses Strong Sensational and Romantic Appeal

WHEN A GIRL LOVES. Associated Exhibitors Photoplay. Author and Director, Victor Hugo Halperin. Length, 5,876 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Sasha Boroff	Agnes Ayres
Count Michael	Percy Marmont
Dr. Luke	Robert McKim
Helen	Kathlyn Williams
Czarina	Mary Alden
Rogojin	George Seigman
Peter	Otto Lederer
Fania	Ynez Seabury
Grishka	John George

The Russian revolution reduces the Boroff family to poverty. Sasha Boroff, in love with Count Michael, is saved from a forced marriage to Rogojin by the latter's sudden death. The Boroffs go to America, where Sasha agrees to wed wealthy Dr. Luke. At a concert she recognizes Michael when she hears him sing, he having been reported dead. He is married. A love affair between Dr. Luke and Michael's wife results in a shooting affray between the ex-Count and Luke. They miss each other, but Sasha is wounded in the arm. The shock leaves Michael prostrated. He is restored to health by Sasha's dwarf friend, Grishka, who has discovered a cure with radio-vibration.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

AN unusual picture, produced on a big scale, with a cast of prominent players, "When a Girl Loves" has all the earmarks of a successful box office asset. It is crammed full of exciting melodramatic incident, handsomely photographed, and embraces a wide location range, the earlier scenes being staged in revolutionary Russia, the later in the United States.

Credit must be awarded Victor Hugo Halperin as author and director, for turning out a feature which moves quickly, is rich in sensational episodes, romantic lure, elaborate settings, and may be listed as possessing universal appeal for at least ninety per cent of movie patrons. There may be some critical folks who will not be disposed to take the story seriously, so far as its relation to actual life goes, but even these can scarcely fail to find it entertaining to a certain degree, and it will surely be pronounced a winner by the majority vote.

We are, however, inclined to think that Mr. Halperin erred in doping out a somewhat vague climax, when he left the future of the two leading lovers a matter of guesswork, so far as the audience is concerned. For although hero Michael is brought back to life by the radio invention of dwarf Grishka, and heroine Sasha merely inconvenienced by a bullet wound in the arm, the first-named is still united to an utterly superfluous wife, and Sasha the spouse of Dr. Luke.

It isn't exactly an unhappy ending, but leaves matters "up in the air," so to speak. Probably the author-director wanted to steer clear of a conventional finish, but for this type of story, a finale bringing the long-suffering sweethearts together in a legal clinch would seem to be clearly indicated.

There's some remarkably good stuff filmed in the Russian revolution scenes, such as the brilliant palace interiors and the mob gatherings. The settings in Sasha's American home and the scene where she sees Michael singing in the theatre are artistically alluring. The heart interest holds good all the way through, and an especially strong situation is put over at the last, when Michael recovers under the compelling force of the radio cure.

Agnes Ayres is at her best in depicting the woes of the ill-starred heroine, Percy Marmont gives a powerful, and at times touchingly pathetic performance in the role of Count Michael and other members of the large and talented cast render efficient support.

The title possesses likely exploitation possibilities and you can surely arrange tie-ups on the strength of the song "Souvenir," by which the heroine recognizes her musical lover. Agnes Ayres and Percy Marmont should be featured, but do not neglect the other players, all of whom are known favorably to the fans. You can boost the story to the limit as thrilling, melodramatic and outlining a tender heart romance.

'THE FORTIETH DOOR' IS A WINNER

Pathe's New Serial Gets Away from the Hackneyed Stunt Picture

*From the novel by Mary Hastings Bradley.
Scenario by Frank L. Smith. Directed by George B. Seitz. Ten chapters.*

By LEN MORGAN

IN its new serial "The Fortieth Door," Pathe raises the standard of serial pictures one hundred per cent. Without the use of spectacular stunts or the usual death defying hero, this story has been made into a chapter picture that holds the suspense of high tension yet keeps the plot well within bounds of reason and logical in situations. It disregards all former serial formulas and proves there is something new under the sun.

We do not mean to imply that this picture lacks spectacular background or magnificent settings; quite the contrary, it is an elaborate production that shows all the characteristics of a feature picture. Its cast is excellent and the direction is something for following serials to pattern from.

The story concerns Allene Ray, as Aimee, and Bruce Gordon, as Jack Ryder, an American archeologist in Egypt. Aimee is believed to be a Mohammedan, yet Jack falls madly in love with her. Her father betroths her to a swindling nobleman to keep from being arrested for trading in narcotics. In the ruins of the Egyptian tombs Jack finds proof that Aimee is a French girl whose parents had been captured by bandits, and Aimee had fallen into the hands of an Egyptian nobleman. All ends well, however, and everyone lives happily thereafter.

Most of the scenes are laid on the desert and no detail has been spared. The work of uncovering the ancient tombs is of timely interest and help make the picture a drawing power. The sandy sheik atmosphere prepares one for the swift action that takes place and makes a wonderful background for the unusual story.

The picture starts off with a bang when Jack falls in love with Aimee at a dance in a Cairo hotel. From then on there is action, not of the impossible strong arm type, but clean logical action that will not belittle the intelligence of critical audiences.

The chapters are broken in such a manner that they leave one in the greatest suspense and we venture to say that those who see the opening chapters will be on hand at every following showing in order to miss none of the sequences.

Exhibitors will make no mistake in booking this serial. It will go well anywhere and will please any audience. It looks like a sure box-office winner.

CAREY IN DASHING ROLE

'The Night Hawk' Brisk Melodrama Offering Good Box Office Possibilities

THE NIGHT HAWK. Hodgkinson Photoplay. Author, Carlyle G. Raht. Director, Stuart Patron. Length, 5,115 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Panther Gann	Harry Carey
Cia Hilton	Claire Adams
Sheriff Hilton	Joseph Gerard
Jose Vadez	Fred Maletesta
Manuel Valdez	Nicholas De Ruiz
Rose Alison	Oreda Parrish
Bill Canby	Billy Elmer
The Horse	El Sang'ruto

Panther Gann, wanted by the city police, escapes with the aid of Jose Valdez. He goes West with Jose. Gann agrees to kill Sheriff Hilton, Jose's enemy, and catches and tames a wild horse which he names El Sang'ruto. Gann falls in love with Cia, Hilton's daughter, and spares her father. After many adventures, he rescues Cia from abductors with the help of his horse, and successfully defends her father from a gang of gunmen. Gann wins Cia for his wife.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

WHEREVER Western melodramas with plenty of pep, romance and swift action are popular "The Night Hawk" ought to bring very satisfactory box office returns. A strong point in its favor is the fact that it starts off in quite different fashion from most pictures of the straight Western brand and works out a surprise stunt right at the beginning.

For it appears at first as if a story of New York's underworld is in the making, the action commencing in the East, with the hero, a city crook of considerable reputation as a dead shot, making a getaway from the police.

But the gent in question, Panther Gann, suddenly shakes the city dust from his shoes and hustles out West, where he has promised to plant a few leaden pills in the carcass of one Sheriff Hilton. Personally, Gann hasn't anything against Hilton, it being merely a job which he has taken in hand for the benefit of Jose Valdez, who helped him escape from the cops. But the Panther falls in love with Hilton's daughter, experiences a sudden change of heart, is wounded saving her daddy from his enemies and subsequently wins the girl.

At the initial glance it might seem that Mr. Gann is a bit too cold-blooded a proposition to win the sympathy movie audiences lavish on a hero. But it has been shown on countless occasions that a reformed crook always "gets by" with flying colors on the screen, and the sharpshooting Panther proves no exception to that golden scenario rule. A reckless, light-hearted ging, with a charming disregard of the conventions, he sort of captivates you from the go-off, and it's quite a relief, when he does a reverse English on his original intention of bumping off Sheriff Hilton, and becomes a terror to the bad guys instead.

There's a good deal of originality in this idea of transporting a N'Yawk gunman to the West and having him display his scrapping abilities. Incidentally, we are made aware that Gann is largely a victim of circumstances, having been railroaded early in life to the pen for a crime he didn't commit. This makes his reform, when he comes under a girl's influence, all the more logical.

You can exploit this as a Westerner of entertaining qualities, full of zippy action, offering many thrills, unfailing heart interest; a colorful melodrama, appealing to young and old alike. Play up Harry Carey, the fans all have a warm spot in their hearts for this dashing actor, and mention Claire Adams, Joseph Gerard and Fred Maletesta.

'THE CHECHAHCOS' IS ENTERTAINING DRAMA

Story of Alaskan Gold Rush Vividly Portrays Incidents Tragic and Comic of Early Days

THE CHECHAHCOS. Distributed by Associated Exhibitors. Produced by Captain Austin E. Lathrop. Written and Directed by Lewis H. Moomaw. Titles by Harvey Gates. Length, 7,600 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

"Horseshoe" Riley	William Dills
Bob Dexter	Albert Van Antwerp
Mrs. Stanlaw	Eva Gordon
Professor Stanlaw	Howard Webster
Richard "Cold" Steele	Alexis B. Luce
Baby Stanlaw	Baby Margie
Ruth Stanlaw	Gladys Johnston
Pierre	Guernsey Hays
Engineer	H. Miles

Riley and Dexter save Baby Margie when an Alaskan-bound steamer is destroyed by a boiler explosion. Steele deceives Mrs. Stanlaw and permits her to believe her little girl has been drowned. Margie grows to young womanhood and marries Dexter. Steele buys a gambling house, in which Mrs. Stanlaw sings. Dexter and Riley learn of the whereabouts of the mother of Margie, and when they hear Mrs. Stanlaw is preparing to leave for the states, after learning her child is alive, go to Steele's to prevent her leaving the country and to restore her to her daughter. When the house burns Steele binds Dexter to a chair and starts across country. Dexter, liberated, pursues. The gambler is caught in a collapsing glacier and killed. Mother and daughter are reunited.

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

PHOTOPLAYGOERS will be indebted to Captain Lathrop for bringing them something new. "The Chechahcos" is more than a motion picture and an interesting one at that. It is a most vivid record of the days of the Alaska gold rush in 1897 and 1898. But the historical phase of the subject is submerged in its genuinely dramatic quality and its remarkable series of massive scenic backgrounds.

The spectator is drawn into the atmosphere of the production right at the start. A short prologue shows views of the visit of the late President Harding to the north country. They are intimate, and are sure to bring applause reflecting the popularity of the late executive.

The entire subject was made in Alaska, and is said to be the only motion picture ever to be so made. Surely the scenery is a thing apart from any previously shown on the screen.

The cameraman has taken many shots showing wide expanse of snow-covered country. We say "snow-covered" advisedly. No patches of mother earth appear anywhere. It is all white that we see.

The players are new to the screen, but they are competent—and they add to the convincing character of the tale. The fact that the players are unfamiliar to the spectator enhances the illusion that it is a slice of life and not a play on which we are gazing. They fit in with the country. It may be that it is due to the skill with which Director Moomaw selected his characters, for they really have been chosen with excellent judgment.

The titles of Harvey Gates match the story—they are dignified and reflect the spirit and the atmosphere. Eva Gordon, who sustains the role of Mrs. Stanlaw, has beauty and charm as well as dramatic ability. Gladys Johnston, who interprets the role of the baby grown up, is wholesome and finely typifies the girl of the outdoors. William Dills and Albert Van Antwerp, the partners, hold the attention from the start.

One character who appears but briefly upon the stage is that of the engineer of the steamer. He is not a gold lace officer. Being on a small boat, he fires his own boiler, and he is shown in front of the furnace stripped to the waist. The explosion and the following scenes provide one of the dramatic incidents of the story.

There are some stirring pursuits over the snow-covered country. The sleds are manned by full teams of unusually husky dogs. The shots of crumbling glaciers make rare spectacles.

There is a leavening of comedy running through the picture, although as a whole it is a straightforward, serious story of a romance in the lives of several men and women.

One of the notable settings is the home of the well-to-do miners years after they have become settled in the new country. Another is the hotel and gambling establishment of Steele.

In peopling the scenes taken within the last named liberal draft must have been made on the population of the surrounding country. There is more than a suspicion that some of the prominent women of Alaska were portrayed as girls of the dance hall. Many of those seen on the screen certainly had a "way" with them.

As for exploitation possibilities there will be many. Especially available are those connected with summer showings. The picture above all is of ice and snow. It is another "Nanook" in general character, with the large exception that Americans instead of Eskimos play the roles.

You can advertise it as strongly as you wish and invite your patrons to come and see the country which Uncle Sam is developing in the far north. You may assure them they are due for a real treat and they will thank you for it.

Don't be afraid to tell your patrons it is a real drama plus a remarkable scenic.

PATHOS AND HUMOR
IN TURF ROMANCE

Racing Atmosphere and Human Appeal of 'Riders Up' Promise Good Box Office Returns

RIDERS UP. Universal Photoplay. Author, Gerald Beaumont. Director, Irving Cummings. Length, 4,904 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Johnny	Creighton Hale
Henry The Rat	George Cooper
Jeff	Robert Brower
Norah Ryan	Ethel Shannon
Mrs. Ryan	Kate Price
Johnny's Sister	Charlotte Evans
Johnny's Mother	Edith Yorke

Johnny is a race track tout, but has concealed the fact from his New England folks. Norah Ryan is his sweetheart. He makes a big winning and determines to pay a long threatened visit home. But having taken his aged friend Jeff to the track, and persuaded him that Wildflower, upon whom Jeff has staked all his savings, has won, Johnny sacrifices his winnings to make good on the statement. When things look most gloomy, Norah's mother intervenes and enables Johnny to take the girl home as his wife.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

GOOD racetrack atmosphere and sympathetic urge combine with breezy action to make this a bright and pleasing picture which should bring bully box office returns in the neighborhood and smaller theatres.

Although it makes an especially strong appeal to the sport contingent, you don't have to be a follower of racing "dope," or track haunter in order to appreciate the humor and pathos of "Riders Up." For the picture possesses a powerful human interest quality which is bound to exercise a favorable influence upon all who see it, regardless of whether they have trifled with the ponies in or out of the betting ring.

And Director Irving Cummings, for the benefit of those not deeply learned in horse lore, has carefully avoided the laying-on of technical stuff too heavily when dealing with the inner mysteries of the turf. Every community, big or little, high or low, numbers among its members several optimistic souls who are convinced that the short cut to fortune can be discovered by backing the thoroughbreds.

So it follows that to a majority of spectators the sporting characters in "Riders Up" will bring remembrance of folks they have met in real life, all the more so because Johnny the "Sure Thing Kid," his pals and acquaintances are extremely natural, everyday people without an ounce of artificial glamor about them.

You can't help liking Johnny, with his never-fading dreams of the big winning he is going to make some day, which will result in a triumphant return to his rustic New England home, where mother and sister are blissfully unaware that the stray family sheep is grazing in gambling pastures. His romance with the daughter of the boarding house mis-sus, his sacrifice of the "stake" acquired through a lucky long-shot, for the sake of old Jeff, are sympathetic sequences very neatly developed, and a clever surprise twist brings the story to a cheerful and pleasing climax.

The photography includes many interesting scenes at the track and paddock, all beautifully filmed and spreading the local color delightfully with the humble boarding house interiors offering contrasting atmosphere.

Creighton Hale shines brilliantly in the hero role, both he and his pal, as impersonated by George Cooper, lightening the sentimental trend of the narrative with timely touches of bright comedy relief, while Mr. Hale's interpretation of the emotional situations which fall to his share is dramatically effective. Ethel Shannon is a bewitching, piquant Norah Ryan and the support is excellent.

Proper exploitation of the race track episodes will draw the sporting contingent in full force to this film. For those not so much interested in the horses, you can offer the lure of a story with a tender love story romance, brightened by flashes of clean, crisp comedy. Play up Creighton Hale, Ethel Shannon, Robert Brower and Kate Price, all of whom are well known to the movie fans.

JONES IN UNIQUE FILM

'The Circus Cowboy' Offers Original Plot With Strong Juvenile Appeal

THE CIRCUS COWBOY. Fox Photoplay. Author, Louis Sherwin. Director, William Wellman. Length, 4,000 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Buck Saxon	Charles Jones
Bird Taylor	Marian Nixon
Ezra Bagley	Jack McDonald
Paul Bagley	Ray Hallor
Norma Wallace	Marguerite Clayton
Slovini	George Romain

Returning from Africa, Buck Saxon finds his sweetheart, Norma Wallace, married to Bagley. Buck interferes to save Norma when her stepson threatens her. The younger Bagley is shot and killed by the father in mistake for Buck, but Buck gets the blame. Escaping, he joins a circus, where Bird Taylor, a girl who loves him, works. Bagley trails down Buck, but is forced to admit the truth of the slaying. Vindicated, Buck weds Bird.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A GOOD program attraction, which will please most adults and is certain to make a big hit with the juvenile trade, on account of the circus stunts and sawdust atmosphere! Charles Jones' many admirers, in particular, are likely to wax enthusiastic over "The Circus Cowboy," which puts other productions featuring this star completely in the shade, in point of entertaining values.

While the genial Jones appears in his usual cowboy role, the story doesn't follow the usual Western trail, but branches out along totally unexpected lines, with the hero performing riding feats as a circus employee and winning the heart of a fascinating little tight-rope walker. In fact there are many original angles to the picture which lift it out of the conventional class, and Director Wellman has made the most of them.

The melodramatic situations are skillfully worked out, admirable continuity is maintained and there isn't a moment when the action drags. A double villainy deal is put over, with the resourceful Buck as the object of hatred, as he is not only given the worst of it by the wealthy miser who stole his first love, but made a target for revenge by an animal trainer who is his unsuccessful rival for the affections of the tight-rope lady.

One of the big thrills is the scene in which Buck's jealous enemy cuts the rope while Bird Taylor is doing her stuff in the air. Buck spoils this little game by catching Bird expertly as she is hurdling to the floor, a very neat and exciting interlude. Another hair-raising incident, is the acrobatic evolution the hero accomplishes when chased by the sheriff's men. A bullet severs a rope by which Buck is suspended between two towering cliffs, but he swings safely across, climbs up and disappears.

The comedy relief is plentiful and timely, and the circus stuff, filmed with extraordinary accuracy of detail, includes all the wide variety of animal performers and sensational exhibitions of dare-devil stunts associated with first-grade showings under "the big tent." Not the least attractive quality of the feature from the artistic standpoint, is its splendid photography and fine lighting effects.

The cast is strong in talent, Charles Jones has never appeared to better advantage than in the part of the dashing Buck Saxon, Marian Nixon is a piquant, alluring heroine, Jack McDonald and Ray Hallor, George Romain and Marguerite Clayton are excellent in their respective roles.

Play up Charles Jones big in exploiting this one and make it plain that the picture is not only different, but better than any in which he has been starred up-to-date. Go strong on the circus stuff, which will surely attract the kids and make a hit with them. Marian Nixon and Marguerite Clayton are names worthy of a prominent place in your advertising.

Mrs. Allen	Lillian Langdon
Mr. Allen	George Pearce

Mr. and Mrs. Allen have battled for the twenty-five years of their married life and Mrs. Allen is determined that her daughter shall not lose romance through marriage. She advocates the theory that wives and husbands should live together only three days each week and should keep their friends. Alita, the daughter, marries Campbell under these conditions but she tires of the system as does Campbell but neither will admit it. Campbell finally unable to stand it any longer beats up his wife's escort and asserts himself. Alita is glad to consent to lead a conventional married life.

P RINCIPAL PICTURES has hit upon a new idea in picture themes. It has struck a chord that will find favor with movie fans and incidentally should prove a box office winner. It has a pulling title, a well known cast and a good story to tell. What more can an exhibitor ask?

Although listed as a drama, this picture contains more comedy situations than dramatic. With a few touches it could have been turned into a hum-dinger comedy. However, the few dramatic scenes are well done and help point out the moral which in these days of daring youths should not go amiss.

Contrary to what the title suggests, the picture is not a sex affair. There is nothing sensual or in bad taste. It is just a good clean story of the home life of a young married couple and what can be expected when too modern ideas are injected into the business of matrimony. It brings home many points that are being faced in modern homes and will cause a heap of thinking.

Bebe Daniels and Norman Kerry as the young bride and groom are excellent. They carry the weight of the picture but are ably supported by Lee Moran and Arthur Hoyt. Moran is especially good in his fight with Kerry.

Lillian Langdon and George Pearce, as an elderly married couple, offer some good comedy in their portrayal of domestic wrangling. Each time they are flashed on the screen they are found battling.

This picture is enough to make it stand out prominently among the ordinary cut and dried affairs. It has all the necessary ingredients for success and hits close to the homes of most movie patrons. It is light enough to be amusing with subtle dramatic touches to be impressive.

The title will prove a box office asset and the names of the stars should be played up heavily as each has a large following. Principal Pictures has issued a complete press book to go with the picture.

POLA NEGRI WINS
IN LATEST ROLE

Polish Star Scores Decisive Hit as Heroine of 'Men,' a Valuable Box Office Attraction

MEN. Paramount Photoplay. Author and Director, Dimitri Buchowetzki. Length, 6,487 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Cleo Pola Negri
Georges Kleber Robert W. Frazer
Henri Duval Robert Edeson
Cleo's Father Joseph Swickard

Cleo, Marseilles cafe waitress, is lured to Paris by a procurer and there betrayed by a nobleman. The day following, while grieving over her experience, she is accosted by Georges Kleber, whom she repulses. Years pass, she becomes a famous dancer and fascinates banker Duval, but spurns his love. Georges again appears, is favorably received by her, but laughed at when he discloses his passion. He steals money from Duval's bank, where he is employed, and gives it to Cleo. Threatened with arrest, Georges is saved when Cleo, who now loves him, offers herself to Duval in payment. But Duval re-enters and brings the lovers together.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE'S money for the exhibitor in this picture! Magnificently mounted and beautifully photographed, it affords Pola Negri manifold chances to display her emotional ability in tempestuous scenes of passion, of which that noted star takes full advantage. Also the physical charms of the Polish actress are enhanced by a variety of stunning gowns which cannot fail to arouse the envious admiration of feminine patrons.

The film begins in drab surroundings, a cheap Marseilles cafe, where the heroine plies her humble trade as waitress, which offer a sharply accentuated contrast to the luxurious atmosphere of wealth and festivity depicted when the action shifts to Paris. The theme of a girl's betrayal through the wiles of a gent engaged in the white slave business, and her subsequent adventures in the garden of love, is a delicate one to handle without running foul of the moralists.

Sex lure is the principal factor here, and it is much to the credit of Director Dimitri Buchowetzki that he has managed to avoid coarseness of detail or unnecessary suggestion when molding his material. It may be, however, that the censor's stern hand eliminated some of the more daring incidents, for there are gaps in the continuity hard to account for on any other basis. We fancy, for instance, that the stuff following immediately upon the heels of Cleo's unfortunate encounter with the intriguing Baron in the bedroom was "trimmed to the bone," so to speak. And surely there were more lover escapades than appear on the screen, bridged over by a convenient subtitle which announces that after years of hunger and misery she became famous!

No doubt it is better so! For even as it stands "Men" registers as pretty "strong meat," certainly not intended for juvenile consumption. But it should draw the crowds and send the onlookers home satisfied with Miss Negri's fine acting, the splendid glamor of the carnival scenes, the elaborate settings, the irresistible dash, glow and glitter of it all.

Even the absurdity of the situation where Cleo gives a check for two hundred thousand francs, just obtained from an elderly admirer, to a girl from the streets whom she sees then for the first time and never sets eyes upon again, will probably be not too severely criticized by those who yield to the fascination of the only Negri's exotic beauty and dramatic fervor.

The star is well supported, Robert Frazer winning favor as the passion-stricken Georges Kleber, Robert Edeson scoring a hit as Duval, and Edgar Norton giving a particularly sinister impersonation of the villainous Baron.

You can exploit this picture as offering Miss Negri in a role peculiarly well adapted to her genius, and go as far as you like in stressing the film's photographic charms, the wonderful carnival scenes, the beautiful costumes worn by the star, the story's powerful melodramatic sweep and passionate romance.

Metro's 'Mlle. Midnight' Crowds Pounds of Action Into Ounces of Story

MLLE. MIDNIGHT. Written by John Russet and Carl Harbaugh. Directed by Robert Z. Leonard. A Tiffany Production. Released by Metro. Length, 6,778 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Renee de Quiros Mae Murray
Owen Burke Mont'e Blue
Joao, a bandit Robert McKim
Don Pedro de Quiros Robert Edeson

From her grandmother Renee de Quiros has inherited a midnight madness which comes at most unexpected moments. Her father has carefully guarded her at their great Mexican ranch, where she meets Owen Burke, a young American. That night while Renee attends a fiesta in a nearby town an outlaw leader raids the ranch and murders her father. Renee is taken to Mexico City to live with her father's brother, who is secretly in league with the outlaw to secure the girl's estate. Meanwhile she is kept virtually a prisoner. Burke, who is in love with Renee, enlists the Mexican rurales in a rescue project, which is accomplished after an amazing battle between himself and the outlaw chief, and a clean-up of the gang. Renee and Burke are then married by their faithful friend, the padre.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

AS a story "Mlle. Midnight" is rather hard to swallow, but for action it contains everything but "Custer's Last Fight." In fact this reviewer would not have been the least surprised if Buffalo Bill had suddenly appeared on the scene.

There are more battles, gunfire, bloodshed, and movement to the celluloid inch in this new Tiffany production than could be crowded into the imaginations of a dozen fairy-tale tellers.

One moment an athletic young chap throws a charging bull to the ground with as much eclat as one would give to rolling a cigarette; the next moment the bizarre Renee has climbed to a perilous perch on the roof of the ranch house; a moment later a terrifying bandit exudes love sonnets to her to the accompaniment of a tinkling mandolin, and some moments later a whole gang of ferocious-looking outlaws swoops down on the helpless occupants of a peaceable hacienda and as quick as the flick of a lamb's tail have left arson, murder, and desolation behind them.

In the meantime there are some pretty shots of a village fiesta, in which Renee the irrepressible one becomes the cynosure of all eyes, when she mounts the public dancing platform and delivers a brand of heel and toe acrobatics which is really entertaining. Mae Murray surely is one wild "flabbergasting" Renee. Her antics during the spells of uncontrollable midnight madness embrace all the diversissements of a aPn-mad maiden with the amazing energy for which Miss Murray is noted when the mood moves her.

Mae Murray and Monte Blue carry away the honors, of course, in this peculiar concoction of love, kidnapping and gore-spilling. The showman can best advertise the attraction by emphasizing the presence of the blonde-haired screen favorite in something new.

BUSTER KEATON IN ROLICKING COMEDY

and Innovating Situations

Metro's 'Sherlock Jr.' Rich in Laughs

SHERLOCK JR. A Metro Feature Comedy. Joseph M. Schenck Presentation. Directed by Buster Keaton. Length, 4,065 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Sherlock, Jr. Buster Keaton
His Sweetheart Kathryn McGuire
The Villain Ward Crane
Theirate Parent Joseph Keaton

Buster, as the general utility boy of Hickville's Elite Cinematographic Palace, runs the projection machine, sweeps out, polishes the brass and dusts the instruments of the theatre's two-piece orchestra. However, despite the advantages of this job, Buster aspires to fame as an international sleuth. He backs up his ambitions by studying "How to Detect" from a book. He gets an opportunity to prove his ability as a detecting genius when his sweetheart's father misses his watch while Buster is visiting the house. Buster is accused, but later events prove he is innocent; the watch is discovered, and Buster wins the girl and her father's apology.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

WHEN a reviewer says of a motion picture comedy that it is uproariously funny, it would seem that to add anything further is to dabble in the superfluous.

However, in the case of "Sherlock Jr.," after pronouncing it a barrel of fun, the writer feels that much more can be said without encumbering his opinions with redundancies.

The picture is a winner! Pleasurable entertainment for the family; laughs galore for the case-hardened. Fun for young and old alike. It's just the prettiest piece of feature comedy work the writer has seen in many weeks of movie-going.

Buster Keaton, as captain of this comedy ship, has a grip on the wheel which makes the old bark just nibble out of his capable hands. Stormy seas and hectic hurricanes are as tame pink teas to him. You realize from the very beginning that if this able skipper wills it, the old schooner will leap out of the briny, do a somersault, and dance a fandango on its keel.

Gag follows gag and stunt follows stunt with lightning-like rapidity, and when it seems as though the gagster were at the end of his comedy rope, swish! comes another stunt rich in the elements that make laughs reverberate against four walls like summer thunder before a storm.

Buster Keaton has made of screen comedy a neat tight art. In "Sherlock Jr." he has used a story device which, apart from the gags and comic action, endows the picture with sure-fire audience appeal. This innovation is introduced when Buster's burning desire to achieve great heights as a sleuth reaches a feverish climax in a dream, while he dozes at the side of his projection machine. He becomes entangled in the film which oozes out of the machine. He is wafted through the projection booth aperture and dissolves right into action on the screen. Unless this Scrivener knows not the least thing about human nature, folks are going to register enthusiastic plaudits for this interesting theme.

With "Sherlock Jr." Metro has scored a bull's eye which should ring around the country, for it is comedy of the most wholesome, entertaining order. Buster Keaton merits high praise for this achievement. The exhibitor, in exploiting the film, should throw into the breach all the weight of his showmanship genius, for the picture lives up to the highest promises he can make to his patrons. He should feature a cut-out of Keaton prominently in the lobby. A direct-mail campaign would be an excellent method of appraising folks of the good things in store for them in this picture.

The Big Little Feature

Far East Recognizes Value of Shorts

EVEN Singapore, in the Far East, realizes the value of short subjects. A communication in an Australian trade paper gives a program of a theatre in Singapore in which two short subject shows and one feature show are given each evening. Fans who are partial to short subjects can see a well balanced program of shorts, while those whose tastes run to feature exclusively may go to the late show and see a feature picture.

The first show is scheduled to start at 7:30 and the program is made up of a well chosen list, which in this instance included a chapter of a serial; a two reel Sennett comedy, Snub Pollard, Pathe comedy and a foreign comedy.

The second show at 9:15 was a feature showing Jack Holt and Dorothy Dalton in "On the High Seas."

The correspondent states that the short program is very popular and has a drawing power equal to the feature.

In our own country the exhibitor has been a little backward in pushing his short subjects. He has played all his strength on the features and the shorts have been permitted to travel along as best they can. Times are changing, however, and wide awake exhibitors are realizing the value of good short pictures and giving them at least an even break.

'THE LONE ROUNDUP'

This is a fast moving drama. Jack Daugherty has the lead and he is well supported by an able cast.

Gorwin, a bank cashier, invites Buck's girl, Norma, to leave a dance and see the new vault. She goes, and is followed by Buck. The three are held up, and the vault robbed, but Norma manages to follow the bandits and leave a trail of confetti behind her. When the bank officials arrive, Gorwin accuses Buck of being the ring leader, and the latter is locked up. Later, he is threatened with lynching by the mob who wish to know where the band has taken Norma and their gold.

Buck manages to escape from the lock up and the mob's wrath and follows the confetti trail, arriving in time to rescue Norma, who has been detected and made prisoner by the band. Buck goes down the mine shaft to the cache where the gold is hidden, but is surprised in the act by the returning outlaws. They effect the capture of the robbers in a thrilling manner and regain the loot. The posse arrives and Gorwin is forced to confess his part in the plot.

This is a pleasing short subject and will make a nice addition to your program.

The Spat Family demonstrate the improper way to take care of children. Mrs. Shrewsbury's uncle comes to the home on a visit. He finds two of the neighbor's children there and takes it for granted they belong to his niece and the "Spats" are forced to take up the deception.

Brother Ambrose enters into the spirit of the game and between the three of them they manage to give the children a rough deal. The youngsters take the affair as good natured as can be expected but at last their patience gives out and they yell. The antics of the family to quiet them is a riot. Jumping is the only amusement that appeals to the kids so Mr. Shrewsbury and brother Ambrose exhaust themselves by jumping up and down.

There is a number of clever turns in this picture and it will please.

1 Reel

Paul Terry goes fishing in this one. His underwater scenes showing the home life of fishes is a laugh getter. His cat and dog characters are shown engaged in fishing. The dog has a method of coaxing the fish to the surface then using a mallet with good advantage. This picture is up to Terry's usual high standard and of course your patrons will like it.

'AIR POCKETS'

Lige Conley goes the limit in this thrilling comedy. His flight in a plane is something to behold. The picture is full of tricks and each one brings a laugh.

Conley is the inventor of a folding flivver which will do away with the necessity of a garage. When he demonstrates the arrangement before a group of capitalists the whole thing goes wrong. He then devotes his time to rescuing the capitalist's daughter from a crazy detective. The chase leads into all kind of difficulties and situations which prove very amusing.

The aeroplane flight is the outstanding feature of the picture. A colored mechanic becomes entangled in the landing gear and is carried aloft. He finally lands on a church steeple which he finds occupied by another gentleman of color who has had a similar high ride.

The picture is funny and is safe booking. Conley is a scream.

Charles Chase is a cub reporter on a small newspaper. He is the butt of all the April fool jokes about the office, but when he tries the same jokes on his boss they go wrong. You don't know how many tricks can be played on the first of April until you have seen this picture.

Chase is exceptionally good in this one. The situations are out of the ordinary. His expressions when his jokes refuse to work the way he plans them, are good. He gets many laughs with his unique acting.

This is one of Chase's best pictures and you are safe in booking it.

THERE'S DIRTY WORK AFOOT

When Our Gang gets together you can expect trouble. In Pathe's "Commencement Day" they do everything but tear down the school. Their angelic expressions are assumed for the special occasion.

ON THE FRONTIER

In Pathe's Frontier Series American history is vividly portrayed. The above scene is from "The Dirty Little Half Breed," an interesting drama.

'THE PILGRIMS'

3 Reels

The ninth chapter of Chronicles of America shows the events leading up to and the departure of the Pilgrims for Holland. The gallant little band of dissenters are shown at worship in England and the persecution that follows. They embark for Holland and later sail for America on the Mayflower.

The picture shows the landing of the band at Plymouth and follows them through the first harrowing winter on the American continent. Their hardships and sufferings are portrayed vividly in this historical feature.

The Pilgrims left Holland in August 1620, and they did not land in America until November, after a stormy voyage. There were 120 persons in the party and of this number nearly half died of privation during the first winter, but the remaining ones refused to leave the colony and their determination founded the cornerstone of this wonderful country.

The picture should be shown in the schools and other educational institutions for it portrays with remarkable clearness the life of the Pilgrims and what they endured that they might worship as they saw fit.

You are safe in booking this picture. Your patrons will like it. It has good advertising possibilities and might be tied up with schools and historical societies.

If you like racing this comedy will appeal to you. It shows what can be done in the racing game when one needs $5,000 badly enough to take every advantage. Mack Sennett injected a little of everything in this to make it funny and he succeeded in producing a mirth provoker.

The hero is in jail and is one of the members of the baseball team. The prison contest is a scream. The hero is picked up off the field by a dangling rope from a plane and carried to his old home. The village Shylock is about to foreclose the mortgage on his mother's home so the lad enters the family horse in the country sweep-stakes and comes home a winner and is incidentally cleared of an embezzlement charge against him.

Picture Club Holds Open Forum

An open forum, attended by exhibitors and exchange men and members of the Motion Picture Committee of the Women's City Club, was held Tuesday at Kansas City. Talks were made by A. M. Eisner, president of the Kansas City Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association; Lee Balsley of the Liberty Theatre, A. H. Cole of the Paramount exchange and Jack Roth of the Isis Theatre.

Each told what co-operation of the club and Parent-Teacher Associations would do to elevate the standards for pictures in the Kansas City territory.

"Many hours of untiring, unselfish work have been given by you women in the cause of better movies," Mr. Eisner said, "Your work is an inspiration to showmen and producers as well."

Does Your Theatre Lack Personality? If So Invest It With Yours. Be Human to Your Patrons and Your Playhouse Will Gain Friends

THE most costly theatre in the United States plays always to practically empty houses. It occupies the largest space of any showhouse in Uncle Sam's domain. The cost of its presentations makes the combined fortunes lavished on the Follies, the Opera and the Circus, seem like a miser's misspent nickel. It is situated in the heart of New York, easily accessible, and is palatial. The management has circled the world—civilized and otherwise—for such shows as may nowhere else be seen under one top. Yet no queue clamors for admission. The theatre plays to emptiness.

It is called the Museum of Natural History. It fails to draw because it is a museum—a place where lifeless things are gathered. There are objects valued in excess of the city's bonded debt—but there is no life, no dominating, living, pulsing personality. So thousands of New Yorkers never enter this—their city's most gorgeous showplace. A few casuals wander miles through deserted aisles where occasional attendants keep sleepy, solitary vigil—but that is all. Why? Because folks do not connect the place with any human being whom they know, or of whom they have heard.

IN contrast consider a little white-washed frame structure costing about two hundred dollars and located up in the Bronx where New Yorkers go only under protest. The fittings of this unpretentious showplace may be duplicated in any second hand furniture shop. Yet this humble house is patronized by Gothamites and other "ites" from everywhere. It is known as Edgar Allen Poe's Cottage. Once it housed the long dead genius who penned "The Raven," and his personality still pervades the place. And because it was the home of a personality who made himself interesting and got himself talked about, people from far corners visit it—and pass the Museum en route without stopping.

Is your theatre in the dead museum class? Have you omitted to build your personality into it? Are you known only as the "So-and-So Theatre?" If so, you are neglecting your biggest asset—Yourself. You are your one best publicity stunt. One that never goes stale; one you can build up "day by day in every way" to be "better and better." It can be put across cheaper than any exploitation you ever tackled, and it will make of your theatre the healthy gold mine of which you dream.

Consider Samuel Rothafel—"Roxy" to every radio fan. Thousands of the species attend his Capitol Theatre simply because he has "sold" them his personality over the air route. Their first thought in selecting a showhouse is "Let's go to 'Roxy's' theatre."

Remember that Russian thing—"Chauve Souris?" Balieff, the showmaster, sold that show so hard that blase theatregoers went a dozen times. To see the show again? No. To hear Balieff do his stuff, introduce each act in his inimitable manner. He sold them his personality.

Before the Harlem Opera House turned picture theatre it played Keith vaudeville. The manager discovered a pleasing voice in his stage-carpenter and had him put over a song feature weekly. This carpenter ested in them—that he regrets inability to speak with each individual. So Universal pictures are to them the offerings of a friend who talks chummily to them every week. They see his pictures as you would attend a show billing a friend of yours.

Showmanship success is builded on good programs attractively presented in a pleasing playhouse that the public instinctively thinks of as Bill Jones' Theatre—not as the Palace, or the Star or the Museum of Natural History. When they fail to associate you with your theatre—look out! They don't have to call your place "Bill's Theatre," but get them thinking your name, associating the theatre with your personality. You don't have to stall around ballyhooping yourself through the lobby before and after each show. Here are a few of hundreds of ideas:

TAKE a prominent part in all city welfare activities. Go on committees—and be a useful, not ornamental committeeman.

Tear a leaf from Balieff's book. Get up and chat with your audience for two minutes about your shows—local news, of current interest—what they want. If you simply can't do it yourself, hire some popular local character and feature yourself through him. Just so long as its something human. Personality.

Lend a helping hand to the distressed in your neighborhood. Good acts always advertise themselves—whether on or off stage. "Big Tim" Sullivan held the Bowery in his hand. He was always as ready to take that hand out of his pocket-full as he was to put it in in similar condition.

Be a "Big Brother" to the kids. Let them call you Jim, Jake, whatever name was wished on you. Not dignified? Many a showman has starved to death on a diet of dignity. Help the kids get a baseball outfit and they'll press-agent you to the skies. Organize a boys' club backed by the Board of Trade with a "Better Citizens Than Their Fathers" idea. You'll get the women on that one. You can play this "Big Brother" motif in a hundred flats.

CREATE in yourself a local "character." Print regularly homely, philosophical sayings. Boost your town, as: "Bill Jones sez: 'This town is strong fer you, neighbor, jest so long as you're strong fer this town.'" They are easy to think up and if you want help to get started let Showmanship know. It's not hard to "Build Yourself Into Your Theatre"—but start now to make yourself interesting and get yourself talked about.

Remember old John J. Tut-an-akh-amen, and don't let any mummy have anything on you. Be alive yourself, and your theatre's box-office will reflect your vitality.

Lobbyology

Personality

TUT-ANKH-AMEN was a long time dead and no one ever heard anything about him. He just stayed dead. Then the London Times, Lord Carnarvon and Herbert Carter began to exploit him—and he came to life.

They took a dead-as-dust mummy and gave it personality. And King Tut's personality became famous everywhere. Thousands attracted by the three exploiters thronged to Tut's tomb. Overnight it became the showhouse of Egypt—of the world.

Don't turn your theatre to a tomb. Clothe it in personality—your personality. Make of it a living, breathing thing, and people who pass will pause and enter.

ter-singer made the show. He got the audience singing the chorus. "Whistle if you can't sing," he encouraged. "Who's that girl sneezing it? Hey, you in the sixth row, leggo her hand and give her a chance to sing! Gosh, you're all terrible to-night! Come on, now, once more! Atta-boy! I'm proud of you all. You're the finest bunch of yodlers outside the Alps. Thanks. Come next week for another song-fest. Good-night." And they came next week—and the next. They hung out the S. R. O. for many a not-so-good bill because this sweet soft soap singer sold them his personality. Your town has a good josh-artist, some gum-chewing Will Rogers, who can do for you what was done for Harlem Opera. You could do it yourself.

Self-selling. That's the stunt. What about Carl Laemmle? Everyone reads his signed Satevepost ads. He has convincingly sold an impressive bulk of the populace the idea that he personally is inter-

PROBLEMS of the — Photoplay Poster

By LON YOUNG of Warner Brothers

NOT many years ago a number of motion picture theatres in the Union Square section of New York were threatened with license revocation because of the lurid and misleading lithographs displayed.

Oceans of printers' ink have flowed beneath the bridge of time since those early atrocities yielded to the present high average of art and composition prevalent in picture posters. And the improvement is more marked in each succeeding issue.

The names of famous artists are now affixed to lithograph designs, and taking the general run of paper, motion picture material compares favorably with that of any advertiser.

The creation of photoplay posters does not end with the mere engagement of a well known and high priced artist to execute the designs. Art is desirable and necessary, but too much art in a show poster will defeat the very purpose for which the paper is put out.

Several instances of this have been noticeable in connection with some big productions. One twenty-four sheet in particular was made up from a beautiful sketch in brown monotone. When completed, the entire detail of the drawing was lost in reproduction, and even at close range the subject was almost indistinguishable. This worthless paper cost the producer some twelve hundred dollars. Thus we see what occurs when art work alone is considered.

ANOTHER producer had run out of thrill ideas. He had pictured exciting situations in every possible combination of colors, and layout, and it became apparent that the trend of design would have to be along other lines. This situation caused the "theme" poster to come into being, and after much effort this type had been developed to a point where it has proven most desirable.

With the elevation of photoplay standards, the quality of patronage has also moved up. Intelligent people who once scorned what they termed "movies" are now consistent supporters of the picture-drama. These folks grasp at once the elements of appeal in the posters, and do not insist as of yore that each lithograph carry an actual scene from the production.

The paper for high class productions receives much careful thought and attention. Before entering the actual process of manufacture it is passed on by various departments and executives so that all the many angles of sales and showmanship may be properly developed. For after all the final result on box office receipts is what counts most.

The development of a poster is an interesting process. Sometimes the idea is evolved from a most unexpected source. The six sheet poster on "Beau Brummel," starring John Barrymore, depicts the broken, poverty-stricken Beau seated before an open fireplace staring into the flickering flame in which he visions himself in the ardor of youth placing his heart at the disposal of the lady he had loved and lost.

The theme, sentiment and general idea are all accurately true to the story, but there is not such a scene in the entire production. The poster was evolved from a "still" of Barrymore toasting such a grossly materialistic thing as a sausage on a fork before the feeble fire. The artist adroitly stole the poor Beau's delicatessen dinner, and deftly blended the love scene with the flame. So while Brummel's stomach may have suffered, he was provided with food for the heart—and those who see the poster find optical pleasure.

The ever present need for effective posters is indicated by the ravenous rapidity with which an idea is seized upon and copied. "The Marriage Circle" used a novel combination of colors in a whirling circle. The thought came from the old fashioned "pinwheel" familiar in pyrotechnical displays. By placing a series of three scenes each in the center of a revolving circle, the idea of high tension, confusion and brilliance was instantly conveyed. This theme or motif was utilized all through the pictorial campaign. In less than two months three different productions have used various modifications of the thought.

A POSTER, especially a twenty-four sheet must tell its story at a glance. It must be legible at long distance, and it must be "different." Also it must have adaptability for cut-out purposes. Another important item is the effect produced by different lighting condition on various colors. The artist's sketch may be excellent in all respects, the lithographer may exactly reproduce the color scheme—yet the poster on the board be utterly ineffective. Why? Because the amount and quality of light that struck the sketch differs entirely from that which hits the finished paper. Too much black, for instance, will cause a shiney, reflective surface causing a glare under some conditions, and rendering the design illegible. Yellow is another tricky color. In masses it is effective, but in small spaces, especially next to white, it is practically invisible.

A most useful article in considering poster sketches is a reducing glass, which aids in getting the effect of distance, and in establishing the visibility of the design.

One poster created solely because of its cut-out possibilities is the twenty-four sheet for "Conductor 1492." The design for this poster is a typical trolley car with the various occupants looking through the windows, and a picture of the star in the foreground. The poster has been a big success everywhere. It has been mounted on the sides of real trolley cars, has been made up as a float on motor trucks, has been used to convert lobbies into trolley cars, and has fulfilled many purposes other than its original destiny of adorning a bill-board, where it sticks out like a sore thumb. Although adequate, the art work is not of a high order. But the poster will attract more attention than the finest effort of the most famous illustrator, therefore it is a better piece of motion picture paper.

THE THEATRE SHOW WINDOW AND HOW TO USE IT

L. F. GUIMOND, who cares for the Selznick publicity, lays particular stress upon the importance of lobby displays and window tie-ups.

Lobby displays and window tie-ups are in the same category of showmanship. The lobby is the show-window of the theatre, and by hooking up constructively with the merchant, the exhibitor shares the show-window of the store and uses it for his own purposes diverting the attention of the passerby to his own wares, namely, his current pictures.

Window-dressing, both for the lobby and store window has in mind a double purpose: first, to get attention, and second, to have this attention followed by a visit to the theatre.

How can the producer and distributor help the showman to achieve these important results?

When people stop at the lobby of your theatre, they must receive the impetus that will make them decide to go in, from what is presented to them. The best means are the lobby cards and paintings, if they show scenes from the play that are provocative of curiosity.

These pictures must get this reaction in the mind of the onlooker: "That's the kind of a picture I want to see. I wonder what's going to happen to the girl now?" It must be a disclosure of the kind of story, but with the suspense element emphasized.

The use of posters and poster cut-outs in the lobby and on the marquee, if done conservatively and artistically, is also effective.

In store tie-ups, the exhibition of an object similar to one actually used in making the picture—say, unusual hats or gowns—will attract attention and will tie-up with stills from the production.

Tie-Up Your Theatre With Your Town

IN addition to the National Tie-Up on window displays, here are a few ideas with which to tie-up your lobby, not only with windows, but with the entire town.

Take your first National Tie-Up picture and select a still for lobby display. Let the still depict a minor shot showing a number of props, for instance, a table, a picture, several chairs, a lamp, a mirror, a statuette, a desk and a vase. Paste squares of paper over these props and number them 1, 2, 3, and so on. This leaves visible only the bare interior and the actors shown in the still.

Place the still in a frame and above put the caption "How Good Is Your Eye?" Below the photo explain: "Watch for this scene! Try to make a mental picture of the furnishings in this room in locations as numbered. After the performance, write them out and drop them in the Contest Box. If you answer is correct, you get a free ticket to next week's attraction." Have a box handy in which to deposit the answers, and paper listing the numbers and having a place for name and address of contestant.

Lobby Lures

In the tie-up window you may place an identical still, pasted up in duplication of the one in your lobby. A card may ask: "How Good Is Your Eye? Visit Lobby of Blank Theatre for Answer." Thus you have a tie-up working from your lobby to the window and back to your lobby again. It is human to enjoy an interesting puzzle, and folks like to prove to themselves their ability to meet an efficiency test of this nature.

The winners may be announced from your stage, and also posted conspicuously in the lobby. Incidentally you will be surprised at the small number of passes which you will be called upon to distribute.

Boost the Home Town

The value of a civic tie-up—propaganda boosting the town—cannot be over-estimated. Boost the town and the town will boost you every time. Place a display frame in your lobby and put a caption on its top "The Smithville Boosters." Then underneath: "Watch This Announcement and Help Make Smithville a Bigger, Brighter, Happier Town to Live in. It Is My Town and Yours. Answer the Weekly Question and Win a Prize." Then have a box for answers and one for suggestions.

Here are a few thoughts for starters:

First Week: "Why is Mr. a good Smithville Booster?" Name some prominent man or woman generally known for civic interest, charitable benefactions. He may be a banker, minister, storekeeper—no good citizen will resent this good will publicity.

Second Week: "What Kindly Courteous Act Did You Witness This Week and Who Performed It?" Here is a chance to feature your local dealers by having them report an act of some employee or customer. It's all helping Smithville—and your theatre. Every week the contest boosts the Golden Rule.

Third Week: "What Is a Good Original Slogan to Boost Smithville?" The Board of Trade will be with you on this one. So will the newspapers. They can't afford to stay out.

Fourth Week: "What Practical Suggestion Have You For Making Smithville Bigger, Brighter and Better?" This should start something interesting and you may find yourself in the role of civic benefactor.

Fifth Week: "Who Is the Happiest Person in This Town—and Why?" This one will ring the bell. Every one of these contests is worthy of attention in the local paper. From your lobby echoes the voice of the people.

ONE OF MANY WINDOWS SECURED BY "NIXON"

When the Rex Ingram-Metro production played Pittsburg the Nixon Theatre management demonstrated its faith in the value of window tie-ups. This is only one of several windows located in the city's heart.

Sixth Week: "Why Is Blank's Store a Nice Place in Which to Shop?" You can run this one as many weeks as the town has shops. Of course you feature the dealers with whom you tie-up—or with whom you wish to tie-up.

Seventh Week: "Who Is Your Favorite School Teacher and Why?" This one for the kids. Run it around promotion time.

Work With the Bank

When you get this far you will have everyone in town suggesting ideas for contests. When you deposit your big Saturday night receipts, the bank president will call you in to suggest a contest on "What Is Your System for Systematic Saving?" You can't do better than tie-up with the bank.

You could organize a committee composed of a minister, a member of the Board of Trade and a School Board member to judge the contests. This lets you out. Prizes will be free tickets, and you will be able to get prizes donated by the various stores in exchange for the publicity you can give them.

News Page Ads

These contests have genuine news value. They are boosting the town and it certainly won't be hard to break into the news columns with them. The Board of Trade should back you up on the entire campaign. Dealers will help popularize the contests in their advertising and in their windows. Some very clever show cards could be composed connecting displays in all sorts of shops directly with your current contest at your theatre.

Put and Take

You may think that this town boosting propaganda does not give publicity to your current attraction. But if you will let the town know that you are not selfishly wrapped up in your own business, and actually have their welfare and the welfare of the city at heart, you will reap the benefit. Business and Life are both a game of "put and take"—but you must "put" as well as "take."

Be Human

Invest your theatre and your town with your personality. Make yourself and your theatre an institution—a land mark—known and beloved by the entire population.

It is easy if you will convince the town that you are an altruist. That you are a square shooter, out to boost the town and willing to work shoulder to shoulder with the neighbors in order to better conditions for all.

But you cannot expect folks to warm up to an iceberg. So be "human" yourself.

The Open Door

Let everyone know that you are doing your share to make Smithville a better place to live in. Make of your lobby a Public Forum—a Community Center—a Club for City Boosters—a Headquarters for Goodwill and Neighborliness. Feature the town in your lobby, and the town will come to your lobby to know about itself.

Don't shut yourself in your theatre.

Open your door wide, ballyhoo the town—and the town will come into your theatre through that open door and ballyhoo you.

WHAT'S EXPLOITABLE IN YOUR TOWN?

Sunbury, Pa.—Clover, the oldest horse in the world, lives here. He will soon celebrate his fifty-first birthday. The horse has all his teeth and eats well. He has a full mane and faultless skin and body. He enjoys a pension from the New York Jockey Club, and is owned by a clergyman.

EXPLOITATION:—The Sunbury exhibitor should feature a picture like Pathe's "King of Wild Horses" the week of Clover's birthday.

Play up the fact that Clover is the world's oldest equine. Place a Birthday Box in the lobby for contributions. On Clover's birthday organize a parade to his home and present a loving cup suitably inscribed or some such token.

It might come from "Rex, King of Wild Horses, to Clover, the Oldest Horse in the World." Appropriate ceremonies may be arranged through the town officials.

Newspapers nearby and even the big Metropolitan dailies will be glad to write up the "doings" on Clover's birthday.

A tie-up may be effected with the merchants and other interested in putting Sunbury on the map.

The exhibitor will get plenty of credit for the stunt, will get himself and his theatre talked of, and will make friends of the clergyman who owns Clover and also of his congregation.

P. S.: Poor old Clover "kicked off" just after his birthday—but the idea is good just the same. New York City and other big burg papers gave Clover a big write-up—even in the editorial columns.

WHAT'S EXPLOITABLE IN YOUR TOWN? Tell us—and we'll give you the exploitation.

600 Taxis 'Sell' 'Girl Shy'

A tie-up with six hundred yellow taxicabs was put across by Milt D. Crandall, exploitation chief for Rowland and Clark, in connection with the showing of Harold Lloyd's new Pathe picture, "Girl Shy," in the State and Blackstone Theatres, Pittsburgh, Pa. Each of the spare tires on the cabs was supplied with a tire cover which announced the showing of the film and the houses where it was on exhibition.

Twenty-four sheets were plastered everywhere, also Tack Cards and there were twenty-four window displays and tie-ups.

There is no spot in the city where anyone can go without either seeing the advertisements carried by the taxicabs, or window displays and twenty-four sheets. And

Passes for the Judge

When Mary Printz, who manages the Circle Theatre, Cleveland, cut a hundred feet of "The Marriage Circle" because he considered it too racy for his patrons, Judge James B. Ruhl issued a court order instructing Printz to show the film "as was," on request of the distributors.

Perhaps there was a trick in it. We wonder. Anyhow, this is the ad that came out next day:

BY ORDER OF THE COURT

Judge James B. Ruhl in Common Pleas Court has issued an order restraining elimination of any part of the story of three men and the wives of two of them, as told in Warner Brothers' photoplay "The Marriage Circle," a picture so daring that the management of the theatre wished to keep a part of the action of the screen. The result—You'll see every foot of the sensation! Showing now at the Circle Theatre.

The newspapers came through with space in good shape; attendance jumped fifty per cent, and the picture was "held over."

SIX VERITABLE GOLD MINES IN 'CHECHAHCOS' TIE-UPS

WHEN Congress purchased miles of ice-clad mountains from Russia, the sardonic Slav smiled beneath his whiskers. But whenever was a Yank a pigeon—for long?

Came a squaw-man, one of those turbulent spirits found always at the furthest portals. He scratched the surface of Alaska's soil and made the world gasp.

There was gold! gold!! gold!!!

The Army of Avarice

More rapid than radio the momentous news echoed from Mt. McKinley's heaven-piercing pinnacle to the languorous bayous of the southland. The wild blood of an adventurous ancestry pumped through the high hearts of America, and men flew to answer the summons of the siren.

From metropolis and mudhole, from society and slum they swarmed; soda-clerk and stevedore, gentleman and gangster, all rushed through the Chilcoot Pass in quest of fortune.

'The Chechahcos'—an Epic

Such is the theme of this week's National Tie-Up film. More than a motion picture—"The Chechahcos" is an epic as unforgettably penetrating as the blast of the North wind. A record wrought in glacial ice by Titans blinded with the glitter of gold. A tale told in the blood of men on glistening pages of everlasting snow.

Forget the seductions of steam heat—your cushioned car—the restaurant repast served by a watchful waiter—the merry melody of music—light laughter—the winsome witchery of women. Leave behind the vaunted luxuries of civilization and come with "The Chechahcos" to wrest from Alaska's frozen breast the twin rewards of gold and glory.

The Story—Briefly

A pitifully frail craft loaded to the gunwales with the flotsam and jetsam of a gold rush.

"More speed," bellows the skipper to the engine room.

"She won't carry another ounce," yells back the sweating engineer.

"Hell's bells!" roars the officer, "give her steam, man! We're going after gold!"

Orders are orders. The boiler explodes. The ship sinks.

Some live—many die.

"Horseshoe" Riley is no "chechahco"—no tenderfoot. He is a "sourdough"—an old timer. "Horseshoe" gets his pal Bob off safely in the unsafe lifeboat. They save the baby, too. Her father was killed. What happened to her mother?

A Knife Hurling Villain

That's where we meet the villain. "Cold" Steele, with a heart as hard as granite and the ice of the Yukon in his veins. He let the others work, and copped their coin by pander-ing to their vices—gaming, booze and dance-hall women. "Cold" Steele—he used a gun when he had to, but between his shoulder blades hung a knife. Though many yards lay between him and the object of his wrath—a quick, dexterous twist, and the dagger came hurtling through the air to drink life blood from the throat of his victim.

'The Nightingale'

And he "got" the baby's mother, Mrs. Stanlaw. "What else could I do?" she pleads. Separated from her baby girl, her husband killed, she metamorphoses into "The Nightingale" and for twelve years reigns Queen in Steele's mining camp dive.

But "Horseshoe" Riley and Bob bring up the kid. She is their luck. They strike gold—lots of it. The baby blossoms forth into wondrous womanhood—and loves "Horseshoe" as a father. But she loves Bob as a sweetheart.

Heart Aches and Happiness

Then Mrs. Stanlaw, "The Nightingale," learns that her child is still living—and the girl finds out who and what her mother is. The mother loves her daughter's memory well enough to go "outside"—back to "the States," and never be heard from more. But the daughter loves her missing mother enough to go to her. She does so—and they are reunited.

In the end everything looks lovely for Bob and Ruth, and there is more than a suspicion that old "sourdough" Riley may become daddy to them both by marrying Mrs. Stanlaw.

Nature's Settings

Such is the story of "The Chechahcos." Its background is a vast expanse of Alaskan snow; the rushing, roaring, ice-bound waters of the Yukon; the cracking, crushing, crash of glaciers. Glaciers—towering ice-mountains

Dig Into Tie-Up Mines For Box-Office Gold

DON'T swing a pick in the frozen wastes of Alaska to secure "pay dirt." That was done way back in '96. The 1924 gold rush will come right to your box-office, if you will take the tip-off on National Tie-Up window displays. They will surely "pan out."

They cost you nothing but the mild exercise of clipping the coupons, and the two cent stamp that pays Uncle Sam for postage to EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

which move by inches from the Pole, and splinter off thousands of tons at a time to form gigantic ice-bergs such as crushed the "Titanic."

Golden Tie-Ups

Gee! what a picture for National Tie-Ups! What a show to sell your patrons through window-displays!

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW has lined up some knockouts for this National Tie-Up with national advertisers.

Let's look 'em over! Here they are.

Borden Condensed Milk

Here is a product that actually participated in the Alaskan gold rush. Every "chechahco" and every "sour dough" had to "pack" his "grub" back in '96 and it consisted principally of canned food. The chief requirement of all was milk. Then, as now, Borden's was worth its weight in gold. A window card might read:

"Everyone Knows About
Borden's Condensed Milk
But What Are
"The Chechahcos?"
Learn the Answer at the

Knit Underwear

The Associated Knit Underwear Manufacturers of America are with you on this picture. They represent seventy-five percent of the industry, and their advertisements reach 25,000,000 readers and 40,000 retailers, through national magazines, farm journals, newspapers and professional publications.

This is a timely tie-up, and the window card should point the hot weather value of Zepherized Knit underwear, and the coolness of the Alaskan picture. For instance:

"Enjoy the cool comfort of Alaska with
"The Chechahcos"

At the City Theatre
And keep cool all summer in Zepherized Knit Underwear."

Auto Vacuum Freezer

The Auto Vacuum Freezer Company sells ice cream freezers all over the world—even in Alaska. The product is nationally advertised and nationally known, and will tie-up in a hundred ways with the picture. There isn't a still in the production that doesn't arouse a subconscious thought of ice cream—for every shot has a background of ice and snow.

Tie-ups galore will suggest themselves, but as an example:

"If You Want to be sorrowfully heat-weary this summer

DON'T buy an Auto Vacuum Ice Cream Freezer
DON'T see "The Chechahcos" at the City Theatre.

Sterno Canned Heat

Everyone is familiar with the wonderful little energy tin put out by the Sterno Corporation. It is invaluable for camping comfort or for any use where quick heat is essential.

The tie-ups are quite obvious. One of a hundred catch lines would be:

"Sterno Heat is Canned Comfort
You'll appreciate the boon of heat
When and where you want it after you see
"The Chechahcos"
At the City Theatre."

Thermo Sport Coats

The doubly guaranteed all virgin wool, knitted sports coats, which come "from the sheep's back to yours." They just maintain a natural body-warmth, and are wearable at all seasons. A window display of these out-door habiliments will fit in perfectly with the apparel worn in "The Chechahcos" stills. One catch line that suggests itself automatically is:

Wear a Thermo Sport Coat
To Keep the Chills From Your Spine
When You See "Cold" Steele
In "The Chechahcos"
City Theatre

La Palina Cigars

Here is a product advertised to millions. Each day some 800,000 of these smoke satisfactions are consumed by an enthusiastic public. In the many chechahcos stills there are cigars in action.

Imagine the gold miners with "pokes" full of "dust" and not a La Palina to be had. We would like to have the Yukon agency. This tie-up will attract the men—and the men will bring their families to your box office. Here is just a suggestion for a window card:

Get All Excited Over
"The Chechahcos"
At the City Theatre
Then Light A Palina And Love
Its Nervine Aroma

On their way to fame or failure. The last lap of the journey to the gold fields. "The Chechahcos" packing their own food, building their own boats in a mad dash for wealth, as shown in Associated Exhibitors Alaskan epic.

Keeping You Cool!*

THE story of the Klondike—in the land of the Yukon—as told in "Chechahcos," so strongly suggests the idea of keeping cool that it is extremely doubtful if, anywhere in the world, there could be a better exploitation tie-up for you than that you can get from the Auto Vacuum Freezer Company through their

'CHECHAHCOS' Window Displays

ALL you have to do is sign the attached coupon, giving us your Chechahcos play dates, and the big co-operative merchandising ball will be started rolling. You will then reap the benefit of all the national advertising on the greatest ice cream freezer in the world. A freezer simply constructed with only three parts, requiring only a small portion of ice, extremely sanitary, and sold under a guarantee. In fact, you will be doing the great American Family a good turn in every instance by associating your playing of Chechahcos with the Auto Vacuum Ice Cream Freezer.

Clip the Above Coupon and Keep Everybody Cool

THE most dominant atmosphere about the picture, Chechahcos, represents a "keep cool" theme—a story of Alaskan ice and snow—which is bound to hit with popular appeal during the coming hot weather months. When you advertise Chechahcos you will undoubtedly attract attention with such lines as "Come in and see the novelty hit of the screen the very theme of which will keep you cool." When it comes to a tie-up, therefore, in exploitation, what could be better than the same "keep cool" thought and Knit Underwear. A great majority of all the merchants of the United States are ready and willing to co-operate with you in this connection through the Association of Knit Underwear Manufacturers. You can tie up with the golf idea—boating, motoring, camping — and even working. Whatever the idea, be sure you tie the picture Chechahcos with a window display of Knit Underwear. It means you will be attracting every possible male patron.

'FREEZER' TIE-UPS READY ON 'CHECHAHCOS'

Rich Rewards for Showmen Using Window Displays

JUST as the electric washing machine, and other time and labor saving devices have taken their place in the American home, so has the Auto Vacuum Freezer been adopted as the modern method of making ice cream and other frozen desserts.

The fact that ice cream is really the national dessert and is a year-round favorite proves that ice cream freezers are being sold on a vast scale. And the fact that such a significant commodity has been conscripted as a co-partner to a window display which exploits Associated Exhibitors' wonder picture of the North "Chechahcos," proves that no stone has been left unturned to give the showman playing the picture the last word in free, high power advertising.

Every element in these Auto Vacuum Freezer displays has been coordinated to produce a window that is truly attractive and a drawing card for turning the window shoppers into movie patrons. Interest in both the film and merchandise might be heightened by inserting a catchline in a placard to appear in the display, with the words,

"The 'Chechahcos,' playing at Theatre, had lots of ice around them, but not an ounce that was edible. With an Auto Vacuum Freezer they could have considerably lessened the rigors of the north by producing frozen, palate tickling dainties of the most wholesome flavor."

The season is singularly opportune for a tie-up with an ice-cream making device. And the selling appeal in the case of the Auto Vacuum Freezer is particularly enhanced because the principle by which the freezer works meets the needs of its owner in a way that ordinary freezers fail.

The device is based on the same principle as the vacuum bottle. This means the absence of cranking, churning and unpleasant visits to a dank cellar. The Auto Vacuum Freezer is a light, spic and span utensil which can be put on the table without being any more obtrusive than a water bottle. Can you picture its appeal to the housewife? Enough said! The coupon in the Auto Vacuum Freezer ad is here for the benefit of the discerning showman.

LA PALINA WINDOW DISPLAYS HELP SELL 'CHECHAHCOS'

Just how many men will see the message of La Palina Cigars broadcasted in posters, newspapers and other eye-catching mediums is beyond calculation, for already in forty-eight states citizens have come face to face with the bold La Palina poster and a hundred newspapers are carrying the advertising message of a smoke that brings satisfaction to its users.

There is the cue for the showman playing the extraordinary Alaskan picture, "Chechahcos" just released by Associated Exhibitors. The La Palina cigar made good because men liked it. "Chechahcos" will make good, if the exhibitor is alert to the opportunity that the La Palina window tie-up offers him for free high-power publicity of the most appealing kind. Enthusiastic La Palina rooters are selling over 800,000 cigars every day. These rooters are being converted into "Chechahcos" rooters. Get your share of them by filling out the coupon in the La Palina ad.

The CHECHAHCOS Knew They Could Rely Upon Borden's

BORDEN'S Condensed Milk is the tried and proved product upon which mankind has learned to depend regardless of clime, location or situation—in any and every emergency. In the days of the Civil War they depended upon Borden to condense all the milk available for the soldiers. And so on—until the gold rush to the Yukon, as in the story of Chechahcos, Borden's was the stand-by—until today, when it is just the same—the public knowing there is one sure milk product that is always dependable. Everyone knows Borden's. That means when you exploit Chechahcos with Borden's you are talking to your entire community. STERNO CANNED HEAT TO HELP WIN 'CHECHAHCOS' PATRONS

Sterno Canned Heat, already as well known in the kitchen as it is to nature's irrepressibles who seek the open spaces via track, river and forest trail, has been conscripted as a co-partner in the great National Tie-Up Project effected by the REVIEW in connection with the exploitation of the Associated Exhibitors wonder picture, "Chechahcos."

Here, truly, is a tie-up which can be said to possess all the essentials which give further sales-impetus to and center high-power interest in a film. For one thing the reputation of the product has reached into the very nooks and crannies of civilization and its outskirts. It is the camper's and hiker's partner in the true sense of the word. And for general suggestiveness in carrying the atmosphere of the picture with which it is tied up, one could hardly think of a more appropriate subject.

A Sterno Canned Heat Window display is a bet that no showman playing the great outdoor picture should overlook. He has but to send in the coupon to win himself this free extraordinary tie-up.

Such a concern is the Thermo Mills, identified with a nationally known brand of knitted coats and vests. And it is this concern which will lend its trade momentum in giving free exploitation to "Chechahcos."

STERNO CANNED HEAT

Would Have Solved Many a Worry for the 'CHECHAHCOS'

Pronounced Chee-chaw-kos, Meaning "Tenderfeet."

THINK what a STERNO tie-up means for the picture, CHECHAHCOS! Here is a play which deals with the very thought behind STERNO CANNED HEAT—the necessity for a handy, sure-fire fuel when faced with hardships, inconveniences and camping requirements. And in all the world there is only one thing which solves the problem of that necessity—STERNO. Pack your kit and baggage and go camping, hiking, motoring or boating—go to Alaska with the CHECHAHCOS if you like—wherever you go—you always need STERNO. It helps in light house-keeping, it heats the baby's milk at home or outdoors, it heats milady's curling iron, it toasts, boils, fries, and even sterilizes. It is an article which fits in the exploitation of your picture, CHECHAHCOS, better than any other product.

BORDEN'S MILK A BOOSTER OF 'CHECHAHCOS' FILM

To attempt to exhort in these columns on the general reputation of Borden's Condensed Milk and its national significance in American life would be truly to dabble in the superfluous. It is sufficient to say that out of the hundred-million individuals that comprise the American population a majority have an intelligent conception of the meaning of the word Borden's.

With the force of such a statement in mind what should the reaction of showmen be when they are told that the mighty resources of Borden's are in part being brought to bear in giving free publicity to exhibitors playing the Associated Exhibitors film triumph, "Chechahcos"! Ostensibly there is but one answer.

It is a pleasure to visualize it—a window display of a product which actually formed part of the culinary equipment of the courageous band that braved the dangers and hazards of the unknown, in order to bring back the precious, much-sought yellow metal. There is hardly more to be said. A Borden's window display awaits the exhibitor who has the desire and a moment to spare for sending in the coupon to be found in the Borden's ad.

KNIT WEAR DISPLAYS TO PULL PATRONS FOR 'CHECHAHCOS'

The Associated Knit Underwear Manufacturers of America, an association that represents seventy-five per cent of the output of knit underwear in the United States, has observed the National Tie-Up project effected in the exploitation of "Chechahcos" with favorable eyes and henceforth will be identified as part of this great campaign.

Here's a real chance to cash in on oodles of trade prestige and immense national advertising, for exhibitors playing the film. Knit wear and the North allows for catchlines galore, which means added patrons.

THIS still of a scene from "Chechahcos" lends an adequate tender note to the roughness and primitiveness for which the frozen North is noted.

		Borden's Condensed Milk The Standby of the Chechahcos when they braved the Dangers of Alaska - Now the Standby of the whole Nation	Blank Theatre Presents 'CHECHAHCOS' A Tale of Gold, Dangers and Love.

YOU showmen who've booked Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's splendid screen picturization of Rex Beach's "Recoil," are you fully awake to the tremendous possibilities that the national tie-ups connected with the exploitation of this picture offer for a full-page co-operative newspaper advertisement with the retail merchants of your town?

Just think of it. This co-operative ad—and it can as well be a double truck as a single page—offers each advertiser practically the full potential buying power of the aggregate space taken by all the dealers in the proposition for precisely one-seventh the expense. In other words, if you and your merchants get together and take one full page, each individual advertiser takes one-seventh of that space—counting six dealers in connection with the six national tie-ups and yourself for the theatre ad—and the very nature of this co-operative ad gives to each advertisers' copy, the eye-pulling, selling power of the full page ad.

This is easily explained in the fact that all ads are practically motivated by the catch-line "Chechahcos," the film which is responsible for stimulating interest and centering public attention in the merchandise represented by the tie-ups. Your hardest-headed business men will recognize the logic of this and the unusual opportunity it offers him for making a splurge the like of which may not come across his path for the rest of his business life-time.

The idea is a sure-fire business winner. It's up to you to get around to your business cronies, explain the significance of national tie-ups—better still, show them the tie-up section; let them see for themselves the type of national advertisers who have stepped aboard the project and have thrown the weight of years of trade prestige and national advertising into the breach for putting "Chechahcos" across, because by doing this they know they are sharing in the benefits that accrue from such live-wire, co-operative exploitation.

No businessman wants anything for nothing, nor does he expect it. But every up-to-date enterprising merchant is fully aware that the great successful business institutions of our country, retail, wholesale and otherwise, proceed on a policy of service that amounts almost to a gratuity: Projects like national tie-ups and full-page co-operative newspaper ads are formulated by brainy, experienced "idea-providers," who are engaged by the big business institutions for the sole purpose of digging up stunts that offer patrons and prospects just a little more than they ever expected to get for their money.

The above diagram is offered as a tentative layout for the various advertisements. But it needn't be adhered to religiously. When you and your business cohorts have come to an understanding on this proposition take it up with the local newspaper. There's no question but that you'll get assistance and co-operation that may even more admirably adapt the idea to your local peculiarities.

YOU'LL get the sort of public attention that does a showman all sort or good. Leave stone unturned in putting this co-operative ad deal across. There's a feather in your cap for you that will serve you in great stead when the community wants a man who is capable of putting across a civic stunt of some kind.

Are you a Rotarian? A Kiwanian? A fraternity member of any kind? Get busy with your club and brothers and have them back you in this proposition. You can't lose.

Don't be bashful about letting the editor know of your desire to animate your community to a general business revival. He'll probably see the constructive possibilities of your proposition to the point of broadcasting it in his columns, to say nothing of commenting on the credit due to the individual responsible for its inception in the town.

That's the sort of stuff that will lead you to the "Showman's Pot of Gold" and establish you in the community as a public-spirited, worthwhile citizen and business man.

Vote For Best Tie-Ups on 'Chechahcos'

WHICH of the six National Tie-Ups on "The Chechahcos" do you prefer? Which do you believe will do the best work for you in exploiting the Alaskan sensation through the wonder-windows of your city?

Which is going to appeal most to the wandering window-shoppers who are your potential patrons?

Will it be the Borden windows closely linked to the picture with stills of the gold seekers casting aside everything not vital to life in their mad rush—and retaining Borden's concentrated nutriment?

In your judgment will Zepherized underwear's call to coolness attract greater attention in a window replete with stills showing the land that is never hot?

Or do you think Auto Vacuum Ice Cream Freezer will better do the trick? Its tie-up potentialities are very strong. The thought of ice and ice cream are close kin. Will this window win?

Why not vote for Sterno—the canned heat comfort? We can visualize a wonderful window contrasting Sterno heat and Alaskan cold. Is this your first preference?

If so what comes second in your estimation?

Perhaps you think the Thermo Sport Vest tie-up a sure winner. If you think so—vote for it! Will the passerby linger to look longer at this window than any of the others?

Maybe you believe the appeal to men made through La Palina cigars will bring them—and the families—to your box-office more quickly than any of the companion tie-ups. Do you?

Hard to decide isn't it? In our mind they all run about neck and neck. But in each community some one of the National Tie-Ups will strike a slightly more responsive chord in the ticket-buying nerve of your patrons. Which will it be in your town? What is your own preference? You know your public through and through. You can tell just about what their reaction will be. You can do it. So tell us.

Vote as you do on election day for your candidates. Vote for all six, indicating your first choice, your second selection, your third, and so on by number. Then clip the ballot and mail it to EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW. Your vote will count much in helping us get more effective National Tie-Ups for you.

'RECOIL' TIE-UPS OFFER RICH REWARDS

Showmen Urged to Take Advantage of Free Window Publicity

AGAIN the REVIEW calls attention to the superlative free exploitation offered to showmen booking Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's "Recoil," in connection with the window displays of nationally advertised products, displays that help turn thousands of window shoppers into movie patrons. Here they are—listed for the showman's inspection and convenience, leaving him nothing but the trivial detail of clipping the coupon, signing it and sending it to the REVIEW.

What a sparkling array of prestige and good-will builders: Onyx Hosiery, known the country over through intensive advertising in national magazines, in trolley car poster advertising and through a myriad of dealer helps.

Inecto Hair Tint. The most recent vogue in the glorification of woman's crowning glory. Made in every shade so that every woman in your town may have the tint of hair she most admires. Not only the girls who buy, but the girls who see Inecto displays, will want to see Betty Blythe in "Recoil."

Deltah Pearls. What romance, what adventures, are involved in the thought of pearls. The gems of the South Seas have always excited the imagination of human beings. And as for the ladies, well now, could you want a better reason for holding out a cordial welcome to a Deltah Pearl window display.

Another fine drawing card as regards the pulling power of window displays is that sponsored by Chinwah. Chinwah stands for perfumes, powders and cosmetics that have a host of friends. Many of these friends can be your friends when you play "Recoil."

Boncilla Beautifier. As well known in Milady's beauty parlor as in the gentlemen's barber shop. A display that hits both sexes between the eyes at one blow.

Venida Hair Nets. These have a national significance for prestige and selling power that needs little emphasis to impress that point here. Get in on a Venida Window display. It is yours for the mere asking. Then a Nemo Corset tie-up. Can you possibly conceive of a corset display that won't make the ladies stop, look and look again! Well hardly, and when that display is sponsored by Nemo, so much more for your profit if you figure in it.

'THE PERFECT FLAPPER'

Could there have been a choicer pick than Colleen Moore to play the lead in First National's attraction? Thus, a perfect star for the perfect film that will mean a perfect box-office record by virtue of the acme of perfection reached in national tie-ups.

'PERFECT FLAPPER' FINE TIE-UPS SUBJECT

First National Film a Source of Rich Window Display Rewards

FOR next week's window display National Tie-Ups subject EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW has secured First National's screen feature, "The Perfect Flapper," which has Colleen Moore in the principal role.

To say that Colleen Moore will be featured in a motion picture is almost synonymous with saying that it is slated for sure-fire box-office success. What then, when it is considered that with this high power star appeal will also be the weight and influence of window displays on commodities whose names are household terms and whose public message have been broadcasted in magazines, posters and newspapers with circulations running into the millions.

That's the sort of impetus that will be given to "The Perfect Flapper." What a whale of a chance to cash in on a term which has been more lately on the lips of folks than any other word in the American language. The reputation of the flapper is legion. Whether for good or bad, the flapper is the national model for the daughters of Eve who live in a community that is not actually isolated to the extent that reading matter never reaches there.

And, oh, what personality to play the part. Chic, pert, saucy, vivacious Colleen Moore. The darling of the boys and girls alike. The real Twentieth Century symbol of the dashing young blood. It is plain to see that the angles for tying up this picture with a variety of nationally advertised merchandise are rich in number, and the nature of these full of allure.

Some idea of the tremendous advertising impetus that "The Perfect Flapper" will receive may be gleaned from the fact the following commodities merchandised on a national scale, will figure in the tie-ups: Gowns, Perfumes, Hosiery, Candies, Beauty Products, Shoes, Jewelry, Music, Novels, Parasols, Flowers, Millinery and Records.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW hasn't overlooked a thing and next week's tie-up section will have its full bag of tricks from which you may make your pick. Don't miss next week's National Tie-Ups on "The Perfect Flapper."

CLIP COUPON FOR FREE 'BRUMMEL' PUBLICITY

Seven National Advertisers to Back Showmen with Window Displays

SHOWMEN playing the Warner Brothers' screen classic, "Beau Brummel" are reminded that the sparkling array of national window displays tie-ups as elected by EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, are their for the asking, without any trouble or expense.

One look at the list of nationally advertised products should convince even the most skeptical what profits there are in store for those who take the initiative in falling in line. For example, in the Glove Industries, seventy-five per cent of the industry selling gloves is a partner to the widely campaign advertising the Warner feature.

The lure of neckwear is eloquently established in the fact that more people buy ties through being attracted to them by appealing window displays than really need them. A human re-action by which the exhibitor naturally profits, when in the same window with a Fashionknit tie, his film is exploited.

"Beau Brummel" attained supreme heights of popularity by reason of the manner in which he wore his clothes. Many years of trade prestige and national advertising stand behind Personality Clothes, a concern whose window displays will feature your program in your community if you will but say the word. Sta-Shape Hats is a trade name that is really a household term in homes where the men don't go actually bareheaded. Cash in on the fact that the people stopping off to admire the Berg product will see announcement of presentation of "Beau Brummel."

Sampson's Dress Jewelry, in a neat artistic display, will help mightily to turn window shoppers into movie patrons. All yours for the asking. Mineralava Clay, as well known in the lady's beauty parlor as it is in the gent's barber shop will add impetus to the interest in "Beau Brummel."

Vivadou Products, known the country over through advertising in national magazines, window placards, and sign poster, is another great bet for you, in giving you the value of its immense good-will, human interest and selling appeal.

A variety of stills showing scenes from "Beau Brummel" will figure in the different displays. These are of a nature that will so vividly arouse the cupidity of the on-loker that nothing but a showing of the film will satisfy him.

NATIONAL Tie-Up SECTION

The Gold Rush of 1924 Is On!

Exhibitors Everywhere Give Three Cheers for Trade Review's National Tie-Up and Dig Oodles of Dollars From Window Displays

DID you ever seize upon an idea having such big possibilities that it scared you? Well, that was the way EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW felt while preparing to launch the National Tie-Up Window display idea which it conceived months ago. EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW does not go off half-cocked, and the more we delved into the thought the more stupendous it revealed itself. We were almost afraid to tell you in cold-type of the astounding things exhibitors can accomplish through this revolutionary development in showmanship.

A Great Discovery

But like all really great discoveries, the National Tie-Up has proved itself more tremendous than even its originators dared tell. Now, glancing back over two shorts weeks to our inaugural announcement of the plan "Through Many Windows," we smile at our own naive modesty. We just barely outlined the Idea, and left it to your imagination and showmanship instinct to fill in the mass of color.

And you did! Our editorial hat is off to you exhibitors everywhere for the manner in which you have taken hold of the plan and shot it across with overwhelming enthusiasm.

A Succession of Thrills

To the staff of your business paper, EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, it has been one continuous succession of thrills. Telegrams, 'phone calls, letters, personal visits—from owners of chain theatres and from the modest neighborhood houses.

And it has only commenced! Like the gold rush of '49, or the Alaskan gold fever pictured in this week's National Tie-Up, "The Chechahcos," the plan gathers impetus each day. It grows and grows. It's a stampede. Nothing ever attempted in exploitation or exhibitor service has kindled such an unquenchable flame of interest as this marshaling of national windows to blazon forth the attractions of your theatre.

Thanks. Same to You

It is impossible to write thanking each exhibitor who has expressed his well wishes. We are too darned busy lining things up for you to take time out for a hand-shaking. We're swamped—smothered—gasping for breath. But we're taking this breathing spell to say to every one of you doggone good boosting partners: "Thank you—thank you!"

Looking Backward—and Forward

Let's look back and survey results to date. National Tie-Up Section was born in May 3rd issue with Warner Brothers' "Beau Brummel." Next morning Jack Goldstein, Clinton Theatre, New York was buzzing the 'phone for quick action. He likes speed, and hadn't even waited to read all about it.

"Let's have all the Tie-ups. How much do they cost?" was his message. When we assured him they cost exactly zero—nothing but his desire to have them—Jack was a happy showman. In a few hours EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW had arranged for sixteen windows in eleven shops for his "Beau Brummel" booking—and the Clinton extended the run of the Warner Brothers' classic.

Let Mr. Goldstein tell you.

Exhibitors Trade Review,
45 West 45th Street,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

When I first read your new National Tie-Up Section in my May 3rd EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, it seemed almost too good to be true.

Now here are the cold facts. I clipped my coupons and forwarded them to you, and with the co-operation of the manufacturers and yourselves, I was able to get eleven window displays in my district. This practically means eleven more lobbies for my theatre and all I did was ask for them. I don't mind adding that on the strength of these windows I am extending my run of "Beau Brummel."

This is the first time any trade publication has gone out of its way to actually help the exhibitor, and as for me, put me down a booster. More power to you!

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Jack Goldstein.

While we're at it, let's pick another letter from the pile before us. Here's one from Harris Brothers Capitol Theatre—"The Theatre That Is the Pride of Passaic." Read it.

Exhibitors Trade Review,
45 West 45th St.,
N. Y. C.

Gentlemen:

Your exploitation co-operation for "Beau Brummel" the best ever. By far the most sensible aid yet rendered by any trade journal. The best good will move you have yet undertaken. Good luck to you!

Capitol Theatre, Inc.,
M. D. Harris.

And here's a wire from Milwaukee:

NA27 54 NL 3 Extra
Exploitation Editor,
Exhibitors Trade Review,
45 W. 45th St., New York, N. Y.

Beau Brummel opens here for two weeks May tenth. Anything you can do regarding tie-ups as outlined in May third issue appreciated. Realize time short and wish to take advantage of your novel offer. Think it wonderful plan and in keeping with TRADE REVIEW'S policy of exhibitor help. Advise progress collect.

Yours,
Stan Brown, Strand Theatre, Milwaukee.

The Rush Is on

That's the way it started—and the 1924 gold rush was on!

The local and long distance wires have been hot ever since. And telegrams, whew!

Letters? Looks like we'll have to work the file clerks in three eight hour shifts.

A Proud Pageant

The second week "Recoil," the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan pictured rhapsody of beauty, magnificence, thrills and heart throbs. And again the national advertisers swung into line with thousands of dealers' windows to spread the message of your theatre's eventual attraction.

Now, "The Chechahcos," Associated Exhibitors novelty sensation depicting fiery passions flaming forth in a setting of an arctic wilderness of gigantic glaciers, rushing rapids and stupendous snowfields, is given you as the third National Tie-up. We can say with profound conviction that it is worthy to take its place in this proud pageant of premier productions that has begun its epoch making march across the pages of motion picture history.

A Bonanza of Untold Wealth

We speak of this new era of showmanship is resounding tones. No longer are we timid over an untried idea. The National Tie-Up has been weighed in the balance and found—heavy with golden potentialities. So we talk with the assurance, confidence and enthusiasm of one who has unearthed a bonanza of untold wealth, and is proud to tell about it to his friend—his business partner—you.

All Pull Together

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW is doing its best for you—as usual. Distributors, national advertisers, dealers are all doing their share in making the National Tie-Up Idea the biggest in the world—in two worlds.

And now you, Mr. Showman—you for whom all this is being achieved—what can you do to intensify and augment the tremendous rewards headed straight for the final goal—your box-office?

Simply this: Read every word of the National Tie-Up Section every week.

COMBINING an idea used by the manager of the Hippodrome, Baltimore, and one which has come to us from the Prince of Wales Theatre, London, there may be evolved a good throwaway for a racing crowd.

An envelope identical with those containing the "tips" sold at the track may be distributed. The throwaway itself may call attention to "the one best bet" appearing at your theatre, or make its appeal in some other racing parlance. The English one advised its reader to "put your shirt on" the picture appearing at the playhouse.

IN a three cornered tie-up in which the Sun Theatre, the Omaha Daily News, and some enterprising local merchants occupied the respective angles, Jackie Coogan and "Long Live the King" were advertised to the Queen's taste.

Twenty-six prizes of Jackie Coogan suits and various other minor articles of wearing apparel, drawing sets, and passes admitting one child to the Sun, were distributed to those children in Omaha, South Omaha or Council Bluffs who obtained the greatest number of three month subscriptions to the newspaper.

Naturally, the News saw to it that the contest was publicized plenty, and the theatre, as well as the merchants offering the prizes, received columns and pages of publicity. The outcome of the contest was highly satisfactory to all interested—including the kids.

* * *

ANY possible tie-up with your city and its interests will most certainly prove beneficial to your theatre. Lon Ramsdell, of Baltimore, tied up his Hippodrome with a local "Better Homes and Building Exposition." He had a booth at the exposition and co-operated with various merchants so that his theatre received some great advertising. One stunt was the issuance of half-price tickets for the occasion.

When the Principal Picture played the Trianon Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., this striking lobby helped get big business on "When a Man's a Man."

JOE WHALEN is a captain of waiters in the dining room of a New York club. He is also an exploitation man. He proved it by designing a contraption which he calls an "adverplane" which at present is ballyhooing D. W. Griffith's "America."

The "adverplane" is a motor-car dressed up to look just like a baby plane. It complies with traffic requirements, and as may be imagined, it attracts lots of notice wherever it appears.

ADVERTISING AIDS

LEN BROWN, manager of the New Astor Theatre, put over "Pleasure Mad" in St. Paul, Minn. This is how:

Three weeks in advance teaser ads appeared in the programs, house organ and all printing. A trailer was put on the screen announcing, "You'll Go 'Pleasure Mad' Soon." Art cards, cut-outs and stills were liberally displayed in the lobby.

A week later, ten twenty-four sheets, ten sixes and ten threes were posted in prominent down-town locations, and two hundred window cards were placed throughout the city. Ten days in advance teasers were inserted in all newspapers. For instance: "Warning: The whole city is going 'Pleasure Mad'"; "Beware: A brand seared for all time on the trim ankles of the 'Pleasure Mad'"; "Mother: The devil is your daughter's dancing partner at the ball of the 'Pleasure Mad'."

One week in advance displays were exhibited in front of cafe orchestras: "Don't go 'Pleasure Mad' here—you'll have your opportunity at the Astor next week." A twenty-four sheet was cut out and mounted on beaver board atop the marquee. A sixty foot banner was built up, teaser fashion, in sections on the roof. It was visible for blocks. The first day it read: "Watch for—," and a hand pointed to the right. Next day the word "Pleasure" was added; then "Mad," and on the fourth day "Starts Saturday Astor."

The night before the opening the entire lobby was changed with a specially built front, the roof banner moved to the top of the marquee, the color scheme of the lobby changed to purple, and baby spots flashed on cut-outs of the players. The entire run of the picture was to capacity business.

GOLDWYN-Cosmopolitan has put out a press book on Elinor Glynn's "Three Weeks," which will make the exhibitor believe in Santa Claus—and also in the G-C slogan "It pays to play Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan."

The book is captioned "Tips"—and among this "info" handed to exhibitors there are certainly some sure winners. There are suggestions and tie-ups galore, and if there was the slightest doubt as to the picture being a box-office hit, the exploitation ideas set forth would remove it.

However, the title, the author, the cast, the director, the press-book and the story itself all assure the showman that this film is one that will pay. And in very many cases lead to advertising beginning: "Held Over by Popular Demand."

* * *

JOE FRANKLIN, Franklin Theatre, Ottawa, Ont., attracted all eyes to "Only a Shop Girl," with a thorough advance advertising campaign which included distribution of thousands of celluloid memorandum cards and aluminum thimbles bearing the name of the picture, as well as many special heralds.

Mr. Franklin also staged a teaser stunt in the local newspapers by advertising for a missing person, as follows:

"Personal—Information is desired concerning Josie Jerome, age 21 years, brown eyes, brown hair.

"According to information just received, the missing girl is working as 'Only a Shop Girl' in this city. All replies confidential. Address Mrs. Jerome, 206 Queen Street."

The New York "Music Box Revue" song hit has been tied up with the Hodgkinson picture "What Shall I Do?" to the great advantage of both song and photoplay.

The address was the theatre but no mention was made of that. The semi-final of the advertising series was the publication of an announcement to theatre patrons describing the special merits of the picture and pointing out that it was the screen version of a well-known stage success.

* * *

CAPTAIN Frank W. Goodale, Loew's Theatre, Ottawa, is breaking into "news" with habitual regularity. Recently he secured real publicity in newspapers on five days of the six. One item was a report of his attendance at the opening banquet of a new boys' clubhouse where he offered tickets to each of the needy boys for a performance next night. Their attendance at the theatre was reported along with incidents.

Captain Goodale also attended a special dance at the Homestead Inn when one of the theatre artists took part in the programme. This resulted in more publicity.

He conducted a Jackie Coogan Similarity Contest in conjunction with the presentation of "A Boy of Flanders." The winners and other details were reported.

Then, Manager Goodale directed the program at the Kiwanis Club luncheon in the Chateau Laurier and led the club singing.

"The Humming Bird" is Flying High!

Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky Present

The Real News on "The Humming Bird"

—Gloria Swanson can act! See this one if you don't believe it. This is by far her best picture. It struck our organist this way. She says, said she, "If I hadn't been playing for the picture. I would have cried." If she had, I'd have wept with her, which would have startled the natives and maybe emptied the house. This picture was worth the price. My hopes are that every exhibitor will do as well as we did.—William H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

* * *

One of the best pictures of the season. Well acted and well produced. Shows Swanson in a new role. Pleased most everyone. You can't go wrong in playing this one, as it is real entertainment from start to finish. Eight reels.—A. F. Edwards, Edwards theatre, Reedsport, Ore.—Rural patronage.

* * *

Gloria can act. This is real entertainment. Business good and many favorable comments.—Ashworth & Bartels, Federal theatre, Denver, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

* * *

We had more favorable reports on this picture than any Swanson picture we have run in a long time. In fact, from a business standpoint and comments from patrons, we judge this as her best offering to date. Ran two days to good business; second day held up good. Eight reels.—C. H. Powers, Strand theatre, Dunsmuir, Cal.—Railroad patronage.

* * *

A very good picture that drew a good attendance and one that will please anywhere. It is the best we have run of this star and we have run all of them that were released during the last year. Moral tone O. K. and it is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance.—Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Tried and Proved Pictures

Ready Made Audiences Without A Picture

By E. A. ESCHMANN

General Sales Manager for First National

THE day of a hundred per cent distribution of a picture, or at least as wide a distribution as is possible considering the obstacle of competing houses, will be brought nearer by the education of exhibitors in the matter of Tried and Proved Pictures. First National believes that this education can be brought about largely by showing the results accomplished by some recognized exhibitor. And perhaps no instance of a motion picture returning to duplicate its first success is more striking than the recent run of "Passion" at the Capitol Theatre, New York. Under Mr. Rothafel it was at the Capitol that this famous picture set new records at its world's premiere in 1920. Last year at the Capitol, despite the number of pictures available, Rothafel showed "Passion" again to large business. Other exhibitors followed suit and "Passion" had a second vogue more than three years after its first release.

"Passion" was, of course, an exceptional picture, but the point of it is, that the thing can be done. Let me point out further that many of those pictures which brought First National such prestige during the past season were screen adaptations of famous novels. Moreover, these novels are still popular, and will be for some time.

It was only last month, according to the list compiled and published by the Bookman magazine, that Gertrude Atherton's "Black Oxen" was displaced from the top of the list of novels most in demand. It is now the second most popular novel with the American public, according to the Bookman statistics. This means that with every new reader there is created a potential theatregoer—one who is anxious to see the picture. He knows the story has been filmed, for last January, before he had read the novel, he saw it advertised. And yet, unless an exhibitor has the foresight to understand that "Black Oxen" is a tried and proved picture which he cannot neglect, our novelreader cannot find the picture he is seeking.

The same is true of "Flaming Youth" and "Ponjola." Every day new audiences are being made. Additional readers of these novels since the release of the pictures several months ago would alone make an audience that would more than satisfy the box office. I think that this is a point which might well be more carefully considered by exhibitors. It seems to be a powerful argument for the tried and proved picture.

Another thought on the matter of tried and proved pictures lies in the fact that only a limited number of certain types of pictures are offered during the year. If, for instance, an exhibitor finds his patrons favor the fantastic and colorful production, he will find it hard to supply this demand. His only recourse is to turn to such a production as "The Isle of Lost Ships," a Maurice Tourneur production which is an outstanding picture of its type.

There is always a scarcity of good rapid fire comedies and an exhibitor has an opportunity to satisfy the craving by playing such a tried and proved picture as "Bellboy 13."

Practically the same condition exists in the case of the Strongheart pictures. "The Love Master," the latest picture starring the famous dog actor, has re-awakened the public's interest in this remarkable favorite, and "The Silent Call" and "Brawn of the North" are the only available Strongheart films.

Lastly let me list a few of the First National pictures which experience has proved to be well worth the exhibitor's attention, whether they be six weeks or six months old. "The Dangerous Age," "The Bright Shawl"—one of Richard Barthelmess' most attractive romances, "Within the Law"—a screen adaptation of the most famous American play with Norma Talmadge in the title role, and "Ashes of Vengeance"—Norma Talmadge's elaborate spectacle drama of the sixteenth century.

"Thundergate"—a Chinese melodrama that established itself several months ago as a powerful box office attraction. Owen Moore and Virginia Brown Faire are featured.

ATENSELY dramatic scene from First National's "Ashes of Vengeance" starring Norma Talmadge. The romantic beauty of the film has been constant inspiration to exhibitors who have outdone one another in elaborate and unusual displays and all kinds all of which have established tremendous popularity for the photograph. The picture below is one of the highlight scenes from First National's "Potash and Perlmutter," a comedy drama the entertainment value of which may be judged by the reception accorded the picture everywhere it has been shown since its initial release.

Selznick

JUST A WIFE—Triangle Drama. Reviewed December 15. BECAUSE it brings to the screen a sympathetic and clean story of the love and sacrifice of a woman and thus sounds the popular appeal.

ONE WEEK OF LOVE—Flapper Romance. Reviewed December 22. BECAUSE it is a delightful light comedy with fast action, plenty of thrills and two very popular stars who inject the story with humaness and fire.

THE LAW OF COMPENSATION—Marriage Drama. Reviewed December 22. BECAUSE it has proved by its record that it is a story which gives Norma Talmadge a role she is well capable of handling and it pleases big city and small town audiences.

A LADY'S NAME—Love Comedy. Reviewed March 15. BECAUSE this delightful comedy besides its own inherent merit has big exploitation possibilities, which exhibitors have used extensively and found real money makers.

THE HEART OF WETONA—Indian Drama. Reviewed January 19. BECAUSE Norma Talmadge who stars in it is enough to fill any house and besides that Thomas Meighan is in the cast.

LOVE IS AN AWFUL THING—Marriage Difficulties. Reviewed January 19. BECAUSE audiences cry with laughter when they see it and Owen Moore appears at his best in it.

REPORTED MISSING—Comedy Melodrama. Reviewed January 12. BECAUSE comedy melodramas can always attract audiences and this is a particularly good one starring Owen Moore.

A MAN'S HOME—Story of New Riches. Reviewed December 29. BECAUSE it snugly fits the public taste for average pictures and has proven its entertainment value by its record at the box office.

THE ROAD OF AMBITION—Rise of Youth. Reviewed December 29. BECAUSE it is a fine moral story in which Conway Tearle appears as a sympathetic character who more than pleases his audiences.

THE CRICKET ON THE HEARTH—Romance. Reviewed February 16. BECAUSE it brings one of Charles Dickens most delightful stories to the screen in a presentation so charming and interesting that it has found a place for itself with everyone.

C. C. Burr

THE NEW SCHOOL TEACHER—Rural Romance. BECAUSE it features Russel Griffin in a part for which he is admirably suited and into which he injects a personal touch that cannot fail to get across to all audiences.

THREE O'CLOCK IN THE MORNING—Modern Youth. Reviewed March 22. Booked 100 per cent States Rights. BECAUSE it has every element to please small and large town audiences interested in youth of the jazz age.

RESTLESS WIVES—Matrimonial Problem. BECAUSE it is a story with a strong appeal to both sexes and attempts to bring about a better understanding of the existing conditions in matrimonial life of the middle classes.

'The Silent Partner'

Financial Drama Released by Paramount

BRIEF: A young wife who has seen the folly of living on all that her husband earns when he is in Wall Street determines to prepare unknown to him against any coming disaster. The husband's employee is infatuated with the young wife and plans to ruin the husband and get her. His plans succeed, but he fails to win the wife, who goes to the husband who has left her in anger and haste and wins him back by convincing him of the truth of her story.

THIS story of matrimonial complications following financial disaster has in it so many of the elements which go to make an entertaining motion picture that it is not at all to be wondered at that it has been as popular as its record shows it has been, in the many months since its initial release.

The combination of a domestic tussle and a financial entanglement is one which is sure to please because of the great diversity of elements among which can be found one that will please every different taste. For this reason the exhibitor running the picture should feature as many different angles of the story as possible.

The best way to get this idea across is via the lobby, by means of posters and stills. Use all the attractive posters you can get showing the three stars, Leatrice Joy, Owen Moore and Robert Edson, selecting the more decorative ones to make the effect more appealing. You might even arrange for a rather elaborate displays, bulding a facsimile of an ocean liner in the lobby, and employing cut-out figures of the characters to appear on the ship.

You have a splendid tie-up with the local banks since the wife of the financier, as the silent partner, saves up a bank account against possible disaster. Banks are always soliciting savings accounts, and you could get your bank to base their campaign on the case of "The Silent Partner." Stills supplied by you for use in their windows and in their campaign material will give you publicity in the best place you could hope for. Another tie-up that is suggested by a scene in the picture is with the real estate men. Liza makes use of a small savings bank in the shape of a little cottage and on it are the words, "Own Your Own Home." A real estate man couldn't hope for anything more concrete or logical on which to base a drive which would be particularly in season at this time of the year.

The variety of different style clothes worn by Leatrice Joy is a good cue for a clothing display by a specialty shop or department store. At first she is seen in the simple clothes of the woman of very modest circumstances. Later she wears the gowns and wraps affected by the wealthy. Still later in the picture she appears in the traveling clothes which she wears when she goes to the steamer on which she is to sail to Europe. These could be used to advantage.

'The Chicken In The Case'

Matrimonial Comedy Released by Selznick

BRIEF: In order to secure a legacy which he cannot have until he is married, Steve Perkins decides to borrow his chum's wife and advertise her to "Aunt Sarah" as his. Auntie meets Winifred and is much impressed. So much so, in fact, that she decides she is more capable of handling the estate than her husband so she signs it over to "Mrs. Perkins." Innumerable complications arise, but it is finally cleared by Steve's finding a girl for himself and marrying her.

WHEN "Aunt Sarah" comes face to face with the real husband of Winifred and sees that her nephew has been deceiving her all the time things look pretty dark for the young hero. Incidentally the climax of a continuous series of side splitting situations is here reached and here is, therefore, where you should lay the emphasis when you are using the text of the story for exploitation purposes.

Do not fail to make the most of Owen Moore's name and the fact that the picture is a genuine comedy. This is a big idea. Put it over big.

For a very different lobby display you might dress the walls and ceiling in yellow and white crepe paper and on stands around the entrance have a number of small wooden boxes each with a real chicken in it. On each one have tacked a poster announcing the name of the production. We can almost guarantee that this will stop the passerby and urge many whose curiosity is piqued to come in and see the picture.

You might use the same idea putting the chicken coops on street corners in the vicinity of your theatre and having arrows with the name of the showing pointing in the direction of your house.

A more conservative idea is to tie-up with apparel shops on displays on women's clothes, since the stills from the picture furnish fine posters for this sort of display.

There are also posters which provide excellent material to hook up a display of luggage with the picture since the numerous honeymoon and week-end trips in the film make use of much traveling paraphernalia.

'Drifting'

Drug Drama

Released by Universal

BRIEF: Cassie Cook engaged in the sale of opium becomes remorseful, and wishing to save her chum from the habit, decides to leave China. She wins the confidence of a white man in Hang Chow and he tells her that he is there to fight the evil. Cassie feels like a cheat and decides to betray her former comrades. A fight ensues between the two factions from which Cassie emerges with a clean and honorable love.

IN playing this picture, which has been pulling so well for so many months, at this time, it would be wise to play up some new stunts that are in keeping with the newer fads and thus give the picture a brand new, and entirely different impression.

One such suggestion would be to arrange a Mah-Jongg tie-up. This Chinese game has taken on tremendously with the American public and now that the sets are being offered for sale at nominal prices a great many more people are in the market for them. You should arrange with a dealer for a tie-up which would help boost this market for him.

One of the stills from the picture shows the interior of a Chinese set and a group of people are seated around a table playing Mah Jongg. This is a ready made tie-up and every merchant handling the sets should jump at the opportunity of placing one of these pictures in his window. You should see that a sign is placed in the window with it. It should carry a message to the effect that Priscilla Dean, who will appear at your theatre on a stated date in "Drifting" is a devotee of the game and that after seeing the reader, too, will want to play the game.

As this is renting season you might easily arrange a profitable tie-up with the landlord with a vacant store. Arrange to have printed on his window in large letters some such message as this: "250,000 people go 'Drifting' by this window daily. Think what a splendid spot this would be for a drug, cigar, shoe or clothing store.

"And speaking of good tips, have you seen Priscilla Dean in 'Drifting?' Don't miss it. It is playing all this week at the..... Theatre."

Here is a fine opportunity to get together with the Chinese restaurant and pull a publicity stunt that will prove valuable to both of you. He can get chop sticks at a very small cost. Arrange to have him buy several hundred pairs and have them stamped on one side with the name of his restaurant, and on the other side with the name of the picture and the name of your theatre. Then allow him to distribute some, and plan to have the rest distributed by some local grocer, or butcher who will give you window space for pictures and posters for the attention that he will get by giving these away with every purchase.

'Experimental Marriage'

Farce Comedy

Released by Selznick

BRIEF: A young widow is being desperately wooed by a young lawyer who is pleading for an immediate marriage. She doesn't believe in marriage, however, because it will entail the sacrifice of her personal liberty. She finally strikes on a compromise whereby she will live with him week ends and by herself during the week. On this basis they are married. Unforeseen complications arise and both the husband and wife begin to suspect each other of being unfaithful. In the end, however, everything is smoothed out and the two agree to live together every day of the week.

SHAKESPEARE said opportunity knocks but once, yet here it is knocking again at the door of the enterprising exhibitor and knocking perhaps even a bit more persistently than before. Do you remember when this picture, starring Constance Talmadge first appeared. It hit the bullseye right smack in the center, and the echo resounded through the box office of every theatre whose manager had the good sense to book the picture.

What "Experimental Marriage" did once it will do again. It is the sort of comedy that never grows old. If you concentrate some real effort on its exploitation and play it up in the same style that you do a new picture, you can get the S. R. O. sign working overtime. It's certainly worth a try because it is the sort of thing you can't go wrong on. Especially if you really get behind it.

In the first place you should feature the name of Constance Talmadge. Especially in sections where she is a particular favorite you will find this a real drawing card. This can be done by a wise and careful selection of stills and posters. You can make your lobby really talk by means of this by giving them just a little different treatment.

For instance, you might get a large trunk and place it in the very center of the lobby. Then cut out figures of Constance Talmadge and Harrison Ford, who plays opposite her, and arrange them so that they appear to be sitting together on the trunk. You might also have a combo board house made to supply background for the trunk. On the house could be signs reading: "For sale. Owners must vacate! 'Experimental Marriage' proved a failure and owners will let house go cheap." You should get an immediate response from the public.

You might also try a street bally of this character. Get a very attractive young woman and dress her up like a young widow. Instruct her to walk through the streets attempting to flirt with every one. Then you should run ads, or post signs, warning the public to beware of the pretty young widow who has just come to town. She is looking for a husband on the "Experimental Marriage" plan. This sort of thing will be taken up immediately by the public, especially the more gossipy members.

'The Acquittal'

Mystery Play

Released by Universal

BRIEF: Kenneth Winthrop is on trial for the murder of his foster father. His young wife succeeds in getting the evidence which is responsible for his acquittal. Later she discovers that he has deceived her. He confesses, then commits suicide. She finally finds happiness with Winthrop's foster brother who has always loved her.

A FINE teaser herald has been prepared for the exploitation of this picture. It is in the form of a legal injunction and summons the recipient to appear at the court of entertainment at the..... Theatre. These can be secured from the Universal exchanges and we would recommend their use as a clever means of arousing interest.

If there happens at the time of your showing, to be a murder trial going on in your vicinity, you can make use of a mail campaign soliciting the opinion as to whether the reader is or is not in favor of "Acquittal."

The evidence which finally decides the case is a butcher's scale which has been mistaken for a clock. This permits of tie-ups with the local jewelers and the retailer of scales if there happens to be one in your locality.

If you can get special permission to do it, an effective stunt would be to dress the ticket seller in the official black judge's robe and have him wear a white wig. Stand two men attired in policemen's outfit in the front of the lobby. You might also get your ushers up the same way. This will accentuate the theme of the play and at the same time will set people wondering at the appearance of police at your theatre. These are sufficiently different and uncommo to cause much attention to be centered on your theatre.

Working along the same line it might be suggested that you use cut-out figures as they appear in the court scenes and mount them in front of the lobby with court scene posters as background. You might, at the same time, have a large butchers scale on either side of this display to make it even more marked.

Get as many posters as you can in every available local window. Their rather sensational slant will arouse interest even in the last curious, and you will find you are getting a great deal of publicity through them.

Projection Hints

—By WESLEY TROUT—

Installation of the Projection Room Equipment

THE matter of the correct installation of projection room equipment and the electrical devices is of paramount importance. This apparatus must be properly installed to secure perfect projection, and remember that it requires up-to-date equipment in order to secure perfect results. It is of much importance that any auxiliary apparatus, such as spot lights, rewind benches, etc., should be given ample room for perfect ease in operation.

Re-winding equipment and also a room for the motor generator set should be taken care of when planning an up-to-date projection department. The housing of the projection machines should be so arranged that a minimum amount of effort is expended in changing from one machine to another, the operation of spot lights, etc. Remember that the projectionist can do his work much better if he has plenty of working room.

The walls of the projection room should be constructed of hard plaster or tile. The floor may be covered with a heavy linoleum or rubber, as it is necessary to have some form of good insulation on the projection room floor. The color of the walls of a projection room is also of paramount importance, as there should be no reflection of any light that may cause a strain on the projectionist's eyes.

A battleship grey or a moderately dark green finish should be employed, as neither of these colors is too dark for physical comfort and yet they will not give any degree of reflection of stray light.

The correct placing of the projection screen is very important to secure perfect results. In a small theatre where there is no stage, this should be placed between four and five feet from the floor and of proper size for the length of the theatre.

Great care should be taken in placing the screen in order to avoid causing discomfort to the people in the front row of seats that are looking up at the picture projected. It is a very good idea to keep the projection screen as low as consistent with good sight lines.

In a relatively narrow theatre with straight projection, it is well for the exhibitor to consider the installation of the reflector type screen for his projection, as the reflector type screen has a surface which tends to throw the light projected on the screen back within a relatively small angle. The disadvantage of a reflector type screen in a wide theatre is that some of the seats will be favored with an extremely bright picture and others with a dimly illuminated picture.

Be sure and select the correct size screen and type for your theatre in order to secure the very best in projection results. Remember that it does not cost any more to have the correct type and size than it does the improper kind.

Connecting Transformer or Compensarc to Line

The projectionist should be very careful when he is connecting up a transformer or compensarc to make sure that the voltage and the cycles marked on the transformer correspond with the supply voltage and cycles. This is a very important matter. Don't connect same if voltage or cycles is higher or lower unless you want a lot of trouble.

If you happen to have sheet iron walls, place the transformer at least 12 inches away from same or you will have a humming noise from your transformer. Thirty ampere fuses for the line are large enough for 110 volts and 15 ampere fuses for a 220 volt line.

Don't freeze your carbons if you want a good light. Be sure and use proper size fuses and carbons to secure the best results. Always use cored carbons for alternating current. Use correct size wire for the amperes you are drawing.

A test lamp should be kept in every projection room.

One drop of oil is plenty for any bearing on a projection machine. Sixty drops of oil is the correct amount for the oil well on any standard make of projection machine.

REMODELING OF TWO KANSAS CITY THEATRES

Frank L. Newman's Royal and Newman theatres at Kansas City are to undergo extensive improvements. Within the next few weeks the interior of the Newman Theatre will be improved so that a stage, twenty feet deep and thirty-two feet wide, can be erected. At present the space in front of the screen is eighteen feet wide and only fifty inches deep. The remodeling will involve changes in the orchestra pit. The ornamental shell above the proscenium arch and above the orchestra pit will be redecorated.

The entrance to the main floor of the theatre will be moved forward so that the main floor and the stairways to the balcony will be reached through the same entrances. This will cause the present "island" type box office to be moved forward to the sidewalk. The work of remodeling will be accomplished at night in order to prevent interrupting the regular schedule of shows. The alterations will cost about $25,000, according to H. Alexander Drake, architect.

On the other hand, the Royal Theatre will be a refuge from downtown Kansas City's scorching winds this summer, an excellent cooling system having been constructed in the Newman at the time it was built. Construction of a new type of cooling system has begun, the contract having been let to the Hosch Cooling System of Dallas, Tex. It will be completed within six weeks, according to Mr. Newman. The new system will draw in air and chill it with special machinery installed upon the roof. The cold air will be dropped into the auditorium through ceiling ventilators.

AMERICAN THEATRE COMPANY ORGANIZED

The American Theatre Company has been organized to operate the well known American Theatre of South Main Street, Salt Lake City, and to "buy, sell, operate and manage motion pictures and other theatres, dance halls and places of amusement," according to its articles. The capital stock is listed at $400,000. The president is Weir Casady, president; W. J. O'Conner, vice-president; Ralph Kreutzberger, secretary, and Carsten Dahnken, treasurer and general manager. The American Theatre was a Swanson property and was for years regarded as the leading motion picture house in Salt Lake City. Today it is one of the two leading houses in the city, often being regarded as taking second place to the Paramount-Empress.

SYMBOL OF SWITCH STRENGTH

The Mutual Electric and Machine Company, of Detroit, use the bull dog as a trademark, with the slogan: "the switch with powerful jaws." Their catalogue incorporates prices and data in simple form, eliminating details which might be confusing. There are numerous photographs and line drawings, with a view to facilitate matters in thus graphically describing information which you will frequently require. Also to save mistakes, and time otherwise required to read descriptions, were illustrations of the switch in use.

Theatre Accessories--- Who's Selling It

Dixie Cups

WITH the coming of warmer weather one might naturally expect a greater frequency on the part of audiences for a trip to the water cooler. The modern manager, actuated by a resolve to give his patrons a sanitary drinking service can consider Dixie Cups as a product that will pertinently fill the bill. The Individual Drinking Cup Company, of Easton, Pa., and New York City merchandise these cups, together with a penny vending machine, which maintains itself without cost and yields a revenue to the house. Silently, throughout performance and intermission alike, these machines provide patrons with white, round, unwaxed Dixie Cups.

Ventilating and Cooling

"Why pay drug store prices for ventilating and cooling?" asks James M. Seymore, of Newark, N. J., who claims to be able to instruct house managers where and how to buy the necessary motors at first cost. Seymore gives a variety of service on installing fans and motors. His announcements says: "Thirty-six years experience in building Air Moving Machinery and installing Ventilating Apparatus is at your disposal for the asking. Send your plans and I will send you specifications for your requirements. Your local sheet metal worker or carpenter can assemble and erect a cooling system from the plans furnished as well as it can be done by men sent hundreds of miles to do this work."

FISCHER OPENS NEW THEATRE AT WEST ALLIS, WIS.

George Fischer, manager of the New Milwaukee Theatre, in Milwaukee, opened the $200,000 Capitol Theatre and Recreation Building in West Allis, Wis., a few nights ago and made the occasion of the formal dedication a gala one. He opened the show with Associated Exhibitors' "Going Up."

To mark the event a special eight page newspaper, describing the theatre and its policy was issued several days in advance. The business men of the town gave splendid support to the enterprise, filling six of the eight pages with advertisements. This announcement of the new house and the management's plans was published:

"The handsome new theatre will serve not only the large and prosperous section of West Allis, a community of homes, populated by families whose members like to take their pleasure together, old and young, but will also make its appeal to the residents of adjoining communities. The new Capitol has been established to fill the needs of up-to-date movie patrons, and the men whose vision has created it have seen to it that in every element, both great and small, it measures up to the best theatres of the country."

A $25,000 organ has a prominent place in the equipment of the house, and a special musical program was given on the opening night. The theatre is said to have one of the most complete ventilating systems in the Northwest, 30,000 cubic feet of pure air keeping the atmosphere as it should be.

WHAT'S IN THE AIR

STATION E. T. R. broadcasts its Independent Section. In its pages you will find evidence that the independent division of the industry is turning its heaviest batteries on the exhibitor. While they are shooting directly at him and not over his head, at the same time their intention is entirely beneficent. They are making a regular noise so that the theatre owner may know what there is that is good on the shelves of independent producers and distributors.

You will find much interesting matter in that section, in the opening pages especially—those devoted to the speeches of Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. of America; Joseph Dannenberg, editor of the Film Daily, and I. E. Chadwick, president of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors' Association. All of the trio have much to say that will grip the attention.

ON pages 9 and 10 in the main section you will find something new under the distribution sun. It is the story of Imperial Pictures Corporation, which announces its intention to release twelve pictures a year in 100 jurisdictions. The company plans to deal with an exhibitor-distributor in each zone at a flat purchase price, even if the picture prove to be of unusual quality.

In this issue Exhibitors Trade Review presents its fourth National Tie-Up. It commends it to your serious attention. You will agree with us that it is the most comprehensive that has been published. A dozen prominent National advertisers offer co-operation to the exhibitor. Do not miss any of the twenty-two pages which you will find devoted to the National Tie-Up of First National's "The Perfect Flapper," starring Colleen Moore.

Next week we shall try and provide some warm weather suggestions for the exhibitor who finds the summer his hardest period.

NOT a small portion of the fun of this picture is provided by a burlesque on Romeo and Juliet. To say the least, Colleen Moore makes a very modern Juliet for all her Elizabethan robes, yet she does it with such charm one wonders which he prefers—the original or the new burlesque edition

THOUGH lively and uncommonly vivacious, the characters never overstep the bounds, which is one reason why scenes like the above, with Colleen Moore and like the one below in which Phyllis Haver reclines on her couch, are so pleasing.

Exhibitor and Advertiser Extraordinary—Harry Watts

By GUY P. LEAVITT

BEING president of the largest Advertising and Selling League in the world would naturally qualify a man as an authority on advertising, and when he happens to be a moving picture exhibitor, he becomes a figure of marked interest in the theatre industry. Such a man should have some decidedly helpful ideas on moving picture advertising. It was with this thought in mind that I called this evening on Harry Watts, manager of A. H. Blank's big Rialto theatre in Omaha.

I was not disappointed. Mr. Watts has some ideas and suggestions which, if followed by the exhibitors who advertise in newspapers—and this makes it about unanimous—will put new blood into the box office arteries.

First, however, just a word about Harry Watts. In stature, he's one of nature's noblemen who have to cultivate a beaming disposition because they can't gallop. In other words, he's short and, er—a—a, stout, if you know what I mean. He was a newspaper advertising solicitor years ago, and made a niche for himself by being one of the first of his clan in Omaha to combine solicitation with the modern element of service. He had the knack of advertising, and he gave freely of that talent in helping his customers, several of whom were exhibitors. This trait, together with the amiable judgment which had won for him a wide popularity, brought him into his present field as manager of the Strand theatre in Omaha. Here, he had his hands and his head full.

When Watts left there as manager less than a year ago, to go to Mr. Blank's newer and larger Omaha house, the Rialto, he could honestly point to the Strand as one of the best money making houses, and the house held in as high regard as any in Omaha.

So much for a career that, if told in detail, should fill pages of interesting and helpful reading. Let's turn and look a bit at Watt's message on advertising; a message befitting, as I said, the president of the world's largest Advertising Selling club.

Sorry, but there's no magic formula to this message, although it is one undeniably capable of producing highly gratifying results. The prescription is work; that's all—just plain, every-day, unglorified, unromantic work. The grinding work of writing nineteen newspaper ads a week, where one-third of that number is usually the quota of the average theatre.

Mr. Watts selected to talk on newspaper advertising. He could have discoursed on posters, lobby displays, stunt exploitation, prologues, ushers' uniforms and atmospheric stuff, or he could have talked on the Rialto's big bill-board reservations. But it is a subject of more actual dollars-and-cents application when he talks of newspaper space, its possibilities and its benefits as he has found them.

The usual method of newspaper advertising, for the Rialto, taking any given picture, is as follows: an advance campaign during the week preceding that of the engagement; this consisting of a fair sized advertisement on Sunday, a week in advance, and ads in all papers on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. Then the campaign on the current picture, beginning with a large ad on Sunday, small current ads in all papers every day during the week, with alternating ads of a larger size, varied from paper to paper during the week.

Omaha has three large dailies: the World-Herald, the Bee and the News. Manager Watts uses equal space in all of them. For a typical week, in which he used his normal quota of nineteen original ads, let us take the Rialto's recent showing of "Flaming Youth," with "Ponjola" coming on. He has a schedule all his own, prepared to fit his needs. The diagram at the bottom of the page reveals what the schedule would show on "Flaming Youth."

INSTEAD of his customary nineteen ads, the foregoing schedule shows that there were twenty original advertisements. The original ads, written specially for the space which they occupied, are indicated by the asterisk * just preceding the figure showing the number of column inches used.

The average exhibitor, confronting a schedule of advertisements such as this, would see the following original advertisements necessary: Advance ads—36; current ads 3, or possibly 4, with a strong possibility that one or more of the advance ads could be whittled over a little and remade into a current ad.

Take, for example, the three advance ads for Sunday, November 18, one week preceding the showing. The old-fashioned plan is for the exhibitor to get up one ad for all three papers. One paper will set the ad, submitting a proof for revisions. When the proof

Establishing Contact with Residents of Smaller Communities

By ELI WHITNEY COLLINS

President M.P.T.O., Arkansas

SINCE the Editor has asked me to discuss the above subject, I shall accept it as the title of this discussion, but the contents are aimed more to advise how to capitalize this contact than to establish it. Establishing such contact is not difficult in a small community where every man knows every other one, but it requires real tact, diplomacy and thought to secure profitable results from such contact. There are a lot of old sayings that are accepted as true because they are old, but they do not always pan out.

For instance, there is the old saw "Familiarity breeds contempt." That is decidedly untrue with the small city theatre owner. He should bend every effort to acquainting his public with his problems and getting their aid in solving them.

One thing that is absolutely essential to capitalizing your contact with the public is a real and genuine love for humanity—a keen desire to make this old world a better place to live in. Adopt the Rotary Slogan, "Service Above Self," and you've made a dandy start.

The great "floating population" from which city theatres derive so great a percentage of their patronage is a negligible quantity in a small city.

Be Unselfish

Your success depends upon interesting, amusing and satisfying your friends, neighbors and acquaintances. This calls for a clean character, a high quality of personal service and at least the average amount of public spirit.

The wise small-town showman will belong to his local Lions, Rotary, Optimist, Civitan or other Luncheon Club. He will take an active part in the work of his Chamber of Commerce and cooperate to the fullest extent with his local schools, churches and other similar institutions.

He will not confine his activities to mere giving; he also will contribute in personal labor.

But to do these things successfully he must feel an honest desire to do them for the sake of humanity—not to increase his business. If selfishness rules you, your efforts will fail.

The small town theatre should be a Public Institution. The business men of the city should value it because it keeps the town alive at night. The schools and churches should value it as an aid in teaching the young. This necessitates scrupulous inspection of all films shown and the elimination of the objectionable, but it is the only way to gain and hold the confidence of those institutions.

Showmanship, as the term is so often applied, is likely to prove more of a liability than an asset in a small city.

ELI WHITNEY COLLINS

The "small town" exhibitor of Jonesboro, Ark., who by the delegates to the convention last year was chosen to fill a vice presidency in the national body.

Eighteen years of experience in the legitimate has taught the writer most of the timeworn "stunts" and crowd-getters, but they have little value in the operation of a small town theatre.

Be Wary of "Stunts"

There is too often a "kick-back." The exploitation of a risqué subject, a notorious character and similar things so productive of results in a large city, will quickly destroy the confidence of your patrons in the smaller city.

Such things bring the public in once, out of idle curiosity, but they cause so much adverse criticism elsewhere that the result is disastrous.

There are many things a small town manager must bear with fortitude that do not enter into the business problems of his big town brother. There is, for instance, the Chautauqua. The most vexatious competition known in the small city is this annual event, yet it must be borne with a grin because the guarantors are your friends and you cannot afford to antagonize them by vigorous competition. Big church revivals, public meetings, civic events, all of these distract from your patronage, but you cannot fight them. On the contrary, you must aid them by publicity on your screens and in other wise. If I were going into a strange community to establish contact with the residents and make customers of them, I would follow this plan:

Cultivate Memory

Join the leading civic clubs and organizations. Attend what social functions I could spare the time for and remember those I met there. I would be on or near my front door every moment possible during the hours that my theatre was open.

I would work so hard on every committee upon which I was appointed that I would be regarded as a valuable member of any organization to which I belonged.

I would instruct my employees that the customer was always right and that unfailing courtesy must prevail at all times toward every man, woman and child who entered my theatre.

I would sell myself on the town and boost it at every opportunity. I would maintain perfect order in my theatre, eliminating all rowdiness, and emphasizing the fact that mine was a family theatre.

I would own my own home, if possible; pay my debts promptly, pay my taxes, vote, serve on juries and, if asked to, accept one of the unremunerative offices, such as a member of the School Board or the Board of Aldermen, and strive to convince every one with whom I came in contact that I wished to serve first and profit afterward.

Back Up Advertising

I would always be found smiling, and would speak cheerfully to everyone I met, especially the children, and call them by their first names.

I would be absolutely honest in my advertising and back up every promise I made, no matter what the cost. I would contrive a live mailing list, using it not more than once a month and then

Old Lady Astor Says

WILLARD LOUIS, through the unusual work he has done recently, has earned a long term contract with Warner Brothers. Two late characterizations have been those in "Daddies" and as the Prince of Wales in "Beau Brummel." In "Babbitt," which is yet to come, he will have the title role. Mr. Louis has appeared to strong advantage in "Madame X," "Going Some," "Robin Hood," "Vanity Fair," "Great Accident," and "The Road to Destiny." The Warners are to be congratulated on securing the services of this sterling player.

FRANK BORZAGE, recently signed for a series of productions for Metro, is one of the persons in favor of original stories for the screen. As he has never made any attempt to conceal his conviction his mail brought what is described as a perfect avalanche of manuscripts following his joining Metro. It is said the author of the first story to be produced under his new contract may prove to be a surprise.

MAURICE TOURNEUR has just celebrated the tenth anniversary of his arrival in the United States. When he left the steamer at Hoboken his first visit was to the opening ceremonies of the New York Strand, which has just been celebrating completion of its first decade. Ten years later Mr. Tourneur visited Loew's State Theatre in Los Angeles to attend the world premiere of "The White Moth." This is the director's fifty-second motion picture to be made in the United States. That means he has an average of one picture for every ten weeks, which is a remarkable showing.

MR. TOURNEUR says he has made a lot of money on poor pictures, lost a lot on fine pictures, made some more on ordinary pictures and kept some. Also he says the country has been good to him and that he is now a citizen. He adds that the making and selling of pictures is exasperating, trying and heart breaking, but he does not know of anything else he would rather do.

AL CHRISTIE'S feature comedy, "Hold Your Breath," has been given two tryouts in Los Angeles theatres. Lesley Mason, the Hodkinson west coast representative, says the production went over "with a bang." Vice President Paul M. Mooney of the Hodkinson Company wires to New York that the production had been tried out before two extreme types of audiences with the result in each case of a great volume of laughter. The picture will be released by Hodkinson May 25.

CARL LAEMMLE and Al Lichtman were accompanied on their trip to Chicago for the Universal's mid-western sales convention by Julius Stern, president of Century Films. During the sessions Mr. Stern addressed the salesmen and told of Century's plans for the coming season. The meetings were attended by sales managers, salesmen from the entire mid-west, the district manager for the south and the Canadian general manager.

NEIL HAMILTON, the new Griffith star in "America," has been asked by Henry H. Kitson to pose for a statue which is to be a memorial for Washington's Headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y. Mr. Kitson is the sculptor of the statue of the Minute Man on Lexington Common. The sculptor came from his Massachusetts studio to New York to see "America" in the hopes of getting inspiration. He found it when he saw Hamilton in the role of the hero and selected him as the ideal type of young American manhood. The result should be truly a heroic statue.

THE Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York has set Saturday, May 24, for its Fifth Annual Installation Dinner and Dance at the Ritz Carlton Hotel. If the occasion bears resemblance to any of its four predecessors it will be a most enjoyable affair.

J. STUART BLACKTON, who a few months ago went to Los Angeles to produce pictures for Vitagraph, has decided to make his home on the west coast. This means that another of the producers is deserting the east and taking Horace Greeley's well known advice. Mr. Blackton has purchased a home in Beverly Hills and will dispose of his house in Brooklyn and his Long Island estate.

HOUSE PETERS has been signed by Universal and will appear in six Jewel pictures during the next two years. The first will be "The Tornado," a Lincoln J. Carter story. Mr. Peters is one of the screen's veterans. He was one of the earliest to appear under the banner of the Famous Players and for a considerable period was a member of the first stock company. Incidentally he was the star of "The Storm" which has been played by more than 8,500 theatres.

ALBERT E. SMITH, Vitagraph's president has engaged J. Warren Kerrigan to play the title role in "Captain Blood, Buccaneer", the Sabatini romantic novel. Mr. Kerrigan's selection was made as a result of a canvass of motion picture editors of newspapers, by exhibitors and others. Mr. Kerrigan is one of the veterans of the screen. There will hardly be a denial of the suggestion that his best work was in "The Covered Wagon." His performance in that stirring drama will keep his name fresh in the minds of the American public for many years to come. His admirers will await with keen interest the distribution of the picture containing his latest work. David Smith will direct and will begin photographing June 1.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE and his guests on the Mayflower on Saturday evening, May 10, saw "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." On the following evening at the National Theatre the picture opened for a limited engagement to a representative audience of official and social Washington.

WILFRED BUCKLAND, supervising artist of William De Mille's Paramount production, is in New York to confer with William De Mille, producer-director, and Clara Beranger, scenarist, on the production of "Spring Cleaning." Mr. De Mille and Mrs. Beranger are in New York engaged in editing and titling "The Bedroom Window," the mystery drama by Mrs. Beranger which was filmed at the Lasky studio.

REFERRING to the recent United States court decision that George Eastman of Rochester must not make so large a share of raw film material, the editor of the Evening Journal remarks that the decision will meet heartfelt approval in Europe. The writer goes on to suggest that Mr. Eastman may be violating the anti-trust law, but adds that is for the courts to decide. "Just at present he is making and selling moving picture material for less than European competitors can sell it," says the editor. "Eastman has cut rates as Ford has cut rates, making his money by producing more cheaply than his competitors and keeping the business in the United States instead of letting it go to Europe." The average man feels that he is a useful citizen."

P. N. BRINCH, general representative of the foreign department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, accompanied by Mrs. Brinch, sailed on the Berengaria on May 14 for Europe to resume his duties at Vienna. While in this country Mr. Brinch conferred with E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department, regarding future distribution plans for Paramount pictures. He also attended the New York and Chicago sales conventions held under the direction of Sidney R. Kent, general distribution manager.

Imperial Pictures to Release on Novel Distribution Lines

A NNOUNCEMENT is made by Imperial Pictures Corporation, of which Paul N. Lazarus is president, of a novel plan of distribution. The company will not lean on exchanges as they are now known, but has divided its territory into 10 jurisdictions, in other words, 1 per cent territories.

The company plans to supply each of its customers, which it aims to make exhibitors if possible, with twelve productions on its first contract issued at the rate of one a month. It has established a nearly arbitrary figure for production cost and also a stated sum to be paid by each exchange on the de-ritories have been so arranged, geographically, that they are of equal theatre population; that is to say, each of the hundred first run centers is surrounded by a territory practically equal in theatre going population to every other territory.

"Instead of selling only one run of a picture Imperial will sell to its exhibitor-purchasers the entire exhibition rights for their territory for a period of years. The picture will in turn be rented, by the exhibitors themselves, to other exhibitors throughout the territory. Imperial does not participate, in any manner whatsoever, beyond the original flat-price purchase of the exhibition rights.

"The picture becomes exhibitor property for exhibition throughout the territory, thus leaving in the hands of the exhibitors themselves the full rewards and profits for showmanship, exploitation and investment.

"It will be seen at once that under this plan of selling the heavy toll now paid by exhibitors for distribution disappears. There is no frightful waste for selling cost to be covered. A picture costing $150,000 to produce does not have to be sold to exhibitors on an exhibition value of $500,000 in order that the producer and distributor may make a profit, regardless of what happens to the exhibitor.

Price Standardized

"Because of the equality of the territories in theatre population the price for each picture has been nationally standardized.

"The production cost has been fixed in advance for the pictures. If the cost of any picture exceeds the fixed production cost, the selling price to the exhibitor will not be changed. Imperial will bear the extra production cost, and not the exhibitors.

"If, however, the actual production cost of any picture is less than the fixed production cost the territorial purchasers will each be rebated their pro rata share of the saving, and all users of the production will naturally save accordingly.

"Twelve productions, of uniform price, to be delivered one a month, are provided for in our first contract.

"We shall not ask exhibitors to buy stock in our company. We shall not ask exhibitors to pay us any advance deposits. We shall not ask exhibitors to make percentage arrangements with us. Our productions will be sold outright on a flat price basis for each territory.

"Film rentals can and must be limited, and to this end Imperial plan will prove to be a mighty influence.

"Pictures are not essentially better today than they were two or three years ago, but film rentals are vastly higher. Under the Imperial plan, with all its economies and directness, rentals can and will be brought down to a reasonable level. Exhibitor-purchasers will have an earning power in each production that will enable them to share their savings with all exhibitors throughout their territory. Surely the exhibitors are not going to find in their own ranks those who would profiteer against them.

"Under the Imperial plan, with production cost and selling cost fixed, the exhibitor, like every good merchant, will know what his business is going to cost him to run. He must know, his bank wants to know. If he knew today, he would not be in the grave danger that he is of being forced out of his business by the endless upward flight of rentals.

"Under the Imperial plan he cannot be made to pay a tremendous rental because an inexpensive picture, by chance, becomes a big box-office success. Selling price is based on production cost, not on box-office opportunism.

"Under the Imperial plan, the rewards for invested capital, for brains, for showmanship are sure and quick. Today the exhibitor, by his presentation and exploitation creates the market and good-will for a picture in his territory. After his single run, with all its risks and with all his investment, the distributor takes the picture from livery of a print. The company plans to begin production not later than September 1 and expects to have its first release ready by the first of November.

The officers of the company besides Mr. Lazarus are Raoul A. Walsh, the man who directed "The Thief of Bagdad," director-in-chief; A. C. Berman and Eugene H. Roth, vice-presidents; Arthur S. Friend, secretary and general counsel; Kenneth Hodgkinson, treasurer and general manager; Cresson E. Smith, general sales manager; George W. Stout, general manager of productions, and Charles H. Hickman, assistant production manager. All of these constitute the Board of Directors.

In the announcement by the company is the following statement as to its method of operations:

"Instead of dealing with exhibitors through a distributor and through a chain of exchanges, Imperial will deal direct with the exhibitors of the country, selecting approximately 100 theatre centers as its points of contact.

"Each of the hundred theatre centers is surrounded by a territory in which hundreds of theatres operate. These theatres naturally follow the lead of the first run houses of the theatre center. All of the hundred ter-him and gathers the profits and benefits of the exhibitor's exploitation. Under the Imperial plan the exhibitors themselves earn the rewards that are due them.

"By the elimination of the larger evils of present day distribution it follows naturally that all that train of petty annoyances, unfair practices and disappointments to which the theatre owner has been subjected must disappear.

"Imperial is already in full operation. Its main offices are in the Guaranty Trust Company Building, 522 Fifth Avenue, New York."

The personnel of the new organization is noteworthy for many reasons. Its executives, all young men, have had extended experience in the motion picture field. They are all men who have earned for themselves a high standing in the business.

All of the directors are so well known throughout the motion picture field that their combination in one undertaking brings to the exhibitors an organization that should inspire the utmost confidence.

During the last eight years Mr. Lazarus has directed the national sales and advertising of two of the most important distributing companies. For three years he was in charge of Vitagraph's advertising. He resigned that connection on the formation of United Artists Corporation to take over the direction of the Big Four's advertising and publicity. He was soon made sales promotion manager, and for the last two and a half years has been general sales manager for United Artists.

For many years prior to his entrance into the motion picture field Mr. Lazarus was in the publishing business, five years having been spent with the Hearst organization, where he was circulation manager of Good Housekeeping Magazine, and handled circulation problems for Cosmopolitan Magazine, Hearst's Magazine and the other Hearst publications.

Raoul Walsh's association as chief director with Imperial brings to the company the utmost in picture creating ability and genius.

Mr. Berman, came into the motion picture business five years ago, giving up a splendid law practice in Boston in order to enter the new field. When United Artists Corporation was organized Mr. Berman was made manager of Canadian exchanges, and he established and directed all the Dominion offices for the Big Four.

He was later brought to the home office, and as assistant general sales manager covered many sections of the United States. When the United Artists entered the foreign field he went to England and established the first foreign offices for the company. After many months abroad, he returned to New York, and from there has been directing the entire foreign department.

Roth a Foremost Exhibitor

Imperial has drawn from the exhibitor ranks in selecting its second vice-president. Eugene H. Roth is one of the foremost theatre men in the country. Some years ago he organized the Popular Amusement Company of San Francisco, operating the Portola Theatre. From a hundred thousand dollar enterprise Mr. Roth guided the growth of the organization until, at the time of his resignation, it had become a five-million-dollar organization, operated as Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, San Francisco, and running the Granada, California, Imperial and Portola Theatres of that city.

Mr. Roth has long been recognized as a leader in progressive and modern theatre operation. He will make his headquarters in Los Angeles, in immediate contact with Imperial's production undertakings. The selection of Mr. Roth to maintain the company's contact with its production sources proves a most progressive move and will be looked on by exhibitors as an indication that Imperial will have the box office of the country in view at all times.

Arthur S. Friend, secretary and general counsel, first appeared in the motion picture business as the general counsel and secretary of the Lasky Company, in October, 1913. He continued with that organization until 1916, it was merged with Famous Players. Mr. Friend became the treasurer and a director of the larger company.

In 1921, after severing his connection with Famous Players, Mr. Friend organized Distinctive Pictures Corporation, with which he continued until the end of last year.

Hodkinson Skilled Salesman

The selection of Kenneth Hodkinson as treasurer and general manager brings him still further along in the field in which he has made so marked a success. Kenneth Hodkinson was general manager of Paramount for an extended period. He resigned that connection to become general manager of United Artists Corporation, and has been with that organization in that capacity since its formation. For years he has been actively in the selling field.

Cresson E. Smith, general sales manager, has been in the motion picture business for ten years—five years with Metro and five years with United Artists Corporation. Mr. Smith joined United Artists when the company was organized and took charge of the Chicago territory. He spent the year of 1923 abroad for United Artists, and took over the supervision of its Australian offices. On his return he was made assistant general sales manager, with particular supervision over the middle western territory.

George W. Stout takes the post of general manager of production. His many years of experience in the production field have earned for him the reputation as a specialist in modern picture studio operation and management. In addition to Mr. Stout's service with Universal and Thomas H. Ince, and his five years with Mack Sennett, he has been active in the independent production field, and among other undertakings of note was production manager for Sol Lesser Enterprises in the making of several of the Jackie Coogan pictures. Associated with Mr. Stout in his duties will be Charles H. Hickman, assistant production manager.

The California office of the company is in the Stock Exchange Building, Los Angeles.

M.P.T.O.A OFFICIALS CONTINUE MUSIC TAX FIGHT

That the control of American music production by a select group was a menace, which in a short time would become destructive in discouraging genius and creative ability, was claimed to the members of the House Committee on Patents on May 6 and 7, by representatives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Radio Broadcasters and others.

A leading member of the Committee said at the conclusion of the hearing, which was held in the caucus room of the House Office Building, in Washington, that more genuine information on copyrights and the public policies associated with them came to himself and others on the committee at these sessions than was comprehended in the rest of the Congressional career.

President Sydney S. Cohen, M. J. O'Toole, Chairman of the National Public Service Department; National Secretary George Aarons, Col. H. B. Varner of North Carolina and others represented the Theatre Owners. The Broadcasters were represented by Attorney C. H. Tuttle and Attorney Sol Spring represented the First National Pictures, Inc. The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers was represented by Attorney Nathan Burkan, E. C. Mills and J. C. Rosenthal.

CRESSON E. SMITH

With ten years' experience in Metro and United Artists he becomes Imperial general sales manager.

Famous Enters Suit Against Artclass Pictures

ACTION was started May 11 in the Supreme Court, New York County, by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to restrain the Artclass Pictures Corporation from using the words "Moses and the Ten Commandments" in advertising a Biblical motion picture entitled "After Six Days." In its suit Famous Players maintains that the featuring of "Moses and the Ten Commandments" in the advertising of "After Six Days" is unfair and works injury to the plaintiff's picture, "The Ten Commandments," produced by Cecil B. DeMille.

It appears from the papers filed in the action that, joined with the Artclass Pictures Corporation as defendants, are all the stateright buyers of the film, "After Six Days."

Additional defendants named in the papers are Louis Weiss, Adolph Weiss, Max Weiss, Edward Grossman, Standard Film Attraction, Supreme Photoplay Company, Kerman Films, Inc., B. & W. Booking Office, and Charles Lumiere.

In petition for the injunction it is set forth that the Weiss Brothers and the Artclass Pictures Corporation purchased in 1922 a fifty-three reel picture produced in Italy and bearing the title, "The Holy Bible in Motion Pictures," and through an agreement with the National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., distributed the picture to churches and schools in serial form, one reel being issued each week, and that Weiss

Brothers and Artclass, in co-operation with the National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., continued to distribute and advertise the picture under its original title as a serial and without reference to either Moses or the Ten Commandments for several months, until it was announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that Cecil B. DeMille was producing "The Ten Commandments" as the greatest picture of his career.

Then, it is charged, the Weiss Brothers determined to make a theatrical production of their picture and, after re-editing and cutting down the film to about twelve reels, advertised it as "After Six Days."

Following the success of Cecil B. DeMille's "Ten Commandments" at its first presentations in Hollywood and the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York, it is charged the Weiss Brothers changed their advertising to "After Six Days, Featuring Moses and the Ten Commandments," with the last phrase even more prominently displayed than the title of the picture.

It is further charged that the Weiss Brothers, to confuse the public and capitalize the publicity for Cecil B. DeMille's picture, arranged for special showings of "After Six Days" in Boston and Chicago, while DeMille's "Ten Commandments" was playing in those cities. At the same time, the papers assert, the Weiss Brothers embarked on an advertising campaign in the film trade papers calculated to invite theatre owners to confuse and defraud the public by booking "After Six Days" immediately and advertising it as "featuring Moses and the Ten Commandments."

In addition to a large number of exhibits of the Weiss Brothers' advertising, the plaintiff also submitted to the court a bulletin issued by the National Vigilance Committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, in which the committee states that "the recent advertising of 'After Six Days' prominently featuring Moses and the Ten Commandments is, in the opinion of the National Vigilance Committee an attempt by Weiss Brothers to capitalize the present popularity of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation production. The National Vigilance Committee, after a thorough investigation, requested that Weiss Brothers immediately discontinue their prominent display in advertising as a sub-title or descriptive phrase, 'The Ten Commandments.' This Louis Weiss refused to do, contending that such a course would 'kill the present success of 'After Six Days.'"

"There has been so much controversy over the Weiss Brothers' Artclass production 'After Six Days,' featuring Moses and the Ten Commandments, and the Famous Players-Lasky, Cecil De Mille production, 'The Ten Commandments,' that we welcome this action.

"It will be the means of throwing the entire controversy into open court for a decision. Heretofore, Famous Players-Lasky has attempted to thwart the activities of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation in the distribution of its picture by indirect attack, using the Associated Advertising Clubs and endeavoring to have the newspapers and motion picture trade papers refrain from publishing Weiss Brothers' advertising and publicity notices."

KANSAS AND MISSOURI MAY CONSOLIDATE

Organizations May Follow Lead of Other State Exhibitors

FOLLOWING the merger of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois exhibitors, whispers are being passed up and down Kansas City's movie row relative to the merger of the M.P.T.O. Western Missouri, the Kansas City, Mo. Exhibitors Association and the M.P.T.O. Kansas. A prominent exhibitor said:

"Conditions are becoming such that exhibitors in Western Missouri and Kansas soon are going to realize fully the need of consolidated organization. A merger of these two organizations, including the Kansas City body, would mean that the combined force of such an association could raise $30,000 a year easily. I am a strong believer that there should be no boundary lines of organization in a territory served by the same exchanges.

"The only problem with which Kansas is confronted, which is different from Western Missouri, is legislation. Such a matter could be dealt with strictly individual, as far as Kansas is concerned, but it is in national and district affairs that we are confronted with the real tasks. I regret that many of the larger exhibitors of Western Missouri are showing such a lack of co-operation in becoming affiliated with the exhibitors' organization. However, we have about forty of the strongest suburban houses in Kansas City and we are hopeful of obtaining more members from out in the territory, about twenty of them already having come within the fold."

At a recent re-organization meeting of the M.P.T.O. Western Missouri a proposed merger with Kansas was discussed but no official action taken.

Charles Ray's New Series Will Be Distributed By Pathe

CHARLES Ray has again donned the baggy trousers, the battered, sun-bleached straw hat, and the rough-shod boots of the country "boob" and will engage under the Pathe banner in a series of rural characterizations such as made his name the foremost box-office attraction in the days of the Triangle program.

HER BEST FOOT FORWARD

Laura La Plant, Universal star, puts her best foot forward and wins our vote for any beauty contest.

The news of Ray's return to the type of role for which he became famous a few years ago is disclosed in a statement received this week from the Pathe home office, in which announcement is made that Pathe Exchanges, Inc., will distribute a series of four Charles Ray Productions.

C. Gardner Sullivan, the celebrated screen writer, is the author of the first story in which Ray will resume his country-boy role. "Smith," a name peculiarly expressive of a plain, substantial type of citizen in the community life of America, is the significant title of Mr. Sullivan's original screen story for the new Pathe star. The story is described as admirably suited to Ray's type of rural comedy drama and is expected to advance to even greater heights of popularity and box-office prestige the success he has enjoyed in such pictures as "The Coward," "The Clodhopper," "The Egg-Crate Wallop," and "Scrap Iron."

Ralph Ince, who stands in the foremost ranks of his profession and has over a score of screen successes to his credit, will direct Mr. Ray in his first production for Pathe. An unusually strong supporting cast is being assembled to surround the star in "Smith." Bessie Love has been engaged to play the feminine lead, and Wallace Beery has been signed for the "heavy" role. Other important additions to the supporting cast will be announced in the near future.

It is expected that camera work on Ray's first picture, "Smith," will be completed about the middle of July and that the production will be made available by Pathe.

CEREMONY MARKS BIG STUDIO TRANSFER

Taking Over of Goldwyn Studios by Metro-Goldwyn Is Elaborate

ONE of the most elaborate and important events in the history of motion pictures took place on the coast last week when the Culver City studios of Goldwyn were officially taken over by the recently merged Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company.

Ceremonies that were very elaborate were participated in by many California city officials, representatives of the Army and Navy, film magnates, stars and noted writers. Several thousand people were gathered together in front of the stage erected on the lot. Will Rogers was there with his wad of gum, Fred Niblo, noted director, acted as master of ceremonies and speeches were made by Louis B. Mayer, Joseph Schenck, Rupert Hughes, Abraham Lehr, Admiral R. E. Countz, of the United States Navy, Admiral Robinson, Commander of the Pacific fleet, Judge Summerfield, of the Domestic Relations Court, Captain Hill, assistant Police Chief of Los Angeles, Major Ruhland, Commander of Port McArthur, Asa Keyes, Los Angeles District Attorney, and several others.

Noting a huge drawing of Marcus Loew displayed at the front of the stage, Will Rogers remarked that if the new boss saw it he would probably call the whole deal off but that it was the best they could do as they only had Larry Semon as a cartoonist. Will also kidded the bigger and better pictures idea and registered strongly with one of his usual witty talks. When Abraham Lehr turned over the massive key to Louis B. Mayer he in turn presented smaller keys to his chief assistants Irving Thalberg and Harry Rapf.

Navy aeroplanes dropped floral greetings from Governor Richardson of California, Mayor Rolfe of San Francisco and many exhibitor organizations. Telegrams of good wishes were received from President Coolidge, Herbert Hoover, Marcus Loew, Will Hays, and F. J. Zehandelar, president of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Los Angeles.

Mr. Mayer announced the day after the celebration that production had already started under Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at the studio and that it would be kept up at a high pace for some time.

FARASH THEATRE, INC. CONTROL SCHENECTADY MOVIES

Albany, N. Y.—The theatrical situation in Schenectady, N. Y., is now in the control of Farash Theatre, Inc., through the recent acquisition of the Barcli Theatre. The company has been operating the State Theatre, the Strand and the Albany theatres, with a combined seating capacity of about 3,600.

For some time past the company has been trying to secure the lease of the Barcli, the only competing downtown house. This was accomplished last week.

William W. Farley, head of the company, in discussing the future policy, stated that one or two of the houses would probably be closed during the summer. It is also said that the huge State Theatre, may be put up at auction in August. This house was built a year or so ago, and was involved in the financial difficulties of Max Spiegel.

COMERFORD PLACED IN FIELD FOR M.P.T.O. PRESIDENCY

In recognition of his unselfish work as head of the M.P.T.O. of Western Pennsylvania, that organization has passed a set of resolutions indorsing M. E. Comerford as candidate for the presidency of the national organization. The following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, M. E. Comerford, of Scranton, Pa., a leading theatre owner and a member of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has been for years prominent in exhibitors organization circles, and absolutely loyal to our cause at all times, giving of his time, influence and money, freely, to advance the welfare of the Theatre Owners, Resolved, that we, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, in session assembled at the Fort Pitt Hotel, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Wednesday, April 30, 1924, do request and urge M. E. Comerford to become a candidate for the Presidency of our National Organization—The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America—at the Boston Convention, to succeed our present President, Sydney S. Cohen, who, after four years of unremitting service and sacrifice, has announced his determination to retire from the place he so long honored.

Resolved, that we pledge the votes and support of the delegates from Western Pennsylvania to the Boston Convention of our National Organization, to Mr. Comerford in this relation.

Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be sent to Mr. Comerford and furnished the Press for Publication.

'SO BIG' FOR FIRST NATIONAL

Colleen Moore will be starred in "So Big," Edna Ferber's daring analysis of a woman's life which is now sweeping the country as the best seller among novels.

This announcement, as important to the literary world as it is to the motion picture industry and the public, was made recently by First National Pictures, which owns the screen rights to the best seller.

Reflecting an astute business policy, production will not start until fall because it is desired to take advantage of the accumulative value of the book sale which is now leading every contemporary novel.

FIRST NATIONAL STARTS TWO-MAN CONVENTIONS

Detroit and Dallas Delegates Inaugurate New System

F. E. NORTH, of Detroit, and Leslie Wilkes of Dallas, last week inaugurated the recently announced plan of E. A. Eschmann of bringing the entire managerial sales force of First National Pictures to the New York office in pairs for a week's stay. The two branch managers arrived in New York on May 6, which, peculiarly enough, was the birthday of both of the men as well as the inaugural day of Mr. Eschmann's new co-ordination scheme, by means of which all First National sales managers will be brought into direct contact with home office officials and given an opportunity to study the system and organization of every department.

The weekly visits have been termed a "two man convention" and are to be continued throughout the year in lieu of national sales conventions. Wilkes and North were introduced to the entire New York office and saw the workings of the sales department and the method of handling exchange contracts; the publicity department and the preparation of advertising accessories; the scenario department; and the foreign department. Considerable time was given over to conferences with Mr. Eschmann and home office sales executives, and distribution problems in general as well as the problems in each branch manager's territory were threshed out.

The Dallas and Detroit managers were succeeded on May 12 by R. H. Haines of Cincinnati and B. D. Murphy of Toronto. These exchangemen will remain in New York until May 17 and will be followed by F. G. Sleiter of Seattle and S. J. Coffman of Vancouver, B. C.

START 'SIREN OF SEVILLE'

Production work on "The Siren of Seville," starring Priscilla Dean, was started this week at the Thomas H. Ince studio with the filming of the big bull fight sequence that has been troubling the producers ever since the selection of the story.

It was expected that the company would have to be taken to Spain for these scenes but through securing the services of several Spanish bull fighters at present filling engagements in Mexico and by fortunately securing the necessary legal permission it was possible to stage the scenes on the Ince lot.

TROY THEATRE CLOSES

FORMAL TRANSFER OF GOLDWYN STUDIO

Amid great ceremony and in the presence of film notables, the Goldwyn studios at Culver City were transferred to Metro in accordance with the merger terms. Some of the biggest men in the motion pictures were on the speakers list and Will Rogers, famous comedian, acted as master of ceremonies.

LARGE CROWD EXPECTED AT CONVENTION

Theatre Owners Look for Important Business Developments

THEATRE OWNERS all over the United States and Canada are exhibiting an interest in the coming Boston convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America which supersedes that evinced in any previous national gathering.

With membership in the national body direct in a large number of states it is fair to assume that every state in the Union will be represented as the inquiries at the New York headquarters indicate that theatre owners consider this meeting of the highest consequence to them because of the many important moves now being made within the industry.

The Theatre Owner occupies a higher and more dignified position now with the public than ever before. Good will is a powerful and most essential business asset. Good will has been built up for the theatre owner in unending volume through the public service activities of the national organization. This means freedom from national censorship, the elimination of unfair taxation, and eventually the setting aside of improper state and city levies and the general freeing of the theatre owner from every kind of unnecessary embargoes. This wonderful transformation in the status of the theatre owner could not be brought about in any other way and this has been and is worth more than figures could tell to the exhibitor and business generally.

The trip to Boston and attendance at the convention is one of the best business moves an exhibitor can make. It familiarizes him with conditions he would otherwise know nothing about. It gives him the personal touch with exhibitors from other states and sections and increases his general knowledge of the business. It is worth one hundred times what it costs to go to Boston in real business success.

The convention sessions will open Tuesday, May 27, at the Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston and continue over Wednesday and Thursday. The convention dinner will be Wednesday evening at the Copley Plaza.

It is essential that all who desire to attend secure reservations in the hotels and make transportation arrangements. A railroad rate of fare and one half has been secured. Every ticket agent in every city and town in the country has been empowered to grant this rate.

Every element of business, pleasure, convenience, hospitality and comfort has been cared for to make the coming convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America there on May 27-28-29 a success.

EXHIBITOR AND ADVERTISER EXTRAORDINARY

is o. k'd, matrices will be ordered for each of the other two papers. Thus, one ad will serve for three different mediums, offering the same message in each medium.

There are two possible advantages from this plan when the additional leisure allowed the exhibitors is not considered. First, there is the possibility of economy—that it doesn't cost as much to set one ad and get two matrices as it would to set three original ads, and that the art, or illustrations, will not cost as much. Second, there is the benefit of the repeated message, driving the picture home into the minds of the public.

Exhibitors with experience realize the fallacy of the first possible advantage, for there is no saving in cost. A newspaper charges just as much per inch when it accepts a matrix for an ad as when it accepts original copy and must set up its own advertisement. This is due to union rules which insist, even though a matrix is accepted, that the ad must be set up in type in the shop. Neither is there any great saving in art under the old six-ad plan as contrasted by Manager Watts and twenty-ad method. True, where there is an advertising artist on the staff, as at the Rialto, he must draw three big Sunday ads instead of one, and three cuts must be made. This means more money, to be sure, but very little when compared with the total advertising expenditure for the week. The illustrations in the week-day ads, both during the advance and during the current campaigns, are mostly taken from the press book ads. This was true in the "Flaming Youth" campaign.

Press Book Art

Just a word about press book art and its possibilities. Modern newspaper shops will take the press book matrices and from them make castings which can be cut up, yielding any little scene or part of the illustration as a whole, without injuring the original matrix at all. For example, there is a dancing girl in one corner of a big scene in a press book advertisement illustration. The printer takes the matrix, casts a stereotype from it, then cuts the dancing girl from the stereotype and you have your little illustration. In one of the illustrations offered in the "Flaming Youth" press book is a lively picture of the star, leaning far back, with her hand in the air holding a cigarette, from which a wisp of smoke floats upward. In another scene, on another page, is a bunch of balloons. Manager Watts took the cigarette smoking girl, joined the string from the balloons to the wisp of smoke, and had her holding a buoyant flock of balloons instead of a smoking cigarette! Thus, with no additional expenditure, a great variety of illustrations can be gained.

As for the value of the repeated message, reiterated in the same advertisement throughout several mediums—well, Manager Watts says there is no value. He says much of the effort and the expenditure is a loss; a lost opportunity to approach the

MARTIN SMITH INDORSED BY OHIO M.P.T.O.

State President Will Be Candidate for M.P.T.O. Presidency

THE following resolution was unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio held in the offices of the James Theatre, Columbus, Ohio.

Whereas, Sydney S. Cohen has repeatedly and definitely announced his determination to retire from the Presidency of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the National Convention to be held at Boston in May, 1924, thereby creating a vacancy exceedingly difficult to fill, and

Whereas, the Members of the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, with due appreciation of the present strength numerically of our State Organization, and with a proper regard for our standing as a factor in national organization affairs, fully realize the prodigious amount of labor, thought and time necessary to bring our State Organization to its present standing is due to the initiative and energy of our State President, Martin G. Smith, THEREFORE Be It Resolved, that we, having the utmost confidence in the ability and integrity of Martin G. Smith, do hereby indorse him for the Presidency of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

reader from a different angle. The theatre manager's public is a many sided personage, Mr. Watts believes, and what may appeal to one class about a certain picture will not appeal to another class of readers. For that reason his original advertisements are original, in every sense of the word. The illustrations are different, and so is the copy. The head-lines differ; the signature of the picture's title differs. Of course, the theatre's signature cut is always the same, but the title of the picture, hand-lettered in about every case, is different.

The task is not one for a lazy man. One's brain must be utilized. Illustrations must be reversed in this picture, silhouetted in that, reduced in a third and enlarged in a fourth. New descriptive terms for the picture must be thought out, and hackneyed phrases must be avoided like poison. With so much to do the temptation to turn to the "Word cannery" is strong.

Does It Pay

Then, when the task is complete, there is the checking to be done. The exhibitor who has seen the picture, may take something for granted in his copy. The thought may not be complete to the outsider. Or, as is sometimes the case, a perfectly decorous scene in the picture, when illustrated and pictured in an ad, may convey a cheapening impression to the reader. To avoid these pitfalls, Manager Watts utilizes the advertising solicitors from the various dailies in his city. They are frankly honest with him, giving their unbiased opinion of this or that head-line, illustration or phrase. They are a valuable help.

Does this additional work pay? Mr. Watts declares that his records show it does. His secretary tells of frequent letters from brother exhibitors asking for a matrix of this or that ad. He is held in high regard in advertising circles in his city—his position as president of the Advertising-Selling League indicates that—and such regard does not have a habit of coming unmerited. Then, finally there is that good, old honest feeling of a hard job well done, when the opportunity is worked and worked to a brown turn, and not a possible avenue has been left unexplored in the never ending effort to appeal to the many sided public. Mr. Watts has found that it pays to capitalize variety.

SEMON SIGNS CONTRACT WITH CHADWICK

Well Known Comedian to Make Five Reel Comedy Features

AN announcement made at the executive offices of Chadwick Pictures Corporation to the effect that Larry Semon, movie comedian, was last week signed to head one of their four producing units for release during the season of 1924-5. The prancing comic will be starred for the first time in a series of five reel de luxe comedies. This will be the fulfillment of Larry Semon's long delayed ambition.

Simultaneous with the announcement of the signing of Larry Semon, came a statement from the Chadwick offices that, Leon Lee, a well known producer, has been engaged to supervise the production of the Larry Semon Comedies. Production will be on the West Coast and starts within the next ten days. The vehicle for Semon's initial five reel comedy will be adapted from a famous stage play and will be announced within the next week.

Before coming into the Chadwick fold, Larry Semon, has for several years starred in one and two reel comedies for Vitagraph. Later it was reported that he had signed a contract with the Truart Film Corporation. However, he did not make any pictures for them. Larry Semon is now permanently settled under the Chadwick banner, and Larry and his new management are now very busy laying plans for what looks like a glorious future.

The engagement of Larry Semon is in accord with the intentions of I. E. Chadwick, President of the Chadwick Pictures Corporation, to expand his production activities on a larger scale. Besides the acquisition of Larry Semon, Chadwick Pictures boast of another distinguished star in the personality of Lionel Barrymore, who has just completed his first vehicle, "Meddling Women," for this company. Mr. Barrymore will start on his second production, "I Am the Man," on May 15, which will be made at the Tech-Art Studios, New York City.

'CHECHAHCOS' LINES 'EM UP AT NEW YORK CAMEO

For weeks Associated Exhibitors has been asserting, declaring, alleging and in short swearing that by the beard of its father "The Chechahcos" was a real box-office bet, and that with the right kind of exploitation behind it that it would prove a real clean-up. Last week the production was given the acid test when it was booked into the beautiful B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre for a Broadway run.

There was a box-office line for more than two hours Sunday afternoon and for about three hours Sunday night. Business slowed down a bit Monday, but with the publication of glowing criticisms by New York newspapers it started off with a rush Tuesday.

HODKINSON PROTECTED

Prompted by a report published in one of the trade journals to the effect that "Barbara Frietchie" was not protected by copyright, the Hodkinson Corporation upon behalf of the producers has issued a statement declaring that the production is fully protected under copyrights held by the Clyde Fitch estate.

The motion picture production of "Barbara Frietchie" in which Florence Vidor will be starred, will be an adaptation of the famous Clyde Fitch play, produced under rights purchased from the Clyde Fitch estate, and any attempt to infringe these rights will meet with prompt legal action.

MOVIE STARS TO BUILD HOTEL IN HOLLYWOOD

Within a short time Hollywood, the motion picture Mecca, will boast another luxurious hotel costing in excess of $1,500,000.

According to announcement just made by Frank Case, manager of the Algonquin hotel, New York City, for the last twenty years, he has associated himself with Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, famous film stars, in the erection of a height-limit hotel on the northeast corner of Hollywood Boulevard and La Brea Street that will appeal to the tourist, the traveler and members of the ever-increasing motion picture colony.

Final papers for the purchase of the site were signed last week in the offices of A. C. Blumenthal and Company, Realty agents in the transaction, by a syndicate composed of Frank Case, Douglas Fairbanks, Jesse Lasky and others. Consummation of the deal is the fruition of efforts lasting over a period of five years in which Mr. Fairbanks and associates have been most active in seeking to induce Mr. Case to build a hotel at Hollywood.

RICHARD BARTHELMLESS SETTLES DIFFERENCES

Controversy With Inspiration Is Settled Amicably

W. L. MALEVINSKY, of O'Brien, Malevinsky and Malevinsky, attorneys for Richard Barthelmess, has issued the following statement in respect to the controversy between Mr. Barthelmess and Inspiration Pictures, Inc.:

"Negotiations leading to a settlement of the differences that have existed are about to be brought to a happy conclusion.

"Many stories have been told, and varying constructions have been placed upon those stories.

"The time has come when Mr. Barthelmess and his counsel feel perfectly free to say that the differences were wholly in respect to matters of policy and constructive ideas that Mr. Barthelmess has had and holds in respect to the production of pictures and the conditions under which productions should be made.

"Through the initiative of Mr. William H. Hays, exhibiting an insight and understanding of life in a constructive sense, a quality that makes for statesmanship, these differences have about been wiped out.

"Mr. Barthelmess' new contract with Inspiration will cover a period of two years, and eight pictures to be released by First National Pictures, Inc. The conditions under which he will make pictures will be entirely to his personal satisfaction, and in line with his thought and endeavor."

I would maintain cordial relations with my newspapers, serving them whenever possible. I would meet the officials of the county, especially the Representative and Senator, and invite them to my house occasionally.

I would take advantage of this opportunity to explain some of my problems to them so that they might make an intelligent fight for me when unjust taxation threatened. I would accept any invitations to discuss my business problems before the Civic Clubs, giving them some idea of the problems that confronted me.

I would maintain a programme or house organ with at least one page for intimate discussion. I would invite the criticism of my patrons and I would heed that criticism. I would show all pictures at the smallest prices commensurate with a just profit.

I would augment my features with good short subjects. I would avoid "stunt" and sensational advertising, except on very, very rare occasions when some particular attraction offered unusual opportunity for effective work of this nature and when I was sure the picture would make good on the campaign.

FAMOUS 'FORTY' GOES TO POLI FOR MILLION DOLLARS

The biggest booking deal that New England has ever seen was put finally across at the end of the week, when contracts were signed between the S. Z. Poli Enterprises and Famous Players-Lasky for the forty productions just announced by that distributing corporation, and at a figure not a little in excess of a million and a quarter of dollars.

More than a month of selection and elimination preceded the actual session which resulted in the signing of the contract. The acting principals in the deal made extensive study of what would best appeal to the public, and based the selection accordingly. This is right in line with an announcement already made by the Poli general offices to all their theatre managers as well as their public, that no expense would be spared in seeing to it that they would get the best there was for the coming season.

The deal was finally consummated in a 10 hour session behind closed doors, with A. J. Vanni representing the Poli interests, while George J. Schaefer, New England general manager for Famous, with John J. Powers, the New Haven representative, looked after the Paramount side of the question. S. Z. Poli has been steadily building for himself a reputation for astuteness and progressive policy. This latest, since word of the contract has got out over the circuit, does not seem to have hurt his reputation one little bit. The actual figure is said to be $1,269,000.

'PETER PAN' NOT FOR MARY PICKFORD

Hiram Abrams Says Famous Star Will Not Work for Another Company

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of United Artists Corporation, has issued the following statement:

"In view of the many recent erroneous reports concerning the plans of Mary Pickford and her future film productions, it is timely to say that Miss Pickford has no intention of making pictures for distribution through any organization other than United Artists Corporation; nor has she any intention of producing 'Peter Pan' for any other distributing company.

"All reports that Miss Pickford will produce 'Peter Pan' for any other organization are erroneous, and there is no doubt in my mind but that the many recent rumors concerning Miss Pickford's future production activities have been set afloat for purposes of propaganda in behalf of other persons. I am speaking for Miss Pickford, and I know she has no intention of producing pictures for distribution through any organization other than United Artists Corporation.

"This type of malicious gossip concerning the activities of the stars comprising United Artists Corporation has sprung up so often in recent months that it has become not only aggravating in the general ranks of the motion picture industry, but especially so to the owners and stockholders of United Artists. Those seeking the actual truth about Miss Pickford's future film productions need only remember that a few weeks ago she renewed her United Artists contract for a period of three years."

NEW KANSAS CENSORS

Dell Keizer and Mrs. George P. Whyte of Kansas City will be the members of the new motion picture censorship board as soon as present incumbents can be removed, George E. Kimball, city comptroller, announced last week. L. G. Buford and Eugene Flynn, censor and assistant censor, respectively, have said they would not resign, asserting they were civil service employees. Buford was appointed in December by Frank Cromwell, ex-mayor. Mr. Kimball, investigating the appointment, found that because of an ordinance passed May 1, 1923, Mr. Cromwell's appointments to the board were illegal. The ordinance removed the positions from the power of the mayor and gave the appointments to the comptroller.

'BAGDAD' SWEEPS BOSTON OFF ITS FEET

Picture Received by Critics and Public as Masterpiece

BOSTON has witnessed many an auspicious picture opening, but never in the history of motion pictures has there been anything here that could match the start to which "The Thief of Bagdad" got away to at the Colonial on May 5, look at it from any angle you may choose.

When you can get one of the real leaders of Boston society going around the city with a huge roll of one-sheets under her arm, descending on all the leading hotels and clubs and demanding that they hang them conspicuously in their lobbies, knowing they dare not refuse, why, then my son, something is happening.

When, moreover, J. Clarence Hyde, who is business manager for the run of the picture here, is welcomed with open arms by the director of the Boston Public Library, even as the suggestion that originals of the art work done in connection with the picture and its advertising would make an appropriate display in the library's art department, why then the Hub is yours. Pack it up and take it away if you will, there is no more possible; as you will realize if you know your Boston.

There are so many things to talk about on Fairbanks' lovely fairy tale that it's hard to pick things that Boston never before dreamed of. For instance the Colonial, finest legitimate theatre in the city, has been under the stigma of being somewhat unsuited for pictures. It has never played a Sunday night show regularly. Success of the picture of "Bagdad" removes the stigma, Colonel Foote, commissioner of public safety, failed to see anything that under the law he would have to delete for Sunday. Result: Tom Lothian, jovial manager of the Colonial, loses his week end auto trips for the rest of the year, and Mr. Hyde is happy because he has a place to go every Sunday night.

The house for the opening night was bought solid by a committee from the patronesses of the Boston Lying-In Hospital, for the benefit of which the first night was given over. Mrs. Oliver Ames, Jr., was chairman, and, incidentally, was the woman who lugged around the posters, using a 100 and then coming back for another. She was assisted by Mrs. Walter Hunnewell, and Mrs. T. J. Coolidge. While the price for the run is $1.50 top in the evening, and $1.00 matinees, the society ladies sold the house out completely for their benefit night at $3 a ticket. It was the social register come to life. The list of patronesses, all of whom were present, started with Mrs. Channing H. Cox, wife of the Governor, and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, wife of the Lieutenant Governor.

As for the theatre itself, while all this was going on, it was draped with about $10,000 of oriental rugs from Pray and Son, chiefly about the balcony and the boxes, the same firm also erecting an oriental canopy over the box office, and lanterns in the same style under the marquee. The ushers are dressed in Turkish costume, and between acts, for those who desire to partake, an honest to goodness Arab in his native dress serves Bagdad coffee.

MAY 23 FOR VITAGRAPH SALES CONVENTION

Chicago Meeting Will Be Attended by All Branch Managers

PRESIDENT ALBERT E. SMITH of Vitagraph has set May 23 and 24 as the dates for the general sales convention which will be held in Chicago. The convention will be attended by all division managers, branch managers and executive heads. John B. Rock, who went to the Coast two weeks ago on his third trip of inspection of Vitagraph branches, joined Mr. Smith in Los Angeles last week for a conference prior to the convention.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Rock will leave Los Angeles for Chicago on May 20. A. Victor Smith, A. J. Nelson, assistant general manager, and W. Wallace Ham, publicity director, will go to Chicago from New York. This is the first general meeting Vitagraph has held for several years and is the result of Mr. Rock's efforts to bring the various heads of the sales force into closer co-operation and to give them a more direct understanding of the production plans which Mr. Smith personally is supervising in the West.

Those who will attend are, George A. Balsdon, special representative; J. M. Duncan, of Chicago; H. Bradley Fish of Los Angeles and Thomas G. Guinan of Atlanta, division managers; S. N. Burns, Albany; Ira P. Stone, Atlanta; C. W. Sawin, Boston; C. W. Anthony, Buffalo; J. A. Steinson, Chicago; C. L. Kendall, Cincinnati; J. E. Beck, Cleveland; J. E. Huey, Dallas; Frank E. The examination will be held throughout the country on June 18. It is to fill vacancies in the Department of Agriculture at an entrance salary of $900 a year. Advancement in pay may be made without change in assignment to $1,260 a year.

The duties of the position, consist of the assembling, splicing, and repairing of motion picture films, and may involve the straining of positives, the printing of positive film, and the operation of projecting machines.

Applicants must attain an earned rating of at least 60 per cent in the practical questions, otherwise the remaining subject of their examination will not be rated.

LEADERS ALL

Jesse J. Goldberg, Independent Pioneer

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, president of Independent Pictures Corporation and a prominent member of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors' Association, has been affiliated with the independent division of the motion picture industry for twelve years.

In the face of many obstacles and discouragements he has adhered to his determination, with the result that in 1923 following the organization of his present company he scored a marked success and plans to do even a larger business for the coming year of 1924-5.

Mr. Goldberg was born in New York forty years ago. His early education, after his graduation from the New York public schools, embraced a four years' course in the Dwight Preparatory School, established by Professor Dwight, formerly of Yale University.

Afterward he took a three-year and post-graduate courses in the New York Law School, being graduated at the head of his class, which numbered over seventy men.

At the age of nineteen years Mr. Goldberg was selected by the National Committee of the Republican Party as one of the comparatively few speakers on its paid list. For ten years he was an accredited speaker for the National Committee, touring the country from coast to coast.

HE was also a speaker on the roster of the National Security League, making addresses throughout the United States prior to the World War on patriotism and preparedness, talking in many cities under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., the Y. M. H. A., the Red Cross and other patriotic bodies.

During the war Mr. Goldberg was one of the four-minute men, speaking under the auspices of the national government. At the request of Harold Edel, the well-remembered manager of the New York Strand, the film man was assigned by the Department of Public Information as the only speaker at that house during the various Liberty Loan campaigns.

Mr. Goldberg is credited with having made the record duration speech of that drive. On the final night of the campaign he spoke, without stopping,

LEADERS ALL—JESSE J. GOLDBURG

BECAUSE not alone is he one of the pioneers in independent production and distribution but he has given intensive study to systematizing methods of state rights circulation of product; because he was among if not the first to devise territorial divisions based upon percentages and upon all the factors of seating, population, railroad facilities and time; because he is a believer in continued service.

from 8:55 until 12:10, or three hours and 15 minutes, and accomplished the record of $185,000 Liberty Bonds disposed of in that period.

The achievement gave the blue star to the Strand, which at the time was in competition with the Rivoli and Rialto theatres.

As a speaker Mr. Goldberg's services have been in demand for a good many years by public and charitable enterprises.

IT was about twelve years ago he became interested in the Commercial Motion Pictures Corporation, engaged in the manufacture or making of positive motion picture prints for Universal and other independent producers who were then allied against and fighting the General Film Company and the owners of what was known as the Latham patent, which for a time controlled the motion picture projection machines of the country.

Mr. Goldberg saw the opportunity to produce independent pictures and to distribute them among independent exchanges. He organized the Life Photo Film Corporation and purchased the screen rights for what now would be considered a nominal sum such popular stage plays and novels as "The Greyhound," "Captain Swift," "Northern Lights," "The Banker's Daughter," "Spring-time" and "The Avalanche."

This was the beginning of a series of monthly feature releases and which has been credited as being the creative force for the present method of independent production and distribution.

Mr. Goldberg's experience in the early days of his film activity were replete with dramatic incidents. He has met all kind of obstacles, but has pursued his determination to manufacture independent motion pictures.

Among the stars engaged by him were Lionel Barrymore, Mary Nash, Florence Nash and Lillian Gish.

In the coming year the producer has contracted to make and distribute twenty-four five-reelers, eight six-reel features and fifty-two single-reel subjects, the latter to be known as the Screen Book of Knowledge.

The producer points out that while he intends to increase his output he has no intention of competing with the larger or old-line concerns "within whose province there lies the right, the privilege and the market to make what are commonly termed 'Specials.'"

HE believes there are two distinct classes of productions—those made by companies controlling their own first changes and oftentimes their own first runs and those made by the producers who confine their activities to making popular priced pictures.

Mr. Goldberg maintains that the forte of the independent producer as he sees it is in the making of lower priced subjects—that these the old line companies cannot afford to touch, as it costs as much to distribute a picture costing $20,000 as it does one that entails an expenditure of $200,000.

Mr. Goldberg is a believer, too, in assisting his distributor-customers after his product is sold; in a policy of service, and that the only permanence of an institution lies in the permanence of service.

Go To The Convention

WE hold it to be a duty on the part of the individual exhibitor of motion pictures to attend the convention which is to be held in Boston on May 27, 28 and 29. We are not referring to those who by reason of distance or expense or other similarly contributing cause are debarred from considering the journey.

We are referring to those who have the time and the means. The convention is in the interest of the theatre owners, and from all we hear it will be well worth their while to be present.

Entirely apart from questions of organization—and just for the moment we are minimizing these—it gives the man who exhibits motion pictures an opportunity to rub elbows with his fellows, with men from other parts of the country, with many men he hardly can have a chance to meet again for a year at least.

It affords an opportunity for the interchange of ideas, to learn what your brother theatre owner does in emergencies with which you sometimes are brought face to face.

LETTERS from exhibitor leaders in various sections of the country contain the strongest evidence that when Exhibitors Trade Review in its preceding issues made a plea for one national organization it struck a responsive chord.

In but one instance was there disagreement and then the writer conceded the articles were timely.

Letters came from Indiana, from North Carolina, from Pennsylvania, from Arkansas, from Ohio, from Massachusetts, from Missouri and from the District of Columbia.

Ernest Horstmann, writing from the Bay State, declares he feels sure it is the "wish of every exhibitor in the State of Massachusetts that every state and every unit of the various exhibitor bodies and associations be represented in Boston, and that the result may be one strong organization developed on a plan which will be agreeable to all."

There is real cordiality in that—and those who know the Old Bay State know there is hospitality behind it, too.

Novel Distributions

THE announcement of the distribution plans of the Imperial Pictures Corporation, the details of which will be found on another page, will arouse marked attention throughout the motion picture industry. They will command attention for two principal reasons:

In the first place they are a radical departure from the methods that have been employed since the inception of feature production.

Secondly they will command respect on account of the character of the men composing the directorate of the company.

Roughly the principle of operation is a combination or a welding of First National and of state rights distribution.

The company aims to sell to a territorial purchaser, preferably an exhibitor it is announced, for a stated number of years at a flat and predetermined price a series of pictures each of which shall have cost a stipulated amount and in each of which following sale to its buyers the Imperial shall have continuing interest within the life of the contract regardless of any extraordinary box-office power the subject may possess or develop.

As we read the announcement of Imperial it plans to bring to the motion picture industry the same methods of merchandising and jobbing that obtain in other lines of commercial activity. By that we mean it will attempt to standardize the cost of pictures over a period of time.

* * *

ONE phase of the announcement that will create comment is that if the cost of a subject be less than the allotted and standard budget a pro rata rebate will be made to the buyers, while on the other hand if the cost be greater there will be no advance in price.

The significance of this feature is that, by reason of the restricted return from the buyers, the company almost automatically will be prohibited from accepting pictures that have cost measurably in excess of the $150,000 established as the basic price.

The company does not seek to compete with the producers of expensive "specials," according to President Paul N. Lazarus. It does aim to provide and sell worthy production that may be distributed to exhibitors at a fair and reasonable rental.

Among the highlights of the proposition is that exhibitor or other purchasers are not asked to buy stock in the company, to pay any advance deposits, or to expend a dollar until the delivery of the print. The financial risks are assumed by Imperial.

On paper the plan is almost altruistic, and yet if sincerely carried out should prove to be soundly businesslike.

The acid test will be the ability of the company to adhere to its established maximum negative cost, its refusal to withdraw from its clientele a subject that is known to be a "whale," and the disposition of the territorial buyer to pass on fair rental values to his exhibitor customers.

1924 Product of Independent Producers and Distributors

Attracts with Excellence of Casts and Diversity of Themes

IN presenting its list of present and forthcoming productions available to exhibitors during the whole of the 1924-1925 season the Independent Producers and Distributors make it plain that it has not proceeded with false illusions to actuate its members.

The Independent organization realizes that this is a far-flung nation, that audiences do not all come from institutions of learning and that every picture listed in the announcement is not suited for every theatre. The cosmopolitan nature of the American population has been remembered and in the announcement here will be found pictures suited to every class of audience. The REVIEW, in bringing these pictures to the attention of its readers, places them in classifications which simplifies the problem of knowing at once the category to which each picture belongs.

ONE reason why the Independents have become a sound, vigorous organization is seen in the schedule of pictures listed on this page. Live, vigorous pictures is the keynote. They offer a variety of products aimed to entertain and interest every type of audience known to the exhibitor. The quality of the production, the stars and other players used in them, give adequate testimony to high value of the pictures, viewed from the box-office and any other angle by which films are judged. In making up his booking schedule the showman will profit by giving due consideration to the films listed herewith.

COHEN CALLS UPON INDEPENDENTS TO EXPLOIT AND ADVERTISE PRODUCTIONS

Exhibitors' President Tells Why "Independent Month" Failed in 1921—Editor Dannenberg Says Unless the Producers Have What Motion Picture Exhibitors Want the Rest Doesn't Count

SYDNEY S. COHEN, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, called upon the members of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association May 13 to give more and more attention to the exploitation of their pictures. Mr. Cohen talked at length upon the problems facing the independent producer and of the ways in which the exhibitor might co-operate with him.

The occasion was the regular monthly luncheon of the association, the final one of the season. There was a large attendance. Prior to the introduction of Mr. Cohen the members were addressed at length by Joseph Dannenberg, editor of the Film Daily, who spoke with extreme frankness.

Mr. Dannenberg declared that the members of the association might talk about co-operation until their tongues dried in their mouths; but unless they had the pictures the exhibitors wanted to play the rest would not count.

The editor declared there were at least 20 to 40 per cent less independent producers than there were three years ago, and in the field of short subjects at least 50 per cent less. He also referred to the "combinations and the closing in in this business that is occurring every day."

Mr. Cohen at the close of his prepared speech took up some of the statements of Mr. Dannenberg, expressing the view that the editor was too pessimistic. As to the failure of "independent month" planned at the Minneapolis convention in 1921 Mr. Cohen said it was due to the attempt on the part of many "new" independents to palm off cheap westerns at high prices in the belief that the exhibitors would book them because of its being "independent month" and decreed so by the convention.

President I. E. Chadwick was in the chair. Responding to the invitation extended by President Cohen to attend the convention in Boston the independent executive promised that the association would be represented.

"Our speakers here are eminently qualified to discuss the problems of our industry," said President Chadwick. "I am not going to take long in making introductory remarks because fortunately our two speakers are known in the industry from coast to coast as men who can speak with authority through a wealth of worthwhile experience and from a greater wealth of observation. I take pleasure in presenting the first speaker this afternoon, Mr. Dannenberg."

"Really we need this sort of an organization very much indeed," said Mr. Dannenberg,

SYDNEY S. COHEN

President of M. P. T. O. America, who on Tuesday told independents they must exploit their pictures to exhibitors to reap satisfactory results.

berg, "but when I hear of the interdependence of the independent producer, independent distributor and independent exhibitor, I wonder just what that means. It occurs to me, and I know Mr. Cohen will back me up, that I heard something about this in Minneapolis several summers ago, where a large number of exhibitors rose on their hind legs and showed enthusiasm and the independent distributor and producer was, next to God Almighty, the finest thing in the world, and the month of September was to be the period in which the independent exhibitor was to prove his loyalty.

"Time rolls on, as the title says it always does; September came and all these exhibitors wended their way into the old line exchanges and bought all the film that was possibly obtainable. It seems to me that one of the outstanding things in this business is that people talk much and do little.

"Just how and where these independents are going to work reminds me somewhat of a Douglas MacLean story.

"Mr. McLean says there comes into Hollywood the finest burlap bag obtainable in all the world. It is stitched with silken threads by the finest type of beautiful woman and richly embroidered on each corner. The bag reaches the people in our business and is passed around, eventually landing in the hands of one individual, the independent producer.

"Mr. McLean is right, and you gentlemen are holding the bag. How long you gentlemen desire to secure the rights as the first and only holders of the bag in the picture business depends entirely upon your patience and the appreciation of the bank with which you are doing business.

Must Have the Pictures

"You know better than anyone else how much your pictures have grossed and you also know that the average intake on the average independent picture does not exceed $250,000. If you get in the entire gross anticipated with the help of the Independent West Coast Theatres and Mr. Finkelstein and the other good buyers, when all is said and done your complete profit, your net, on your picture of $250,000 gross is actually $15,000. It sounds ridiculously small, $15,000. If you only make something like $15,000 on the average picture how many good average pictures have got to be realized to take care of the two or three very bad boys that get nowhere. We won't argue this point now.

"You can talk of co-operation, you can talk of interdependence until your tongue dries in your mouth, but unless you have

Hands Up and Be Quick

To say the least it seems a bit unusual to have some one break in on a party and order a guest, at the point of a gun, to put up his hands. Just such things as this heighten the dramatic moments of C. C. Burr's "Lend Me Your Husband" and give the added touch of interest that is so evident in the picture.

In addition to the dramatic features and the handsome sets which mark the production, it numbers among its cast of players such favorites as Doris Kenyon, David Powell and Dolores Cassinelli, each of whom is a genuine artist.

pictures the exhibitors want to play the rest does not count. If there is anything in the world that can prove the lack of co-operative willingness on the part of the independent exhibitor to the independent producer and distributor it is this.

"I refer to the company that started with a most ambitious program this season, and one of the outstanding features in its record is its inability to secure first runs. We all know that unless you get a first run you are in trouble in your respective territories.

Business Closing In

"This particular concern has been shoved out of many of the leading first runs operated by independent exhibitors and yet that independent exhibitor knows that unless something is done to sustain the independent producer it cannot be many years before he is out of the business. Yet we talk of independence. Anyone but a blind man cannot help but see the manner in which this business is closing in.

"The cumulation of data for The Film Year Book has disclosed a steadily decreasing line as to the number of independent exchanges in this country, and a steadily increasing number of chains of theatres.

"It is certain that there are today in this country at least 20 to 40 per cent less independent producers than there were three years ago. In the short subject field that probably reaches over 50 per cent less than three years ago.

Bad in England

"I am going to mention names. After going through the middle west Mr. Al Aaronson came back rather disgusted. He stated he could not sell a picture even as good as "The Unknown Purple" because the first run exhibitor said he would not book a picture from a concern that did not have sustained product.

"If that is unusual you gentlemen know.

I take it as a fact, with the combinations and closing in in this business that is occurring every day. I was told only last night by Sir William Jury that never in the history of English pictures were conditions so frightfully tragic as they are today with the independent producer and distributor, because of combinations of exhibitors both legal and illegal.

"There was a meeting held a few weeks ago of the sales managers of the larger companies seeking to bring about remedies to offset the evils existing in certain territories.

"A distributor told me only a few days ago that in an effort to meet conditions he is planning to release independent product on an 80-20 basis, until his advance is covered, after which he intends to work on a fifty-fifty basis because of the drive which may develop in his territory within the next six months.

Must Stick Together

"Unless the independents are going to work with each other there are not going to be any independents. What I mean is that there will be so few in comparison. Your job, and it is the only job I think you really have, is to make the exhibitor realize you have no reason to believe that out of the kindness of his heart the independent exhibitor is going to welcome you with open arms.

"If you had a series of pictures he felt he wanted he would play them. The ratio of exhibitors who are willing to sustain the independent market could be obtained by a postal card vote throughout the country in a period of a month.

"You have no reason to believe other than what I have said because it is so. The independent exhibitor is not going to make it easy either to give you a fair price or a decent playdate unless you have got what he wants."

Taking Wrong Remedy

"Mr. Dannenberg has pointed out the misguided cure that the independent exhibitor is seeking and using," said Mr. Chadwick. "After all, when the independent exhibitor is going into these price-fixing combinations that resort to threats, thought must be given to this phase of it—that there must be some motive that actuates that course of conduct.

"He has not gone into the incomprehensible line of conduct because it is a matter of pleasure for him, but he has seen the handwriting on the wall, and he is seeing the narrowing lines of the larger distributor, producer, exhibitor, gaining a stronger and stronger hold upon the source of supply and even though that independent exhibitor may be misguided in the cure he seeks to adopt, he sees nevertheless the illness from which he is suffering, though he is taking the wrong remedy.

"There is with us today a gentleman who has devoted four years of sincere effort, four years of earnest leadership, often misunderstood, often purposely misquoted and misrepresented, but through it all a man who has seen the coming of just the problem that is confronting the men whom he has led through these four years of strife and struggle. He has a message for us which must be something we can take home for future guidance. It is a pleasure to present the last public appearance before the termination of his term as president of the national exhibitors, Sydney S. Cohen."

Future Judged by Present

"I first want to thank your chairman for his very gracious introduction," said Mr. Cohen. "I am very glad to be here.

"The subject I previously selected for my discussion today, 'The Future of the Motion Picture Industry as Revealed by Current Events,' is of such a wide and extensive character that it practically takes in everything connected with our industry. I therefore concluded to be more specific in my statements and have selected as a more appropriate title: 'The Greater Opportunity for the Producers and Distributors of Independent Pictures.'

"Our purpose within the confines of organization is obviously to direct our efforts toward the betterment of the industry. We hope to do this by a union of forces. Producers, distributors and exhibitors, which will be of such a mutual nature that the interests and the rights of all will be so fully conserved as to make the operation of the system advantageous all around.

"I do not mean by this that we should have one organization as that is manifestly impossible and I may say entirely impractical even though we should agree upon that subject. There are so many elements that affect closely the interests of the producers and distributors wherein the other side of the situation cannot be entirely seen that it would be almost out of the question to ask the exhibitor to merge his affairs into such a compact.

"Then, on the other side, there are so many things which the exhibitor fails to see with respect to the producer and distributor where the exhibitor's angle of the situation would not be acceptable to them.

Seek to Effect Coalition

"Hence it follows that for the purpose of practical business we are obliged to maintain different organizations, and when we meet for any purpose we can co-ordinate and make such concessions as the mutual welfare of all concerned demand.

"Different attempts have been made since the motion picture industry attained its prominence in the business world to effect coalitermed a monopoly of production. Not only has this situation been attempted along lines of controlling production, but it also has taken upon itself the aspect of centralizing distribution and of late years those instrumental in pressing forward these lines of procedure have sought the monopoly of motion picture theatres as well.

"Any such close combination will have only the effect of destroying initiative and individual enterprise within this industry, producing a sameness of product and a monotony of action so as gradually to work the disintegration of the whole business as there is now entirely too much monotony associated with it from the production viewpoint. A much wide diversified product would be of infinitely greater value to the industry and the public.

"I believe this is in reality one of the high purposes of your organization. You do not seek to injure any other person in the business. Your purpose is to so associate yourself as to protect this individual enterprise, provide for its extension and for the utilization of all of the genius resident in the American people which might find expression or desire expression within the lines of motion picture production.

No Group Must Control

"As a motion picture, in the essence, is the result of an idea transmitted first to paper and then visualized through dramatic performances and made available for the public on the printed film, it follows that any curtailment of these ideas or the abridgment of any individual initiative must of necessity interfere with the fuller and more complete expression of the same in the motion picture theatre.

"It is therefore very necessary for all of us to take into account the diverging element of this industry and so arrange our affairs that no given group will have any more of a control over it than the actual interests of the business warrant.

"We will always have groups of producers and distributors, also exhibitors. We cannot at any time bring about a complete organization along these lines as the individual initiative constantly asserts itself and it might be well at all times to give this the best possible play within the bounds of practical business. We would not of course desire to flood the market with cheap, non-representative pictures, neither would we agree to have all of the factory made type.

Independents' Opportunity

"If the independents in the motion picture business get together and stay together and work together, many salutary things could be accomplished.

"Most of the worthwhile picture productions have been made by the independents. We believe that since the formation of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at Cleveland in 1920 and the militant campaign we have waged for the preservation, protection and advancement of all independent forces in the Industry, that the independent producer has been encouraged and inspired to give his creative ability, initiative and effort toward the making of feature films, and with the great advancement in the art of directing pictures and the large number of very capable and efficient directorial minds that have developed since that time that we will see a greater number of independent productions made of a more superior quality than ever before.

"The important point for all independent forces in the industry is to guard against and prevent the creation of an artificial scarcity of meritorious pictures and then to see that after these pictures are made that through intelligent exploitation and advertisement they are brought to the attention of the motion picture public.

"Art is worldwide, and the fine pictures with superior entertaining qualities from all parts of the world should be brought to America to be shown here to our public in conjunction with American made films.

"A note of warning was sounded at a hearing before the Patents Committee of the United States House of Representatives the other day in Washington by Nathan Burkan, a New York attorney, who called attention to the monopolies and trustification processes existing in the motion picture industry, mentioning particularly the case of a theatre owner in Peekskill, N. Y., from whom film was withheld and who was denied an opportunity of operating his theatre, almost resulting in the virtual destruction of his investment and indirect confiscation of his property.

Talks of Peekskill

"This attorney explained how it was necessary for him to take the matter to higher courts of the State to secure justice for his client.

The impression created in the minds of some of the Congressmen was one that makes it necessary for all of us to think seriously of the developments in this industry along certain lines, as it may mean, if not corrected, Congressional action which will tend to control our business by legislative processes such as an Interstate Film Commission or some similarly constituted body.

"Such an eventuality would be very disastrous in my opinion, and every effort should be made to prevent it; but it is absolutely essential to call the attention here of those forces bent on control and centralization in this industry, that there are many more Peekskills, many more similar situations in this City, and State and throughout the Country, that are danger signals on the road in which they are seemingly headed, and it behooves them to Stop! Look! and Listen!

"These people through a high-powered sales organization and merchandising methods create a demand for their product, and it is up to the independent producers and distributors to create a selling machine or a distributing organization that will emulate the example set by these interests or even improve on same.

"At the present time the independent producer who is depending on the independent distributors along state rights lines or some of the national distributing organizations has had very little encouragement. He has had his product handled by an undermanned and low-powered sales organization which only partially 'sold' his film to theatre owners. In most cases the film has been 'bought' by the theatre owners without any effort on the part of the distributing machine.

"This must be corrected or otherwise the initiative resident in these independent forces will be destroyed and their efforts given to some other line of endeavor.

Calls for Exploitation

"Our present sales effort to a great extent lets the film practically die after the first run. This is done not only in the matter of exploitation but also in the matter of advertising in the trade press, as it seems most producers make no further announcements after the initial statements intended for the first run.

"As a matter of fact, the first run theatre owner requires less information from the producer than the subsequent runs, because as a rule he has an organization of aids and assistants gathering information for his purposes and exploiting his picture for him.

"The trade press should be used to bring to the theatre owners honest information about the motion picture. Neither they nor their people are interested in any publicity story as to how many thousands of people 'slept in tents' outside of some Broadway Theatre in New York City to see the picture.

"But they are interested in learning that the picture is entertaining, wholesome, clean and also some of the outstanding facts pertaining to the particular film that their public might become interested in.

Don't Understand Exploitation

"Some theatre owners do not know how to exploit a film. A large number do it very intelligently and effectively, although there are others unfortunately who will not advertise or exploit a picture unless they have been charged a lot of money for it, as otherwise they feel it cannot be a meritorious picture.

"The public does not care what a picture costs to make. They are only interested in its entertainment features. It is absolutely necessary to intelligently present the real merits of the film offered to them, and eliminate all misleading statements that have been made about so many films, as to attack the credulity of the industry, and destroy confidence in a real announcement, resulting in a lessening of business.

A Happy Reunion After A Painful Separation

Little Don Marion shares honors with Mildred Harris and Robert F. Frasier in C. B. C.'s "Traffic in Hearts," a dramatic feature of high calibre.

"The biggest change and advance needed in this industry is along lines of exploitation. Advances are being made in this direction and the industry is developing and progressing, but more intensified effort is required, and in this way many millions of people who do not now attend motion picture theatres will be brought into the theatres, thus creating a more wholesome atmosphere in every way. All values in this industry are predicated on the public's appreciation of our efforts.

Saner Exploitation Need d

"If some of the money now being spent in salaries of inefficient and inexperienced salesmen were spent on intelligent and expert advance exploitation, you gentlemen would be in a very much stronger strategic position.

"There are a large number of very expert and efficient salesmen and some of the others could be made more helpful, if instead of being mere peddlars of celluloid, their home offices would make them into an auxiliary, supplemental exploitation force cooperating with the theatre owner in putting the picture over. Keeping the gates open for independ-ties are kept a secret, or confidential, until they are viewed on the screen.

"As it is, the independent theatres are being asked rental prices by independent distributors without any pressure put behind their pictures, commensurate with those obtained by companies which not only advertise nationally but exert tremendous force in exploitation.

Can Be Done Better

"What they have done, you can do—for every Independent handles at least some worth while features—specials. But, as I have pointed out, from the exhibitors' viewpoint they have not been merchandised adequately. Either their worth and their existence has been kept confidential, or—and this is a prevalent practice—they are offered to 'Mr. Circuit' to be there buried as a double feature run during the week; not run as a special on Saturdays or Sundays, the exhibitor's Big days.

"Your reply to this is that by selling 'Mr. Circuit' you get a lot of first run playdates close together, and—if you are lucky you get some money in a lump. This is all very well, as far as it goes, but in many instances this proves a short-sighted policy, for subsequent runs certainly depreciate in value as a result of either 'Mr. Circuit's' per-tre owners who have playdates for you beside 'Mr. Circuit.'

"I feel that your enterprise and your initiative and your zeal to carry forward this great work of preserving the independence of motion picture productions and distribution in the United States, will not only find a most completely responsive echo with all of the Theatre Owners but that it will be appreciated and understood by the American Public.

Use Bonus for Exploitation

"Mr. Dannenberg in his talk mentioned the bonus money being paid by a number of you producers. It is my thought if you could eliminate this and substitute for it the exploitation and merchandising of your pictures it will lead to far better results.

"Danny also talked about the resolution decided upon in Minneapolis—and the result of it, forgetting that directly after that resolution was passed people became independents that never were before, and we found that certain alleged independents were trying to palm off some $5,000 or $7,500 westerns for the price that would have been asked for the biggest pictures and as an excuse presented the fact that a theatre owners convention had passed a resolution for an independent month.

"I personally had an experience with a state rights exchange in this territory where a price of $2,500 was asked me for a picture that at the most was worth $500, and the answer was given to me that I as the exhibitor president ought to pay this amount. It is very easy to label yourself an independent.

Must Exploit Pictures

"When a man calls himself independent he is dependent upon friendship for business, and business, if profitable, must be built on stronger lines than friendship. It must be based on good pictures and pictures that are exploited and advertised with the finest of advertisements. It is true that the opportunity road is getting narrower, but right ahead of that road is a big avenue of success, but you have got to do something besides having negative thoughts. You have got to present affirmative thoughts, and you have got to get worthwhile pictures and advertise them.

"In my ten years' experience I have never joined with a combination of theatre owners for the purpose of beating down the price, but I have been told repeatedly at the exchanges where I have been denied the opportunity of getting a good picture that they regret they cannot give it, but they must give it to Mr. Circuit.

"I am concluding my leadership at the national convention at Boston next month. You fellows have got to go in and get some good pictures. You have got to come in and cooperate with us and you will get your money for your picture and you will get your playdates. In the past three years close to 1,500 new theatres have been built. With the right kind of exploitation and worthwhile pictures you will get a response and stay in this business.

Hold Time Open

"Our public want entertainment. They are a clean, simple public and they want the same kind of pictures, and they want to be told about it. It is up to you to send out a campaign of education in the trade press. Send the message out every week to the theatre owners. Tell the theatre owners you are making big pictures and to hold their time open to consider these pictures.

"You can't expect you are going to hold play dates open with $7,500 westerns. I know as a theatre owner there are thea-

A Look as Cold as the Climate

It is very apparent that the pretty Eva Novak is not pleased with her would-be companion, Kent Sanderson, by the way she is looking at him. Nor does Arthur Jasmine who stands at her right appear to be kindly disposed toward the gentleman. There is every evidence here of conflict and that is the very element which adds zest to this Lee-Bradford production, "The Lure of the Yukon."

The story is a romance laid against a background of a gold rush on the Yukon River. The picture is said to have been filmed in Alaska and rings true with all the frost and chill of the country. Beautiful scenery and unusual effects of all kinds figure prominently in this Norman Dawn story.

ent production is great. We need it. We must have it. But see that the gates are intelligently guarded so that ruin will not follow an over-supply of underexploited and poorly selected pictures.

"A good title is desirable, a good cast and production essential, of course, but these are not enough, even if they are what we offer on our screens. A demand must be created—and the burden of creating this demand must not fall so heavily upon the shoulders of the exhibitors. Exhibitors cannot make money with pictures whose worthwhile qualinicious double feature policy, or 'Mr. Other Circuit's' hiding the title of your picture at the foot of a list of unknown vaudeville performers.

"With the absorption of theatres that one circuit has been indulging in in this territory they have added to their purchasing power, and almost all but one or two of the independent distributors in this territory cater to them wholly. If these people extend their activities there will be a closed market for these independent distributors. You people must learn soon that there are other thea-

SIGN DESMOND AND HELEN HOLMES FOR EIGHT SOCIETY STUNT DRAMAS

Jesse J. Goldberg Engages Well-Known Players—Will Be Directed by J. P. McGowan in Six-Reel Productions

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, President of the Independent Pictures Corporation, returned this week from Hollywood, where he closed a contract with William Sistrun, whereby the Independent Pictures Corporation leased three units or stages at the Hollywood Studios, situated on Santa Monica Boulevard, within a short distance from the Pickford and Fairbanks studios.

A separate administration building, located on the studio grounds, will house the producing staff of Mr. Goldberg's organization. This staff, in addition to the three directors' rooms, will also have a publicity and advertising manager, auditor, casting director, technical director, and studio manager, and also the executive offices of Mr. Goldberg himself.

The three units operating on the West Coast will be the William Desmond-Helen Holmes unit, the Bill Cody unit, the Franklyn Farnum Western unit. In addition to that, Mr. Goldberg intends to remove his Eastern production staff, which is now engaged in the making of the "Book of Knowledge" series, to the West Coast.

This enlarged production activity is in keeping with the plans laid down by Mr. Goldberg six months ago. The total output of these four units will consist of twenty-four features and fifty-two single reel subjects known as the "Book of Knowledge Series."

Mr. Goldberg, in his offices, in commenting upon this plan of operation, stated: "In addition to the pictures that are to be produced in series, it is also my intention to produce at least two super special society dramas, the continuities of which have already been completed. The first super-special has as its working title 'The Diary of a Physician', being an adaptation of the book written by Dr. Samuel Warren about eighty years ago. It, to my mind, is the most powerful heart interest story ever penned by a human being. That is covering a large territory, I admit, but I submitted this story in book form, as well as the continuity, to about nine of the most active literary minds in the City of New York, and they pronounced it not alone an unusual tale, but a story that should grip the heart and stir the soul of every human being able to comprehend the meaning of human emotions. Of course the production will have an all-star cast. By that I mean stage or screen celebrities; but paramount to that everyone portraying a part must be built for the part itself, in addition to possessing the proper dramatic talent to delineate the character.

"I intend to produce another subject. I have been in negotiation for the screen rights to a stage play. I have not as yet been successful in securing the signature of the owners of this production to the contract, but the prospect is altogether favorable, and when I am prepared or permitted to make the announcement as to the name of this stage play, it of itself will convince the theatre-going public and the motion picture industry that I have a piece of property second to none screened within the past five years."

Mr. Goldberg returns to his West Coast studios the end of this month. As is his plan and policy, pursued heretofore, he will personally supervise every detail entering into the production activities. His East Coast executive offices will be operated by his assistant, Mr. Jack Lustberg. The East Coast offices also will maintain their corps of advertising and publicity men. Mr. Goldberg intends to broaden out in the matter of publicity, so as to circulate items of interest for publication in the main newspapers of the United States, and not to confine his publicity announcements alone to the trade papers.

RE ISSUE MONEY MAKERS

The first of June is to witness the release by the Tri-Stone Pictures, of a group of productions to be known as "The 'Five and One' Series," according to the statement of Oscar Price, president of the company.

The films are not new productions but a short series of pictures which have gone over big at the box office and have thus established a reputation which exhibitors and exchangers feel warrants their reissue. As a matter of fact the plan was finally definitely decided upon because of the repeated requests from various exchanges for just such a group capable of repeating the previous box office records.

The productions comprise five Westerns and one whose locale is the old South previous to the civil war. Each one features a special star about whom centers the action of the story and each of whom has his or her particular following.

'The Fire Patrol' Is a Genuine Hit

THE Chadwick Pictures Corporation and Director Hunt Stromberg have produced an epic photoplay in "The Fire Patrol." Simple words are most effective when applied to subjects of genuine merit. Let us leave superlatives to mediocrity and merely say that this Independent production equals any picture of the year as a box-office magnet—and excels most.

The prologue is a masterpiece of combined artistry and directorial genius. From the cultivated viewpoint of the blase critic the remainder of the picture is somewhat of a let down. The tale told is melodrama pure and simple—the stuff that used to crowd houses in the "good old days" — still does — and always will. It is melodrama with a capital M, but melodrama de luxe.

A great picture—a great director—a great cast. Your reviewer's hat is off to the Chadwick Pictures Corporation, Independent Producers. H. K. C.

Just in Time to Save the Day

Just when it seemed to the two youngsters that things were looking pretty bad for them in the battle between the boy and the big brute who had attempted to attack them, there arrived on the spot a very capable champion who made short work of the intruder, not before however, he has inflicted a rather deep gash in the head of the young man.

This scene is but one of a succession, equally thrilling and heart stirring all of which give the hero, Franklyn Farnum and the heroines, Dorothy Woods and Kathleen Calhoun a rare opportunity to exhibit their real dramatic powers. The picture is an Independent Western of unusual merit and sustaining heart interest.

What a multitude of exploitation possibilities the title suggests. Get the press sheet and read them for yourself.

The story concerns a theme about which many of us ponder. Are most men lured to the rocks of misfortune by "The Vamp" because of a superior wickedness—or because they want to be lured? Someone has suggested that "the victims" of vampires enjoy their medicine. And there you have a superb plot. They'll discuss this picture long after seeing it.

"BURR PICTURES MEAN A GOOD BUSINESS FOR EVERYBODY"

BURR 1924-25

Three Johnny Hines pictures—and a Fourth Feature; "The Shame Dance"

In 1921 we promised the "Big 6" and made 7. In 1923 we promised the "Big 4" and made 6. NOW we promise 4 EXTRA SPECIALS. WE ARE SPENDING MORE MONEY AND MORE TIME and you can stake your last dollar plus our past record that we'll make good!

Keeping faith in the matter of our announced production schedules has entailed numerous sacrifices. As a sheer business proposition we know that this will build more for us in the long run! Last year we sold numerous independents who took our franchise before the pictures had gone into production. That sort of faith is the one thing, the only thing that means life to us—as independents.

BURR PICTURES, Inc.
133-135-137 West 44th St., N. Y. C.

The mark of the independent producer is the manner in which he keeps faith with his exchanges. If independent exchange-men could depend on the production plans annually announced by the independent field, our business would be a smoother running and more dependable machine!

The product this season — 1923-24 — consists of pictures that suggest modern trend of thought—not cheap sentiment nor hashed over themes. But vivid, clever stories that reflect modern America. And modern America likes to see itself as it really is!

In point of cast and in technical details these productions have every asset needed for excellent film material. In addition to this, however, it's interesting to note that each plot has a truth that will make them discuss it long after it has played at your theatre.

I've lived up to promises on these productions. Each one is a piece of real motion picture merchandise. Each has been made to contain the elements of a good business proposition . . . for all of us concerned.

I'm going to deliver the goods in the new season's product. You can count on me. What I say . . . I'll do!

It is with well founded pride that C. C. Burr and the companies with which he is associated point to the past two seasons as a clear indication to all concerned, of just where they stand. In 1922 C. C. Burr supervised the production of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," "Sure Fire Flint," "Luck," "I Am The Law," "Secrets of Paris," "The Last Hour" and "You Are Guilty." The season of 1922 he personally supervised "Three O'Clock in the Morning," "The New School Teacher," "Restless Wives," "The Average Woman" and "Lend Me Your Husband."

Production plans are in full swing for four new pictures . . . They will be big. . . . The same old war cry; bigger and better pictures; But if past performances count for anything, our promises must mean something to those we have kept faith with thus far.

Chicago's Greatest Critic Says:—

"AFTER SIX DAYS"

Has the Ten Commandments Licked!

Read Every Line of Mae Tinee's Review

Chicago Sunday Tribune

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

APRIL 20, 1924

Good Morning!

"AFTER SIX DAYS" is a cinema version of Old Testament happenings made by an Italian company on the ground where it is reputed they occurred. It's only ten or eleven reels long now—but it was sixty-three when the American company that is distributing it decided to take it over! The cinema surgery necessary to shape it into program lengths has, however, been excellently done.

To my way of thinking, "After Six Days" has "The Ten Commandments" licked.

The latter is ornate and effortful. The former is convincing and effortless in that nobody seems striving for effect. It is great and it is simple. The Bible stories we have been taught to believe unfold before our eyes so naturally that while the miracles thrill—they still appear logical.

The picture carries you from the days of Adam and Eve to the time of Solomon in all his glory. You witness the birth of knowledge. There is the tale of Cain and Abel; of Joseph and his coat of many colors; of the tribulations of the chosen people and their final deliverance from the crushing heel of the Pharaohs. A dozen other episodes go to make up the whole.

Every Inch the Prophet.

The Golden Calf episode is better done than it is in "The Ten Commandments."

Also, it seems to me, the parting of the waters has been more satisfactorily accomplished.

And though Theodore Roberts makes a splendid Moses, the Moses of "After Six Days" is far more the prophet conjured up by your imagination, than that of America's beloved veteran actor.

The mob scenes are most impressive. You never for a moment have the sensation of watching the carefully directed efforts of crowds of "extras."

CHADWICK PLANS NINE DELUXE PRODUCTIONS FOR COMING YEAR

THE Chadwick Pictures Corporation announces its production program for the season of 1924-5. In making its production program the company is very optimistic, as the corporation looks for a live season in the Independent Market and the film industry as a whole. It feels the independent producer has at last come into his own, and realizes that high class box-office productions must be provided if the independent is to prosper. By this, the independent producer's pictures must stand the same tests as the pic-

A DARING RESCUE

Had they known at the time that they were rescuing a villain these brave fire-fighters might perhaps not have endangered their lives to go after him. The film is a melodrama de luxe with all the elements that are necessary to make a good picture. It is handled by an exceptionally capable cast composed of such notable stars as Anna Nilsson, Robert Edeson and Jack Richardson who plays the part of 'Butch' Anderson! The picture, a Chadwick production, reflects the work of its capable director, Hunt Stromberg.

LEE-BRADFORD LOOKS FOR LIVE 1924-25 SEASON

The program for the 1924-25 season announced by the Lee-Bradford Corporation of twelve pictures of unusual merit, three of which will be de luxe specials demonstrates President Arthur A. Lee's confidence in the possibilities of the coming season in the state right market. The first special for release is "The Lover of Bagdad" from the story "A Thousand and One Arabian Nights." This will be followed by productions of similar merit which will enable the state right exchange to figure on a box office winner each month, which he can pass on to exhibitors.

tures of the so-called big releasing companies.

Therefore, the Chadwick Corporation will offer to exchanges and exhibitors high-class productions based on popular stories and successful stage plays, produced by well known directors and enacted by successful box-office stars.

Lionel Barrymore, distinguished stage and screen star, will appear in three special productions supported by a well known cast.

Hunt Stromberg, director-producer of numerous successful productions, has completed "The Fire Patrol" with an all-star cast including Anna Q. Nilsson, Madge Bellamy, Helen Jerome Eddy, Gail Henry, Johnny Harron, Charles Murray, Spottiswoode Aitken, Jack Richardson, Bull Montana, Chester Conklin, Hank Mann, Billy Franey and Frances Ross.

Negotiations are under way for the services of one of the most famous luminaries of the screen for the title role of "Romance of an Actress," by Langden McCormack, author of "The Storm." The third Stromberg production will be "Sunshine of Paradise Alley," by Denman Thompson, who wrote "The Old Homestead."

John Gorman will produce three special productions. The first is "The Painted Flapper," with a cast headed by James Kirkwood. The second production, "The Tom Boy," adapted from a popular story, will be started shortly. The third will be "The Street Singer," adapted from the stage success of the same name.

Nine de luxe special productions will be made by the Chadwick Corporation during the coming season, and each one will stand the third degree when it comes to the test for the box-office value.

With the titles selected for them and the strong casts which interpret the various parts, they should all be winners.

BILL CODY SIGNED

The Independent Pictures Corporation, of which Jesse J. Goldberg is President, has signed a contract with Bill Cody to star in a series of stunt Westerns, eight in number. Mr. Cody is a stunt actor, having doubled for very many of the stars who are today credited with being stunt actors.

Production activities on the Bill Cody pictures will be started by Mr. Goldberg at his Hollywood Studios the first week in June. These attractions will be made under his personal supervision, and under the direction of Reeves ("Breezy") Eason. On Mr. Goldberg's visit to the West Coast he will be accompanied by part of his New York staff, who will be installed permanently on the West Coast.

AS INDEPENDENTS

"We believe that we will receive only in proportion to what we give. That our success as an Independent is dependent upon the success of the exhibitor. And that both of us will receive the most by giving most."

tures of all kinds and audiences of all kinds, and there is a demand for pictures of all kinds.

"I have consumed more time than I have figured on and I want to extend to your president my thanks and appreciation for the invitation," and I have been asked to extend to you an invitation to the convention in Boston and to bring a message which you consider fitting and proper for the occasion. I hope what I have said has been of some value and I hope I have not offended because I have not intended to."

To Attend Convention

"Mr. Cohen has brought us a message here of cheer and comfort, because it was not a lot of soft soap," said Mr. Chadwick, "but because it had in it what constitutes our problems, and I want to say to Mr. Cohen that the message he has given us we will take into our hearts and minds and give to it that earnestness of purpose equal to the earnestness of purpose and thought that actuated him when he delivered it here."

"I only wish in return to the message he gave to have him take with him to that very important convention the one thought of this organization, namely, that what you have called upon us to do in the form of important production, in the form of increased exploitation, publicity and advertising, we have already taken to our hearts. In response to it we ask you to call upon the members of your organization, equally thoughtful, equally earnestly, to remove from their minds the one thought that so bears down upon us not because they want to but because conditions compel them."

'A PAIR OF HELLIONS'

This picture sounds the keystone of the story of 'A Pair of Hellions' a Lee-Bradford story by Peter Clark McFarlane. This scene is typical of the many highly dramatic shots which characterize the picture at the same time giving it spice and sustained interest, and making it a sure hit.

GOLDBURG TO MAKE 'KNOWLEDGE BOOK'

Fifty-Two Single Reelers Will Treat on Popular Science

THE Independent Pictures Corporation, of which Jesse J. Goldberg is President, makes the interesting announcement that it has in course of production fifty-two single reel releases to be known as the Screen Book of Knowledge.

These attractions will embrace every known form of popular science, with explanations that will appeal to and be understandable by the lay mind, whether man, or child. The subjects will be replete with humor and comedy. The first four have been completed.

Mr. Goldberg waxed enthusiastic over the prospect of these productions. It is his opinion they will prove the most popular single reels ever exhibited in the United States. Their advertising and tie-up possibilities are almost without limit.

The non-theatrical value of these productions also can be very easily gauged. They will be produced along the lines of big features, with the only difference that they are confined to single reels.

The cast in each production will necessarily be limited, but in each release there will be several children, around whom the questions and answers of the Book of Knowledge series will revolve.

There will be eight questions answered in each release. The first release places before the mind the solution of such questions as "What is fire?", "What is water?", "What makes a clock move?", "What makes a ball bounce?", "What makes the waves?", "How does a fish breathe?" "What is glass?"

These productions will be extensively advertised, not alone in the motion picture trade publications, but in every child's magazine circulated in the United States, in the daily newspapers, and in other monthly popular fiction magazines.

An exploitation plan is now being mapped out by the exploitation staff of Independent so as to permit of a possible tie-up between these releases and all the schools and universities in the country.

The first release will be ready August 1. These productions are being made under the personal direction of Donald I. Buchanan. The questions to be presented will not be taken from the Book of Knowledge, but largely from textbooks published in the schools and universities of this country, as well as from the Encyclopedia both the American and British editions.

REPORT GOOD BOOKING

Exceptional bookings are reported by the state right territorial purchasers of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation series entitled "Tense Moments From Famous Plays and Great Authors."

The Fox Circuit, Stanley houses in Philadelphia and the Brooklyn Strand are among the important bookings noted. In the case of the Mark-Strand in Brooklyn, the house carried the title of "The Merchant of Venice," one of the series of eighteen that composes the list of subjects, over the billing of the full length feature picture played that particular week.

The list holds a wide range of the great classics of the drama and literature.

Taking The Law Into His Own Hands

Buddy Roosevelt, the daredevil, swift footed star of numerous stunt Westerns scores another hit in Artclass' "Rough Ridin'", a series of pictures so snapped up with action and so intense with thrills it keeps audiences guessing and jumping. The name of Buddy Roosevelt has become known to thousands of movie-goers and the clean, exciting brand of entertainment which he offers in his pictures has made him extremely popular with them. The fact that he rides remarkably well and undertakes hazardous stunts as nonchalantly as one enters a street car has been largely responsible for the public's having apparently taken a liking to him.

LURE OF YUKON FEATURED BY LEE-BRADFORD

Film Made in the Arctic Circle Breathes the Spirit of the North in Every Foot

Arthur A. Lee, president of the Lee-Bradford Corporation has announced elaborate plans for the 1924-25 season and states that the company will have the best lineup of productions it has ever handled.

"The Lure of the Yukon" an Alaskan picture, said to have been actually photographed in the Arctic Circle will be the first of a series of twelve pictures to be released. It is not only a picture of scenic beauty but a real red-blooded and interest-holding drama of the land of the midnight sun.

Lee-Bradford will release one picture each month of similar merit which will provide the state rights exchange with a supply of dependable productions. Three De Luxe specials are also planned. The first special to be released is "The Lover of Bagdad," from an Arabian Nights story.

The growing business of the Lee-Bradford Corporation has necessitated the internal organization to be rearranged to handle the various details efficiently. President Lee will control all activities from New York. F. G. Bradford, vice-president, will take care of the Pacific Coast affairs.

The Independents today realize that their success is largely dependent upon the good will which is built up through fine service and good pictures of definite value with a conservative policy and methods which are intended to cope with a business which has become comparatively conservative.

'FELIX' ONE-REELERS

"Felix," the cat, has become quite a favorite with movie fans in various sections of the country. As a matter of fact, due to the wide distribution given this series of shorts through the local exchanges, there is hardly a community in the country that has not become thoroughly familiar with this animated feline whose antics are a constant source of amusement and delight.

And Felix has not been allowed to go out on to the market unescorted. A whole array of interesting novelties and a very complete press book telling just how Felix can be best exploited, have accompanied him on his trips through the country and such capable chaperoning has helped Felix's popularity immensely.

Margaret J. Winkler, head of the company which produces the Felix one reel comedies has recently announced that she has completed a deal with Pat Sullivan for the release of the twenty-four new Felix comedies which have already been sold in other territories.

INDEPENDENTS MARCHING ON TO GREATER THINGS, SAYS BRANDT

Have Assembled Scattered Units And Are Presenting a Solid Front, Declares Pioneer in Independent Field

By JOE BRANDT,

President C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation

ASSEMBLING of scattered units and the presentation of a solid, united front becomes the first important movement of any successful enterprise. For illustration, our recent European conflict bears out this fact. When it was finally decided to turn over the direction and employment of troops to one governing head, concentrating their abilities and talents upon the more important objective, chaos was turned into cohesion.

So in the business world the same problem has presented itself time and again. Take one of the great industries—the furniture business. In the city of Grand Rapids, Mich., there are fourteen furniture manufacturers. Just a few years ago each factory was working in direct competition.

One designer would bring out a pattern, then the mad rush to imitate would cheapen the product and they would injure each other's business in trying to meet the prices.

However, one bright morning they awoke to the fact that this unhealthy condition was injurious to the business as a whole, and out of the confusion came the formation of an association.

The result was better product, better price to the buyer, and as an association they advertise to the wide world that Grand Rapids furniture is the best furniture made; yet not one manufacturer sacrificed his individuality, so completely have they instilled into the minds of the public the fact that furniture made in Grand Rapids is the best money can buy.

The independent association has arrived—the Independent Producers and Distributors Association presenting a solid front—a group of determined men ready to place upon the market a product of unquestioned merit, with a background and organization from production down to the final details of distribution.

Now we arrive at the question as to who the Independents are. If you will recollect a bit you will find that the men represented in this group of energetic, sincere workers are the very ones who laid the cornerstone of the national organizations—men who have played a vital part in the building of this great industry.

The Independent has always shown showmanship in his selection of stars and stories. His technical staff has always been hand-picked, but still the Independent has been kicked about like a football or used for any convenient end to meet some unpleasant situation. Yet through it all he has moved outward and upward.

Another point worthy of serious consideration is that some of the greatest exploitation and sales development has been originated within the independent ranks. One could go to great length in naming over the talented publicity men who have astounded the industry with novel and original ideas in advertising and merchandising.

Yes, the Independent Producers and Distributors Association has arrived. The next move is up to the exhibitor; he should make it his business to deal with a member of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association.

Events of the last few months have given the Independent producer every reason to look forward to a period of unprecedented prosperity. Optimism is the key note of every member in the Independent Producers and Distributors Association. Advices received from the West Coast indicate that approximately 200 pictures will be ready for the state rights for 1924-5.

These attractions will be in six reels, and are now being offered the State right buyers for release commencing in the fall. Mr. Goldburg has taken over a substantial portion of the Hollywood Studios in Los Angeles, being the same studios at which Harold Lloyd and J. K. MacDonald are now working.

Three entire units were taken over by Mr. Goldburg at the Hollywood Studios. In addition to the William Desmond-Helen Holmes unit, Mr. Goldburg will also supervise the production of two other series, one the Franklyn Farnum super-Westerns, and the other a series of eight stunt Western action dramas, starring Bill Cody. Bill Cody is an actor of rather unknown name, but who has been drafted by Mr. Goldburg from another organization.

When interviewed at his office, Mr. Goldburg stated: "I believe that the male star is today paramount as far as the demands of the public are concerned. I believe that the latter require virility, youth presentable and what I might even term captivating appearance, and last of course not least, a knowledge of the art of acting and an ability in that direction.

"The Franklyn Farnum Westerns will savor of the well-dressed kind; I mean by that, in addition to the Western atmosphere and the Western apparel, that Mr. Farnum will also have the opportunity of doing that which he first did in the earlier years of his theatrical experience, light comedy. So that his Western will be a combination of light comedy and Western dramatics.

"With respect to the Bill Cody subjects, they will be out-and-out fast and furious action Western pictures, the kind that all men, when they were boys, gloried in, and the kind that even grown-ups today appreciate.

"The Desmond-Holmes pictures will be, of course, staged on a much more lavish and extravagant scale. By extravagant scale I do not mean that we will be extravagant in the spending of our money, but I do mean that we will have large sets, well-groomed people, supporting cast of consequence and with screen names, and every investiture that will permit of these productions being played in any first-run house.

Mr. Goldburg will return to Los Angeles the end of this month, and will personally supervise the three units and the productions to be made by each. As is Mr. Goldburg's practice, he will have his hand in the production of these attractions from the choice of the story, the preparation of the scenario, the casting of the picture, and the active and actual supervision during production activities.

The preliminary advertising campaign engaged in by the Independent Pictures Corporation, of which Mr. Goldburg is President, has called for numerous telegraphic and mail inquiries from State right buyers, and although the Independent Pictures Corporation has sent out no announcements of territories closed, it is reliably rumored that more than one-half of the United States has already been disposed of on the Desmond-Holmes pictures, the Franklyn Farnum and the Bill Cody Westerns. It is expected Mr. Goldburg will remain at his West Coast plant during the months of June, July, August and September.

INDEPENDENT PICTURES LEASES STAGES AT HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS

Will House Three Goldburg West Coast Units as Well as Entire Executive and Eastern Production Staff

Jesse J. Goldburg while in Los Angeles last week, entered into a contract with William Desmond to star in a series of eight society stunt melodramas, in which Helen Holmes also will star.

Mr. Goldburg, interviewed seven prospective stars to appear in this series, but finally determined on Desmond, after making a canvass by telegraph among the State right exchanges as to the popularity of the various men he had under consideration.

J. P. McGowan, whose reputation as a stunt director is possibly second to none, has also been placed under contract by Mr. Goldburg to direct this series. The first three stories already have been selected, and

Mr. Goldburg's staff of continuity writers are actively engaged in the preparatory work.

The first production is entitled "Blood and Steel," and is a society railroad story. It will be recalled that Helen Holmes made her greatest reputation in a series of railroad dramas also directed by J. P. McGowan, and produced and released by Universal.

It is Mr. Goldburg's intention to produce these attractions upon a large and substantial scale, to surround William Desmond and Miss Holmes with the best cast obtainable, to enhance the production with large and beautiful sets, withal not forgetting that original stunts and sensationalism will form a necessary part of the entire production.

C. C. BURR VIEWS IN RETROSPECT HIS PRODUCTIONS OF LAST YEAR

Independent Producer Takes Pride in Performance of Promise To Supply Exhibitors With Successful Pictures

In retrospect of the season of 1923-1924, C. C. Burr, of Burr Pictures, Inc., might well say his promise to the industry was more than performed. Instead of making four pictures as initially announced, the Burr organization made five, each of which was of high standard and played practically every first-run house in the country.

Past Performances

"THREE O'CLOCK IN THE MORNING," featuring Constance Binney and an all-star cast including Edmund Breese, Mary Carr, Edna May Oliver, and William Bailey was the first which proved to be a big one for all concerned.

Special tie-ups were made with the Feist song and a nation-wide exploitation campaign proved most effective. The timely theme, the bigness of the story plus the box-office power of Constance Binney's name resulted in capacity business on this feature.

IN "RESTLESS WIVES," Burr made another box-office smash. This society drama with its poignant theme featured in its cast such luminaries as Doris Kenyon, James Rennie, Edmund Breese, Burr McIntosh, Naomi Childers, Montague Love, Maude Sinclair, Edna May Oliver and Coit Albertson.

Trade, newspaper, and exhibitor criticisms attested to its great worth as a sure-fire attraction and the Burr fulfillment of a promise to supply the independent market with successful pictures.

"THE AVERAGE WOMAN," with Pauline Garon, Harrison Ford, David Powell, Burr McIntosh, De Sacia Mooers, Russell Griffin and Coit Albertson, followed and was quickly sold to the leading independent exchanges. The volume of booking reported to date on this feature proves conclusively that the Burr product is living up to everything franchise holders had hoped for.

The cast, the unusual title and many exploitation angles accounted for "The Average Woman's" tremendous popularity.

Late Releases

Next on the Burr list of productions now being released is "LEND ME YOUR HUSBAND" with a typical Burr cast, including Doris Kenyon, David Powell, Dolores Casinelli, J. Barney Sherry, Violet Mersereau, Burr McIntosh, Connie Keefe, Coit Albertson and Helen D'Algy.

The picture lends promise of being among the money makers Burr has put on the market.

The last of the Burr pictures was "THE NEW SCHOOL TEACHER," featuring Mickey Bennett and Russell Griffin, two well known, popular juveniles. It is still receiving excellent bookings throughout the country. Many of the exchanges who bought the rights helped secure advantageous exploitation tie-ups with local school authorities.

Promises Performed

A promise well performed may justly be the Burr slogan for the past year, for in each instance Burr has delivered the goods. Each of his pictures have gained fair praise from the independent exchanges that contracted for the 1923-1924 Burr product practically arranged for his 1924-1925 schedule. This will include features with Johnny Hines and one other special from a published novel by a famous American fiction writer.

CRANDALL'S TIVOLI DOES BIG BUSINESS WITH BURR SUBJECT

WHAT proved to be one of the most successful weeks in the history of the Crandall's Tivoli Theatre, Washington, D. C., occurred during the week of May 4, when C. C. Burr's "Three O'Clock in the Morning," featuring Constance Binney, was shown at that house. In true spirit with the production, the management capitalized the picture's timely title, and tied it up with an all-jazz program, which was produced under the personal supervision of S. Barret McCormick.

The prologue comprised two numbers, "The Palace of Jazz" and "Jazz Heaven," which had in its ensemble forty performers. Following these came a jazz symphony by the entire orchestra, and following directly in its wake the Loos Brothers, singers of syncopation, held the stage. Directly after, Brennan and Sands, the featured dancing team from the musical comedy "Helen of Troy" did their jazz terpsichore, and in turn were followed by Marjorie Whitney and Ned Wayburn's Reviews.

Eileen Van Biene, musical comedy star, then did her effective bit in a special number. As soon as this last act was completed, "Three O'Clock in the Morning" was projected on the screen.

So popular did this program prove that the Tivoli ran to capacity business all week. The comments on the effectiveness of the program were all of the most laudatory sort, and the Tivoli patrons were profuse with their thanks.

The production, which ties up so aptly with the Felix Feist song of the same name, has had unusual success wherever it has played, for exhibitors in general have been quick to realize the splendid jazz tie-ups that the picture affords.

The Tivoli all-jazz program in conjunction with "Three O'Clock in the Morning" was one of the most elaborate of its kind, but exhibitors in the smaller towns can emulate its example to big profits by arranging a less pretentious program in connection with the jazz title of Burr's big picture.

'COME ON SEVEN'

The Alice Comedies, a series of Winkler juveniles, are delightful one-reelers in which this young person of color figures largely. Alice as a tomboy is capable of some mighty mischievous pranks which never fail to delight audiences.

C. B. C. LISTS TITLES

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has completed its list of titles for the series which will be known as Columbia Specials and Perfection Pictures. The former will be adaptations from four books and from four original stories. These subjects are to be made on high-class scale and will feature all-star casts.

Perfection Pictures will be adapted from original stories and will feature Eva Novak and William Fairbanks. They are to be thrill-action melodramas, but it is emphasized they are not westerns.

The lists are as follows:

Eight Columbia Specials are "Foolish Virgin," by Thomas Dixon; "The Price She Paid," by David Graham Phillips, "One Glorious Night," "Who Cares," by Cosmo Hamilton; "The Midnight Express"; "After Business Hours"; "A Fool and His Money," by George Barr McCutcheon, and "Fighting the Flames."

Eight C. B. C. Perfection Pictures, featuring William Fairbanks and Eva Novak, are "The Battling Fool," "The Fatal Kiss," "Women First," "The Race for Live," "The Fearless Lover," "A Fight for Honor," "The Beautiful Sinner," and "Tainted Money."

AS INDEPENDENTS

"We believe that sincerity, truth and appreciation of value are the greatest assets an organization can have, if based upon experience to know what the exhibitor wants and does not want, when to eliminate the bad things and magnify the good ones."

—I. M. P. P. D. A.

There are just a few territories open and we invite immediate correspondence. Felix comedies have proven themselves the finest one-reel subjects on the market.

THEY ARE SET IN DESIRABLE FIRST RUNS IN EVERY KEY CITY OF THE COUNTRY. THERE IS A REASON.

Steiner Wipes Out Screen's Barroom

His Productions will Lean More Heavily on the Romantic

The old time saloon of the small prairie town with its attractions for the men of the range will be conspicuous by its absence in the new series of pictures to be produced by William Steiner. "Big Bill" will not let the elimination of the old barroom affect the thrill and action of his new series of Westerns, as he will have his cowboys get into just as many and big fights as in the past, his villain will be just as sly and fearless, but he is going to bring out more romance, which has been second place in the Western pictures heretofore.

The new Big Bill Westerns will have the girl strongly featured and the cowboys will have to don the robe of knight and display more chivalry. Mr. Steiner's new idea has gone over, according to the contracts coming in for his new series.

Most of the Steiner productions are under way, but all have been sold.

Among the stars are Neal Hart, Leo Maloney and Pete Morrison, tried and proved in the Western drama. The fourth unit will feature Charles Hutchison in a series of six five-reel sensational feature pictures. The first of the six has been completed, "Surging Seas" and in it Hutchison's quick action and dare-deviltry are featured. "Hutch of the U. S. A." is now in production.

Mr. Steiner started this week on one of his five yearly tours to California to give the production units the onceover as well as to keep in close contact with his cross continent friends. His aim is to press his point that exhibitors should give the independents the same break that they give the national distributor. He will gain the confidence of the exhibitors by close co-operation and try to prove to them that on many of the independent productions exhibitors may realize their biggest box office returns.

JUVENILE COMEDIES

Juvenile comedies are so well liked on the screen today that the possibilities for a variety of pictures along this line are decidedly encouraging. Which is probably the reason why M. J. Winkler hit upon the idea of producing a series of juvenile pictures to be known as the "Alice Comedies."

Little Alice's exploits with her little brown-skinned buddy contain all the elements of clean and hilarious humor for there is no end of fun in seeing the youngsters set up a one-day lemonade stand which is run and controlled solely by themselves.

The Burton Holmes Travelogues are also a Winkler product which has been proving very successful as is also the "Kid Kapper Komedies," a series of two reels, and a series of two reel subjects based on the works of Edgar Guest, the writer.

GEORGE B. SEITZ

The public has "gone nuts" over stories of the Orient.

Look at the big successes, past, present and coming, with an Oriental background.

Here's a peach of a story, laid in Egypt. A young American rescues a beautiful young girl from a harem, but doesn't get her to safety until he has been vamped, captured, beaten, shot at, imprisoned and a few other things for good measure.

As a production it is positively splendid. The cast is perfect. Allene Ray is a most charming heroine; Bruce Gordon is fine as the hero; Anna May Wong is the vamp of the harem (and she is there); and Frank Lackteen as Hamid will knock them all cold.

George Howard Dies

Exhibitors and those connected with the film industry in the Southeastern States were grieved last week to learn of the death in Baltimore of George Troupe Howard, prominent Atlanta capitalist and better known to the industry as the builder of the Howard, Atlanta, Ga., the first million dollar theatre in the South. The funeral was held in Atlanta and former Governor Thomas W. Hardwick and Stephen A. Lynch were two of the honorary pall bearers. As a testimonial of esteem, the Howard theatre organization sent a magnificent floral offering. Mr. Howard was also active in the theatre field in his home town of Macon, Ga., having built the Capitol there, which he sold a few years ago.

Hiawatha Theatre Sold

The Victoria theatre, Hiawatha, Kas., has been sold by E. M. Boydston to Harry Neptune, former exhibitor of Robinson, Kas. The new Mayfield theatre, Seventy-first street and Prospect avenue, Kansas City, will open Decoration Day, according to L. B. Douglas, manager. The new house will seat 800 persons. Mr. Douglas has been out of the motion picture industry for some time, having formerly owned the Empire theatre of Kansas City. A new theatre now being constructed by Alex Schmidt at Marysville, Kas., will be opened May 25, it has been announced. The projection booth has been equipped with two large DeLuxe Motiograph projectors, G. E. Mazda equipment and Bausch and Lomb Cinephor condenser systems.

New Theatre for North Carolina

Gastonia, North Carolina, will have a large new theatre by early Fall, according to announcement made by James A. Estridge and J. E. Simpson, owners of the Gastonia and Ideal theatres, who have paid $35,000 for a lot on which they propose to start work early in June on the building of a theatre with 1500 seats to cost $150,000. J. White Ware, president of the Third National Bank of Gastonia is also affiliated with them in the project. The lot is 190 feet in depth and entrance will be through a magnificent Arcade, with open spaces for exits and parking on three sides of the theatre. It will be equipped for both road shows and pictures.

Short Subject Program

With a drive for more patronage of children, the Liberty theatre of Sedalia, Mo., last week launched a policy of an "all short subjects programs," for Saturdays and Sundays. The opening bill consisted largely of comedy, but the feature subjects were of the "Secrets of Life" series and "The Ant," Educational product, while the comedy touch was added by "Barnum Jr.," also an Educational picture. A special appeal was made to parents of children to investigate the real value of a short subject program. A good house saw the first two days of the program.

To Record Bad Films

The Kansas City Film Board of Trade has launched a campaign to insure, as far as possible, the protection of film. A file, containing the names of exhibitors who return film in bad condition, now is being kept by the board, the names being contributed by exchanges who have received film, which was good when shipped, in bad condition. Stickers made by the board will be placed on the bands of all new films, cautioning operators the prints are new and urging them to see that their machines are in good condition.

New Theatre for Seattle

John Danz has just announced his plans for the construction of a 1,000 seat house on the site of the present Class A theatre, at Third Avenue and Pike Streets. Danz has purchased the remaining half of this property at an expense of $100,000, which gives him a lot and building 60x108 feet.

Novel Exhibit

Mr. Murmeister, in charge of the Seattle Pathe Poster department, has shown considerable imagination in the attractive manner in which he has fitted up his department. He has arranged the back wall like a theatre lobby, with glass box office, behind which a cutout of Ruth Roland poses as cashier. The marquee is composed of 11x14 photographs, effectively spaced. Behind the box office cut-outs of draped curtains, suggest the theatre entrance. Lavish use of Lloyd posters and other Pathe subjects frame the balance of the lobby.

Musicians Agreement

The Musicians Protective Association of Montreal, Quebec, is the next musicians' union to adopt a definite wage arrangement for radio concerts broadcasted from local stations. At a general meeting of the local it was decided to adopt a scale of $5 per man and $8 for the orchestra leader for all radio programmes up to a time limit of three hours, overtime being charged after that period. The adopted scale goes into effect May 11. This step was taken because of the growing competition of the radio feature with moving picture theatres, dances and other musical events.

J. R. Allen on Coast

An interesting arrival on the Coast, is J. R. Allen, who comes here as Goldwyn representative in Eastern Washington, Western Montana and Northern Idaho. While he has never before worked in the Pacific Northwest, his moving picture connections, in various parts of the country, date back to the old days of the General Film. He has represented some of the leading national companies in various capacities all the way up to district manager. We predict a big success for Mr. Allen, who has a pleasing personality and a reputation for giving a square deal.

SAYINGS OF SUCCESSFUL MEN

CHARLES M. SCHWAB: A man must have personality—that is very important. He must have industry, application, and commonsense—no man can do much if he has not been endowed with a reasonable amount of brains. He can earn a reputation for unimpeachable integrity; he must tell the absolute truth; he must cultivate good fellowship; he must be a man other men like and trust. Any man can learn to do anything that any other man can do, if he will apply himself to the doing of it.

THOMAS A. EDISON: I have never had time, not even five minutes, to be tempted to do anything against the moral law, the civil law, or any law whatever. If I were to hazard a guess as to what young people should do to avoid temptation, it would be to get a job and work at it so hard that temptation would not exist for them.

'MARRIAGE CHEAT' IS DRAMATIC HIT

It Has Artistic Appeal, Story Interest and Genuine South Sea Atmosphere

THE MARRIAGE CHEAT. Thomas H. Ince Photoplay. Released by First National. Author, Frank R. Adams. Director, John Griffith Wray. Length, 6,795 Feet

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Paul Mayne Percy Marmont
Octavia Canfield Leatrice Joy
Bob Canfield Adolphe Menjou
Rosie Laska Winter

Octavia leads an unhappy life with her dissipated husband, Bob Canfield, a millionaire. Cruising in the South Seas, she leaps overboard. Paul Mayne, young missionary, finds her on an island beach. Her baby is born before her husband discovers her. In the interval she has learned to love Mayne, but yields to duty's call and prepares to rejoin Canfield. The latter dies in a storm and Paul and Octavia face a happy future together.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS Thomas H. Ince production registers as a happy combination of artistic excellence and sustained story interest and should prove a good drawing card for any theatre. For awhile, pictures with South Sea atmosphere and plots mostly constructed according to a given and painfully familiar formula followed one another on the screen so continuously that they became something of a drug upon the market and exhibitors were wont to fight shy of them.

Of late the South Sea film current has slackened considerably, but now comes "The Marriage Cheat" with a plot differing pleasantly from any advanced by its predecessors, strong in dramatic values and romantic glamor, well directed, cleverly acted and aglow with tropical color. We take it that Mr. Ince has adopted a maxim running something like—"If you want realism, you must go after the real thing," judging by the fact of his having hustled Director John Griffith Wray and the cast of this feature to the sunny isles of the South Pacific so that this feature's environment should conform exactly to the narrative.

Whatever the expense incurred by the trip, it looks as though the producer got the worth of his money. The scenic beauty of the picture is undeniable and the enlisting of native talent in the form of a small army of Kanaka types as support for the regular players is but one of many good touches by accuracy of detail is acquired.

Director Wray awaited patiently the coming of a furious gale in order to obtain the necessary shots for his big scene of the shipwreck and was well rewarded. The storm in which the yacht is wrecked and the heroine's wretched husband drowned stands out as a great piece of camera work, and a super thrill is attained when Paul Mayne, the missionary who loves Octavia, fights his way through the surging waves in a frail canoe to the rescue of the young mother and her baby.

The marine views all through the film are exquisite and the director has shown praiseworthy taste and unerring judgment in making the most of art technique, without sacrificing either drama or action to mere spectacular effect. Moreover, despite the story's ardent love motif, there isn't a trace of coarseness or accentuated sensuality in the march of events, another point in which "The Marriage Cheat" scores over the majority of South Sea films.

Percy Marmont gives a finely-shaded, yet powerful performance as Paul Mayne, Leatrice Joy wins oceans of sympathy by her pathetically impressive portrayal of Octavia, Adolphe Menjou is excellent in the role of the debauched Canfield, Laska Winter plays the little half caste girl, Rosie, with effective artistry and the support is thoroughly efficient.

Play this up as a tender love romance of the South Seas, replete with thrills, offering a story of marked originality and rich in beautiful photography. Feature Percy Marmont, Leatrice Joy and Adolphe Menjou, each of whom is well and favorably known and dwell upon the fact that the picture was filmed in the very locality where its events transpire.

OFFERS COMPLICATED TALE 'What Three Men Wanted,' Mystery Drama With Tangled, Uncon- vincing Plot

WHAT THREE MEN WANTED. Independent Pictures Photoplay. Author, G. A. Lambert. Director, Paul Burns. Length, 5,000 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Harriet Lancaster Miss Dupont
Billy Lambert Jack Livingston
Marion Fair Catherine Murphy
Maurice Markham J. P. Jones
Max Markham Otto Lederer
Landis Dugan Frank Jonnason
Hackett Albert McQuarrie
Sir Oliver Robert Boulder

Harriet Lancaster is warned against her extravagance by her attorney Markham. She depends on the arrival of a rich uncle she has never seen for help. Markham persuades Billy Lambert, ex-service man, to impersonate the uncle. The real uncle comes and is kept out of the way by two thugs hired by Markham. After many complicated adventures, including a hunt for treasure concealed by Harriet's dead father, the fortune is found and all ends well, Billy winning Harriet.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

AN average program feature, best suited to houses where a frequent change of bill occurs. In so far as one finds it a bit difficult to follow the plot or make out clearly just what the various characters are driving at, "What Three Men Wanted" makes good its claim to being a mystery drama. It does not lack speedy action, but badly broken continuity and poorly contrived suspense detract from the story's interest.

There are some amusing interludes, due to the tangled identities of the real and false uncle, but the sensational episodes fail conspicuously to thrill and savor strongly of sheer burlesque, simply because they do not convince the spectators as being in the least degree likely to happen in actual life, even when due allowance is made for melodramatic license.

Skilled direction might have made this tale more plausible, but, as it stands, the situations are developed in singularly erratic style and utterly wanting in logic. A surprise twist is given in the climax, when it turns out that the genuine uncle is responsible for most of the trouble.

Miss Dupont plays the role of Harriet Lancaster, looks pretty and wears a bewildering variety of handsome gowns which are sure to please feminine patrons. Jack Livingston is a very capable lover and adequate support is given the principals by others in the cast.

Photographically the picture deserves considerable praise. There are many beautiful exteriors, such as the lawn party in the opening reel, lavishly furnished interiors and excellent close-ups of star and leading man, with fine lighting effects.

HOXIE IN SNAPPY WESTERN

Ridgeway of Montana Presents Lively Plot with Unusual Angles

RIDGEWAY OF MONTANA. Universal Photoplay. Author, William MacLeod Raine. Director, Clifford S. Smith. Length, 4,843 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Buck Ridgeway Jack Hoxie
Aline Hanley Olive Hasbrouck
Simon Hanley Herbert Fortier
Steve Pelton Lou Meehan
Rev. Mr. McNab Charles E. Thurston
Pete Shagmire Pat Harmon
Lyndon Hobart Pierre Gendron

Buck Ridgeway, wealthy ranchman, captures members of a rustler band, but Pelton, the leader, escapes. Buck visits the city, meets Aline Hanley, who flirts with him, but he does not respond. Piqued, Aline follows him, is lost in the mountains, found by Buck and a snowstorm compels them to spend the night in a cabin. Buck weds Aline. She is kidnapped by Pelton. Her husband rescues her and Aline is convinced of the sincerity of his love.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS picture should win the approval of all audiences where brisk western melodrama is much in demand. There's a lot of variety in the development of the romance between hero and heroine, the latter being of a flapper-flirtatious type not usually conspicuous in films of this kind, whose willful pursuit of the man of her choice injects a touch of comedy into the proceedings which enlivens up the plot considerably and takes it off the beaten trail.

As regards thrills, and fast action, "Ridgeway of Montana" has enough and to spare. Its spectacular angles are neatly turned and effective, Jack Hoxie horsemanship is exhibited to the best possible advantage, particularly in the episode where he convinces a wild-eyed, ramping steed that the latter has found his master.

But the hero hasn't it all his own way when it comes to the execution of brilliant riding stunts, for early in the game the designing villain makes a getaway in great style by jumping from his mount just at a crucial moment and hurdling over a towering rock into the river below. The big punch is put over when Buck Ridgeway conceals himself in a wagon to serve as a shield from flying bullets, rolls down hill and crashes into Pelton's shack. Then follows a scrap of magnificent proportions.

Jack Hoxie is a convincing and altogether likeable chap in the role of Buck Ridgeway, which he plays with his customary enthusiasm, taking all sorts of physical risks and seeming to enjoy them. In the scenes where Aline Hanley is trying desperately to vamp him, he impersonates the unresponsive swain with fine humorous reserve, a really clever bit of acting. Olive Hasbrouck is piquantly alluring as the coquetish Aline, Lou Meehan registers well as the villainous Steve Pelton, and the support is excellent.

The photography includes a number of superb exteriors, offering charming views of wide rolling landscape, with snow-tipped mountainous backgrounds, beautiful longshots and artistic lighting, as well as many good closeups of the principals.

You can promise patrons who like fast-moving romantic melodrama, staged amid wild surroundings, good entertainment in "Ridgeway of Montana." Tell them this is one of Jack Hoxie's best, play up the star boldly and mention the pleasing work of Olive Hasbrouck. Hoxie's riding stunts should be emphasized, as his feats in this line have won him an enviable reputation, whereby accuracy of detail is acquired.

GOOD FILM MADE FROM STAGE PLAY

'Woman on the Jury' Presents Up-to-Date Theme, Cleverly Acted and Possessing Sure Drawing Power

THE WOMAN ON THE JURY. First National Photoplay. Adapted from Bernard K. Burn's Stage Play. Director, Harry O. Hoyt. Length, 7,408 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Betty Brown	Sylvia Breamer
Fred Masters	Frank Mayo
George Wayne	Lew Cody
George Montgomery
Grace Pierce	Bessie Love
Mrs. Pierce	Mary Carr
Judge Davis	Hobart Bosworth
Marion Masters	Myrtle Stedman
Prosecuting Attorney	Henry W. Walthall
Defense Attorney	Roy Stewart

Betty Brown, deceived under promise of marriage by George Wayne, shoots at him, but misses. Later she becomes a prominent business woman and weds Fred Masters. Husband and wife serve on a jury case involving the killing of George Montgomery by Grace, a woman he betrayed. Betty discovers that the deceased was none other than the man she tried to slay. The jury is eleven to one for conviction, but Betty tells her own story and Grace is freed. Betty's husband not only forgives, but is proud of her.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

PRESENTING an up-to-date theme, intensely dramatic, cleverly acted and well directed, "The Woman on the Jury" ranks as an uncommonly good drawing card for screen purposes. In fact, it would be surprising if it failed to attain as much or even greater popularity than the successful stage play from which the film is adapted. Exhibitors in general ought to find this feature a valuable box office magnet, although those catering chiefly to juvenile patronage are not likely to consider it suitable entertainment for the youngsters.

Most court room scenes in pictures bear a strong family resemblance to each other and heretofore directors have preferred to cut such situations to as short a compass as possible, lest the fans weary of them. But in the present instance, the plot hinges on what happens in the hall of justice, and Director Harry O. Hoyt has not hesitated to dwell at length on the legal incidents.

In doing so he develops with rare craft the almost tragic intensity of the moments when the feminine juror is confronted with the alternative of revealing her stained past to the husband she loves and is loved by, or keeping silent and condemning a wronged woman to punishment. This is one court room scene which nobody is likely to complain of on the score of too much footage. Nor will the average spectator fail to sympathize with heroine Betty Brown in her woe-filled predicament, or rejoice when she dares the worst and does her duty.

Sylvia Breamer is truly admirable in the role of Betty Brown, Frank Mayo wins favor as the husband and Lew Cody plays the part of the double deceiver with masterly skill. The support is what might be expected from such an extraordinary array of screen talent.

There is an abundance of fine photography, exteriors and interiors are beautifully photographed, deep sets utilized with artistic effect, the closeups excellent and the lighting at all stages is clear and distinct.

Pay particular attention to boosting the cast in your exploitation. Besides the names of the principals given above, there are many other players mentioned in the press sheet issued by First National whom you may consider worth advertising. And you cannot go wrong in praising the story as wonderfully dramatic, thoroughly human and interesting.

THROWS BIG AERO THRILL

'Lone Wolf' Snappy Crook Melodrama With Air Combat Climax

THE LONE WOLF. Associated Exhibitors Photoplay. Author, Louis Joseph Vance. Director, S. E. V. Taylor. Length, 5,460 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Lucy Shannon	Dorothy Dalton
Michael Lanyard	Jack Holt
William Burroughs	Wilton Lackaye
Bannon	Tyrone Power
Clare Henshaw	Charlotte Walker
Anette Dupre	Lucy Fox
Eckstrom	Alphonse Ethier
Wertheimer	Gustav Von Seyffertitz
Solon	Robert T. Haines

Michael Lanyard, international crook, refuses to join a band of Paris criminals in an attempt to steal valuable secret plans from the U. S. Government. He falls in love with Lucy Shannon, trusted agent of the outlaws. The papers fall into the hands of Eckstrom, leader of the gang. Lanyard gets the plans back but Eckstrom recovers them and flees in an airplane. Lucy and Lanyard follow in another machine. Lanyard overpowers Eckstrom in a mid-air fight and secures the documents. Lanyard and Lucy deliver the plans to the authorities. She reveals herself as a member of the secret service. Lanyard wins her and a pardon.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE's crook tales usually provide excellent film material, and "The Lone Wolf" is no exception to this rule. It offers very satisfactory entertainment to all who relish highly-spiced melodrama, was accorded a hearty reception when given its initial metropolitan showing at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, and should run up a respectable box office score in any theatre.

It was evidently the chief aim of Director S. E. V. Taylor to keep all his players on the jump from start to finish, and we'll say that he succeeded.

Not a single member of the big cast has an idle moment to spare. It is action, plus, all the way through, the outlaw pack is ever at the heels of the two principals, who are continually dodging for their respective lives; thrills come thick and fast, culminating in a mid-air combat, which ranks pretty close to being the limit as regards suspense and excitement.

This finale, with the hero swinging from a rope and boarding his enemy's aeroplane as the two machines hurtle through space at a terrific speed, registers as a most remarkable and nerve-racking stunt, as well as a notable example of skilled camera work. It is all extremely melodramatic, but so well done that it carries conviction and winds up the story in great "hurrah boys" style.

Jack Holt plays the role of Michael Lanyard, the crook who risks his life in a successful attempt to "go straight" and win the girl he loves. It is a clean-cut performance, alive with dash and vim, and sure to please Mr. Holt's many admirers. Dorothy Dalton figures as Lucy Shannon, the Secret Service lady and heroine, a part which she fills with her usual grace and emotional ability; and smooth, well-balanced support is given the principals by other well known players in the cast.

The photography is of the 100 per cent variety, exteriors and interiors being beautifully filmed.

You can exploit this as a crook melodrama of the most thrilling type, with plenty of heart interest and action which never flags. Play up Jack Holt and Dorothy Dalton and mention the names of Wilton Lackaye, Tyrone Power, Charlotte Walker and Lucy Fox, all players with a fan-following. A tie-in with book stores on the novel—"The Lone Wolf," from which the picture is adapted, should bring good results, as Lou's Joseph Vance holds an enviable record as a best seller in the international fiction market.

'Kentucky Days' Presents Romantic Drama of California Gold Rush Era

KENTUCKY DAYS. Fox Photoplay. Author, John Lynch. Director, David Solomon. Length, 4,508 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

John Buckner	Dustin Farnum
Elizabeth Clayborne	Margaret Fielding
Margaret Buckner	Miss Woodthorp
Scipio	William De Vaull
Gordon Carter	Bruce Gordon

In the days of '49 John Buckner, Kentuckian, goes west to the goldfields and makes a fortune. Returning, he is convinced that his wife loves Gordon Carter and kills the latter in a duel. John heads West again, taking Elizabeth, the wife, with him, although they are still on bad terms. Elizabeth's unflinching courage during many perils wins John's esteem. He rescues her when she is lost in a sandstorm and they are completely reconciled.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

AN excellent program attraction, which should bring welcome box office results, particularly in localities where the star is a favorite. The plot supplies a liberal mixture of melodrama and romance, starting in Kentucky and switching to the covered wagon route by which the gold-seekers of '49 pursued their perilous way to California.

There is plenty of action right from the beginning, when the hero leaves his bride in their Southern home and goes West in search of fortune. His return, suspicious of his wife's unfaithfulness and the duel in which he disposes of his supposed rival are colorful incidents, well worked up and then comes the long desert journey with its many dangers, during which Elizabeth to a large extent regains her husband's admiration by dint of her unflinching patience and bravery. A very satisfactory climax is attained, when fate intervenes in the shape of a sandstorm. Elizabeth is lost in the blinding gale, sought for and saved by her regretful partner and a happy reconciliation follows.

The story may be a trifle obvious in spots, but on the whole it runs smoothly, develops and retains considerable interest. Director David Solomon has welded the situations neatly together, there are no gaps in the continuity, nor slackening of the action which moves at a fast clip all through the five reels. Also, the heroine wins sympathy from the first, even if she is a bit indiscreet in encouraging the attentions of the philandering cousin who later suffers extermination in a gunfight with the lawful spouse. For Elizabeth has pretty good grounds for believing that her husband, absent for a couple of years, is either dead, or guilty of desertion.

The big scenes are the duel, the burning of John Buckner's home by the owner, when he decides to leave the South and take to the desert trail again, and the furious sandstorm; the latter being filmed in extraordinarily realistic fashion. In fact the photography throughout is of splendid quality, with beautiful exterior views and a wealth of fine lighting effects.

Dustin Farnum plays the role of John Buckner with immense energy and melodramatic force, always keeping within reasonable bounds, despite the temptations such a part offers to overstress the "heroics." Margaret Fielding gives a sincere, appealing performance as Elizabeth, Bruce Gordon is a capable Carter and the support is adequate.

Besides exploiting the covered wagon journey across the desert and the "gold days of '49," you can play up the romantic side of the story dwell on the husband's vengeance, the wife's innocence, and the fact that Southern men resorted to the duelling field, instead of law courts in those times, where their honor was concerned. Dustin Farnum enjoys widespread popularity and should be generously featured in the advertising.

Diana Moreland is aware of her husband's attentions to Marilyn Foster. As he does not reform, she surprises the pair dining at a roadhouse and invites Marilyn to her home. The four go for a boat-ride. Diana has arranged to have the boat start leaking. Threatened with death by drowning, Moreland's affection for Diana reasserts itself and he starts to swim ashore with her. Marilyn, abandoned, is saved by another boat and retires defeated. The Morelands are reconciled.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A VERY entertaining picture, well directed, cleverly acted and handsomely photographed, "Wandering Husbands" possesses universal appeal and should prove a valuable box office asset for all classes of theatres.

It is a domestic drama of the best kind, charged with human interest and culminating in as unique a situation as has ever been filmed. Also, the quality of suspense is highly developed, you cannot anticipate the action at any stage, while here and there a neatly interpolated comedy touch lightens the dramatic stress.

Undoubtedly Director William Beaudine has "done himself proud" by the canny fashion in which he has handled his material. There isn't an inch of "lost motion," as the engineering sharps say, from first to last, the continuity runs as smooth as a mill stream and fast action dominates the entire production.

The two most telling situations are those in which Diana, Moreland's wife, with a male escort, calmly invades the roadhouse where her philandering hubby is dining with the vamp lady, Marilyn Foster; and the big scene, where Moreland in a leaking boat, is called upon to choose between taking his lawful spouse, or "the other woman" to safety. He selects Diana, Marilyn being left to rescue by another hand.

Lila Lee undoubtedly does the best work of her screen career in the role of Diana. She interprets the emotional passages which fall to her share with just the right shade of feeling and pathos, giving an affecting portrayal of the young mother fighting desperately with a woman's weapons for her rights and those of her little child. Lila's husband in real life, James Kirkwood, deserves a lot of credit for his masterly impersonation of the rather disagreeable part of George Moreland.

It's a tough job to win sympathy for a chap who seems to be such an out-and-out cad as the said Moreland, but Mr. Kirkwood does the trick toward the finish, leaving the impression that he wasn't such a bad sort after all.

The picture's title possesses drawing power and you can safely praise the story as one of unusual heart interest, the sort of domestic drama which will please any audience. Play up Lila Lee and James Kirkwood and stress the near tragedy of life which occurs through a husband's love of outside pleasure, as well as the wife's patience and ultimate triumph.

Tom Steele, chief electrician for the Ajax Power Company, goes to register a section of land just thrown open for occupancy by the Government. He falls in love with Nancy Brewster, daughter of the rival company's president. Francis Earle, unsuccessful suitor for Nancy's hand, plots to obtain the land for himself. After many adventures, Tom defeats his enemies and wins Nancy.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

HERE'S a breezy Westerner warranted to get the money wherever Tom Mix is a favorite or fast melodrama appeals to the fans. For once Mr. Mix discards his cowboy outfit and the change is a surprise for his numerous admirers, who will find him just as attractive in straight civilian duds and as skilled a rider as ever, for Tom's favorite steed is still to the front and cuts a prominent figure in the story.

It's a good plot, with plenty of love interest, sensational happenings by flood and field, crisp comedy relief and constructed along original lines. A power plant expert, whose duty is to see that cables and wires are kept in working order, is known as a "trouble shooter," hence the picture's title and job filled by the hero. The said title will probably suggest gunplay to those accustomed to see the star handle a revolver and pick off living targets, but they will not be disappointed nevertheless, for the agile Mr. Mix gives them enough thrills to satisfy the most ardent lover of melodramatic fire.

For instance, there is the episode when hero Tom Steele first sees Nancy while riding along the mountain trail. An avalanche starts, as the rocks begin to fall, Tom urges his horse Tony down a dangerous slope, dismounts swiftly and drags her out of the path of the landslide just in the nick of time.

The love romance doesn't run too smoothly at first, another point in the story's favor, for heroine Nancy is rather disposed to look down upon the rough-and-ready Steele in the beginning of things. It isn't until Tom and she are compelled to spend a stormy night in a shelter hut together that Nancy really appreciates him. This scene also furnishes some amusing comedy, as a result of the girl's amateur efforts to prepare a meal. The race for the county seat to decide the land ownership is packed with exciting incidents and a very satisfactory climax attained.

Artistically the film ranks 100 per cent. The camera offers exceedingly fine views of mountainous locations, with snow effects of impressive beauty.

Tom Mix is your leading advertising campaign asset, but don't forget to state that this picture is one of his best and quite different in theme and handling from any of the star's previous successes. Mr. Mix plays the role of Tom Steele in dashing fashion, ably assisted by Kathleen Key, as heroine, the latter deserving honorable mention in the exploitation. The names of Mike Donlin, Earl Fox, Howard Truesdale and Dolores Rouse also possess drawing power.

Steve McKay	Neal Hart
Ruth Sharp	Catherine Bennett
Black Bart	Ben Corbett
Stevens Mother	Florence Lee

Steve McKay is unjustly sentenced for the killing of Jim Sharp, whose daughter Ruth he loves. Released from prison he proceeds to track down the real criminal, Black Bart, bandit and cattle thief. Steve follows the trail through Montana and the desert edges of New Mexico to Arizona. He makes Bart prisoner, but the latter escapes and kidnaps Ruth. Steve pursues and rescues the girl, Bart falling to death over a cliff. Steve's innocence is proved and the barrier to his marriage with Ruth removed.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS picture is considerably above the standard of the average Western offered through the State Rights market. It is compact, tells a straight story which, once launched, travels right to the goal without a continuity break, swings along at a rapid rate and holds its interest until the final fade-out.

One doesn't expect any feature built around a scenario of hard-riding, fast-fighting life on the Arizona border to be startling original, and "Lawless Men" follows a more or less familiar plot pattern, with an unjustly convicted hero seeking vengeance on a wrong-doer, mapping out a relentless pursuit, trailing his quarry to the bitter end, proving his innocence and winning the girl he loves.

But it's the clever way the plot is developed that counts in establishing its box office value. For, those who watch the story unfold on the screen will be swayed first of all by sympathy for the wrongfully accused hero and later follow his fortunes with straining eyes, as he hits the long trail in search of the actual criminal.

Good direction accounts for much of the alluring glamor surrounding the adventures of hero Steve McKay, nor must credit be withheld from Neal Hart and his associate players, who by virtue of sincere and natural acting make the most melodramatic phases of the film appear convincing. In this connection it is no exaggeration to state that Mr. Hart does some of the best work of his career in the role of McKay, while Catherine Bennett wins all hearts by her appealing portrayal of heroine Ruth. Florence Lee, as Catherine's mother, and Ben Corbett, in the heavy part of bandit Black Bart, give excellent performances.

The initial fight between Steve and Black Bart, in which the latter is worsted and taken prisoner, later escaping, is savagely realistic and the last pursuit, when Bart meets his death, whirls into an absolutely crashing climax. The picture is rich in charming photography, the Western locations, with numerous long shots and close-ups of the cattle country, the herding scenes, etc., being remarkably impressive and satisfying from the artistic standpoint.

In exploiting this feature you are justified in boosting it as a western attraction ranking much above the usual run of its contemporaries. Tell your patrons they may expect thrills galore, swift, sweeping action, a tender heart romance and uniformly good acting. Play up Neal Hart. He has a strong fan-following in certain sections of the country and this film ought to considerably increase the number of his admirers.

'DIZZY DAISY'

This Jack White comedy has all the elements that go to make up a good comedy. The cast includes Louise Fazenda, Lee Moran, Cliff Bowes, Virginia Vance and Sunshine Hart. This gang of funsters run through two reels of mirth that is far above the average comedy.

The story deals with a poor working girl, played by Louise Fazenda, who saves the mass of jewels that were stolen by Lee Moran's band of crooks. The saving of the jewels calls for a chase on land and water and brings about many exciting scenes.

The scene of the story is laid in Palm Beach with many bathing beauties parading the sands. Louise is always funny but her antics at Palm Beach are especially good. The cast is excellent for a short subject and everyone contributes to produce a really good comedy.

A character not listed in the program is Freddy, the trained seal who had an important part in "Galloping Fish." The seal has quite a part in "Dizzy Daisy" and goes through his tricks without a hitch.

This comedy will make a good addition to any program and would make a good lead-off number for a short subject program. It has everything that a comedy should have.

'POSITION WANTED'

Pathe

1 Reel

If you are partial to masquerade balls, heaps of mud, and a chase, "Position Wanted" will appeal to you. Charles Chase as the gentleman in search of a position is almost on the verge of accepting a job when he rescues a fair damsel from drowning and is invited to a masquerade party. He dolls himself up in his officer uniform and starts out but unfortunately he meets his rival who hurls him in a mud puddle. He is forced to go home and dry his clothes. He conceives the idea of dolling up in a fur rug and it is in this outfit that he goes to the party. He has all kinds of escapades with the police but finally saves the family silverware from being stolen by a sneak thief and all ends well.

This is an average one reeler. It has heaps of slap stick and no plot but it contains some laughs. It will make a good program filler.

'LUNCH BRIGADE'

1 Reel

Any of you who have had experience in battling for food in a cafeteria will appreciate this picture. It shows the trials and tribulations of the patron of the familiar "one arm lunch." Cliff Bowes as the owner and chief mechanic of the eating establishment pulls some clever stuff at the expense of his numerous patrons. The rush hour is a scream and when Sid Smith enters the scene the picture reaches the high spots. He is evidently an expert in wending his way through cafeteria traffic, for his many new methods of carrying food from the counter to the chair and his manner of parking his bundles in limited space show inventiveness.

The finale of the picture shows Cliff Bowes mounted on a huge pushball wending his way through a crowded street. The end comes when the ball comes in contact with a bon-fire and explodes.

There is a heap of good stuff in this picture and the action is fast and furious. Your patrons will like it.

'TWO AFTER ONE'

2 Reels

This is a Broadway Comedy starring Billy West. There is nothing unusual about it except the introduction of a rubber football flask which should be patented.

The tale is that of a young man who gazes a few times too often upon the flowing bowl during a bachelor party given to celebrate his wedding next day. A lot of slap stick stunts are pulled on the semi-intebriate, who in turn does the usual things that will at times cause certain types of audiences to laugh.

His friend, the villain, takes advantage of the condition of the bridegroom-to-be and endeavors to inveigle the gal into the holy bonds. But our simple hero sobers up sufficiently to dash off with bride and minister in the time-honored flivver. After the minister says the fatal words standing on the rear of the run-about, one of the newlyweds steps on the gas and he does a back-flip to terra-firma. Then the pair motor on to meet their just matrimonial deserts. It will take a very youthful mind to get a giggle out of "Two After One"

Unbalanced Program Brings Comment

THAT some exhibitors are short-sighted in the matter of choosing programs is evidenced by letters sent out by the Pathe office to its branch managers asking exhibitors to use care in selecting the feature picture to be run on the same program with Chronicles of America, a historical series.

The Chronicles have been made with great care in regards to historic accuracy and educators have been using their influence to have school children attend the theatres showing the pictures, and as a result each showing of the historical series has brought throngs of youngsters to the theatres.

In one specific instance the Chronicles was on the same bill with a picture depicting bootlegging, crime and of a general low moral character. Educators who advise children to patronize the theatre showing the events of American history feel that they cannot continue to do so unless they are assured that the program throughout will be one that can be safely viewed by youngsters.

The following letter has been sent to all Pathe branches by Elmer Pearson, vice president:

"Our attention is again forcibly called to the fact that exhibitors are still very thoughtless at times in their selection of pictures to run on the same program with the 'Chronicles of America'."

"One can very easily understand that the school superintendent, or school authority, who agrees to give an exhibitor his support by announcements, bulletins, etc., to school children and their parents encouraging their attending the theatres has a right to assume that the exhibitor will confine that particular program at least to entirely wholesome subjects.

"One can easily picture the humiliation and consternation, and utter disgust, of the school authority, who, having given such engagement his ardent endorsement, only to find that the exhibitor had been short-sighted enough to book in with 'The Chronicles' a picture of exceedingly doubtful moral tone.

"That exhibitor is doing himself, the industry, and 'The Chronicles' a tremendous injustice and an almost irreparable injury.

"Conversely, since it is so apparent that tremendous harm can thus be done, it should be equally apparent that most exhibitors very badly need the good will and support of all these splendid elements of his community and that so far nothing except 'The Chronicles of America' has been provided to meet this great need.

"We think no sales ought to be made by salesman, booker, or manager for 'The Chronicles of America' without calling exhibitors' attention to the emphatic necessity of exercising extreme care that only other pictures of the highest moral tone be booked."

FORE AND AFT

Jackie Lucas, Pathe's twinkling little star, shows a new stunt in golf. In "The Hollywood Kid" he shows a number of new golfing tricks while wandering about the links. The trick is not patented.

This two reeler featuring Will Rogers is full of good laughable situations, and is up to the standard of Will Rogers always amusing his audience.

The story shows how the small town fellows want to send another Lincoln to represent them. As Alfalfa Doolittle, Will Rogers is shown in the small town general store surrounded by the usual characters who spend most of their time around the village trying to run the town by talk but little laborious energy. It is election time and after considering the various characters of the village the electioneers put up Alfalfa Doolittle as he has never had any scandal connected with his name. He is forced to make a campaigning tour and during this campaign many funny situations arise. After the tour he has to make a speech at the convention. His opponent makes his speech telling the people what they want done and when Rogers has to make his speech his campaign manager is worried as the opponent has left almost nothing for Alfalfa Doolittle to promise. Alfalfa Doolittle gets up and all he promises is rain and the farmers are all for him so he is elected. Alfalfa Doolittle's preparation to go to Washington is a scream, also his arrival. Will Rogers' wit is outstanding in every foot of film and is a big laugh from beginning to end.

This is a good comedy and very apropos at the present time, as the National Convention will be in session soon.

Lloyd Hamilton can get into more trouble than an army of ordinary people. His willingness to help humanity puts him in many peculiar situations and in "Good Morning" he comes in for more than his usual share of trouble. He is a poor, but honest, newsboy trying to get along. He rescues a dog for a fair damsel and is invited to a bazaar. He is called upon to make a speech and while he is preparing for the event his handkerchief becomes ignited from a match and he puts it in his hip pocket. His antics during the speech are very laughable.

During a raffle he wins a huge cake. A small boy, who has been reprimanded for shooting firecrackers, exchanges the candles on the cake for fire crackers and when Lloyd lights the supposed candles there is great excitement.

This picture is up to Hamilton's usual high standard and is filled with laughs from start to finish. You are safe in booking it.

This is a snappy short Western that contains heaps of action and carries a well developed plot. Through mistaken identity, Jack Hatton, is accused of robbing a railway station. He finds that his twin brother has done the job but takes the blame and tries to escape into the mountains. He is captured by a posse and brought back to jail. A mob organizes to form a lynching party but Betty, Jack's sweetheart, learns of it and smuggles a revolver into Jack's cell and he uses it to intimidate the jailor and secure his liberty. A posse chases him but find Jack's brother and kill him. Jack returns and is exonerated.

There is a good fight and some very clever riding in this picture. It is truly Western and full of thrills. You can safely book this one.

'THE CAT'S MEOW'

This Sennett comedy is full of funny incidents and holds interest from the start.

The story is of a girl whose sweetheart is calling for the first time and her parents give him the general "O.O." Harry Langdon, the sweetheart, calls and brings his photographs autographed to the girl. One accidentally slips on the floor and the pet cat happens to be walking by and when it sees the face, curls up its back and spits at it. Several good situations arise at this point. Then the mother, who is a member of the Uplift League leaves to campaign for the uplift of the city.

The girl and her sweetheart go out and she sees a cafe called the "Cat's Meow" and wants to go in. They go to the door and it being in the tenderloin district is filled with the hard characters of the district. This scene fascinates the girl but her sweetheart wants to leave. The check man grabs his hat and coat and goes through his pockets but finding nothing throws it on the floor. A roughneck waiter takes them to a table and this whole sequence is one continuous laugh.

There is a big fight and in trying to protect his sweetheart arrives at the door all banged up and they carry him out on a stretcher. Then the meeting of the Uplift League is shown and as a sample of how rough the tenderloin is these women show Harry Langdon all wrapped up in bandages and plaster casts.

The presiding officer wants someone to clean up this district and the women vote that Harry Langdon should finish what he started so he puts on a policeman's uniform and starts out to clean up the town. Many funny incidents comes up at this point and the story ends showing how all the gangsters were tricked into the police patrol.

This comedy is very entertaining and is a safe bet for any program.

Here is a little picture that is really big. A film that has won the unique distinction of being "different"—the quality so often striven for and seldom attained.

It consists principally of a lucid exposition of how to play the fascinating Chinese mystery pastime—the game of a "thousand intelligences." And wherever there is interest in this new and pleasant form of the "yellow peril," folks will flock to view the film. And where is the community minus its Mah-Jongg set? It is remarkable what a clear conception of the diversion may be gained in seeing the picture.

From title to final fade-out it maintains audience-interest; there is not a single tedious moment. For that element which abhors the thought of learning something about anything, there is a sprightly admixture of comedy. For instance one laugh is handed out by the "cop" who dashes frantically into the fire house to summon the lusty lads to duty. There are all so absorbed in tea-drinking and Mah-Jongg that they ignore even duty's call. And then, if you please, John Law himself, becomes so engrossed in the game, that he lays aside his helmet, loosens his belt, takes a shot of tea and sits in.

"The Mysteries of Mah-Jongg" is a box-office push-over. * * *

When a picture teems with action and can get audiences worked up to a white hot pitch of excitement it is little wonder that its life is unusually long. Paramount's "To the Last Man" is such a film.

Times Square and the 'Sticks' Use Tried and Proved Pictures with Profit

WE all know that if a picture was first released that it still is big, a big production when and if our patrons haven't seen it, it is still a new picture so far as they are concerned," wrote J. C. Stapel, of McBeath and Stapel, of the Victor theatre, Rock Port, Mo., after he had shown the D. W. Griffith feature "Way Down East," the United Artists' release.

"'Way Down East' is an old picture," he went on. "It's a big picture and stood for three days in our town of 1,000. We played it Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and had a larger crowd Saturday than any other of the three. This, you say, is entirely natural. Very true, were it not for this fact—on the same Saturday night we were playing a good picture in another house across the street at ten cents less admission.

"The Exhibitor who hasn't played 'Way Down East' shouldn't 'lay-off' it on account of age. Buy it and then spend the price of film rental in advertising. Those who saw it when new will want to see it again and the more who have seen it the more good it will do you."

Mr. Stapel's statement embraces a moral which is about as strong as one can possibly conceive in proving the merits of Tried and Proved pictures. Rock Port, Missouri, is a small town, and some exhibitors may infer that perhaps in a town of that size an old attraction revived might go over, whereas its success is rather a dubious proposition for the larger cities.

To this one can best reply by taking as an example the very ample illustration of a Times Square theatre only last week, using a picture that first went over the top about eight years ago, and achieving a box-office success that was truly amazing. The picture is, "The Birth of a Nation" and the theatre, the Cameo. The way folks who had seen this picture three or four times, flocked again to enjoy the film was a caution.

There is not only a moral, but a cue for the alert showman who is cudgeling his mind for a policy with which to keep his patrons satisfied during the summer. Tried and Proved Pictures is the answer. The showman that uses this type of proven box-office winners doesn't have to worry about his audience, because the audiences are ready made.

Tried and Proved pictures, those film thoroughbreds which are registered in the "Box-Office Hall of Fame" on the following page, are more than ever being recognized by alert showmen as products which can well be depended upon to "bring home the bacon." The principle is a simple one. What they have done in the past they can do in the present.

'Bavu'

Foreign Intrigue Released by Universal

BRIEF: Bavu, with the power of the mob behind him calls upon the peasantry to revolt. Maschka, humane leader of the people temporarily sways them to the safe side with calm words. Then the home of Prince Markoff is raided—and his daughter, who has known Maschka as her servant, finds him her protector. The rest of the story concerns itself with the desperate struggle for supremacy between Bavu and Maschka, a struggle accompanied by intrigue, mystery and fear.

BAVU," a picture with a mysterious, curiosity provoking title, has made for itself a record that entitles it to a place among the Tried and Proved Pictures. Released last May 7, the total number of contracts made to date on this picture is 3,298.

The picture is still one that can be made to pay. Any number of exploitation ideas can be carried out to advantage in running it. A craze for Russian entertainment has hit the country hard. The remarkable sell-out records of Balieff's "Chauce Souris" and the Moscow Art Theatre give ample proof of this. "Bavu" is Russian entertainment. Play up that angle of it and you'll get the art lovers of your town.

Among the exploitation stunts suggested are the following:

Here's a stunt for the flapper.

Stage a "Bavu" Russian boot party. All flappers who attend a special matinee wearing a pair of Russian boots to be admitted as the guests of Forrest Stanley, the handsome hero of "Bavu."

Here is your chance to hook up with the live wire ladies' shoe salon or bootery in town. Have them take a half or full page in the newspaper announcing the "Bavu" Russian Boot Party with theatre mention, play dates and all star cast prominently mentioned with details of the special party. The shoe shops will fall for this, because it gives them a new angle to clean up their stock of Russian boots. It will prove a novel stunt, and the combination of flapper style and the handsome Stanley will provide a talk creator.

Stage a special "Bavu" night at the local dance places. The idea embraces prizes for the couples appearing in the most authentic Russian costumes. The men to come as Russian officers and the women as Russian peasants, etc. Special Russian music to be played and professionals in native Russian dances. Have dance places play up facts in newspaper advertisements. Whenever possible make "Bavu" the topic of conversation at all times.

A scene from Paramount's Tried and Proved "The Heart Raider," featuring lovely Agnes Ayres.

'Grumpy'

Gardenia Mystery Released by Paramount

BRIEF: Ernest wishes to marry the daughter of "Grumpy" who is a retired lawyer. Ernest is entrusted with a valuable diamond to bring to his firm in London. Jarvis, a crook and rival for the hand of the girl, hears of it. After much intrigue, Jarvis gets the diamond, but by the evidence of a gardenia, he is exposed and caught and Ernest gets the girl after all.

THE play "Grumpy" produced quite a sensation in the New York and London runs and it has lost nothing in William C. De Mille's production of it on the screen. Both the story and the cast are exceptionally good. It is the kind of picture that will go well in almost any type of house since it combines character study with dangerous action. Theodore Roberts, May McAvoy and Conrad Nagel head a cast that do much for the picture and its box office power.

The title "Grumpy" affords excellent opportunity for newspaper teaser campaigns. It is the sort of title to arouse question and interest.

There are innumerable possibilities for tie-ups with local merchants. The plot of the picture deals with the disappearance of a valuable diamond, and the clew to its recovery is a gardenia. These suggest some sort of tie-up with jewelers and florists. The former could perhaps be induced to display unset diamonds in their windows, saying that one of them is a gem similar to the one used in the Paramount picture, "Grumpy," which is coming to the.....Theatre next..... for a.....day's run. The florist could institute a gardenia day, tying it up with your presentation.

While on the subject of gardenias how about having a young woman walk through the principal streets near your theatre and give a gardenia to any person she sees doing a kind deed or who is unusually chivalrous? This will admit the person free to a performance of "Grumpy."

"Grumpy," as is to be expected, is always finding fault with something. This particular morning the coffee does not suit him. How about having a local grocer tie-up this fact with his special brand of coffee, announcing that "Grumpy" in the Paramount picture by that name, which is to be featured at the.....Theatre next..... would have no fault to find with.....coffee?

An interesting lobby display could be arranged with Theodore Roberts as the theme. Roberts is known as the "grand old man of the screen." As this is a crook picture, an idea suggests itself. Mr. Roberts with his ever present magnifying glass and cigar, could be placed over the entrance of your lobby, looking as though he were examining the people as they pass, in search of a clew to the whereabouts of the missing gem.

An interesting lobby array is suggested by the use of large cheap crystal beads strung on long strings and looped from the sides of the marquee so that as they catch the lights, and attract the eye.

'She Loves and Lies'

Serio-Comedy Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Young Marie Callender is left a fortune on condition she marry the man of her choice. This person is a young man very much in need of immediate funds. Disguised as an old woman she extracts his promise to marry her in return for which she gives him the necessary sum of money. She gradually grows younger till she finally reveals herself as a young girl, having ascertained from her husband that he loves her only.

NORMA TALMADGE was made for comedy parts, and probably one of her best is "She Loves and Lies" released June 16, 1923. The three different roles which her impersonations call for allow splendid opportunity for this very popular star to show what she can do. And she does it so satisfactorily that she puts the film over with a bang. Which is precisely the reason why bookings are still plentiful and every wise exhibitor who hasn't yet shown it, is anxious to do so.

Fine clothes, brilliant scenes, rollicking comedy and soft romance are some of the answers to why it has achieved the popularity it has. Assisted by Conway Tearle, Norma Talmadge has made a real wholesome comedy out of this bit. This sort of thing you can take mothers, children, sisters and sweethearts to. Houses with a family patronage will find they have the sort of thing that just hits the spot.

All you need to put it over is some real snappy exploitation. In the first place Norma Talmadge's name should be made as prominent as possible because she is a real drawing card. The lobby can be arranged to create the necessary urge by the use of cut-outs of the two stars and stills showing scenes from the picture.

There are fine possibilities for several tie-ups with beauty shops on hairgoods and cosmetics where the dominating theme would be the effect of make-up to bring out or disguise a woman's charms.

You might also arrange for a ballyhoo getting two girls who look alike and dressing one in becoming clothes fitting to her age, and the other like an elderly lady. They should walk along side by side wearing a sign across the backs of both which reads: "We are both Norma Talmadge. You will understand better after you have been to the.....Theatre and seen 'She Loves and Lies.'"

The scenes in which the actress appears in her elaborate clothes will also make excellent material for women's shop tie-ups. All sorts of interesting displays can be arranged with stills of Miss Talmadge serving as background and fitting catchlines tying-up with the showing at the neighborhood theatre.

Perhaps nothing will attract more quickly than a display of money. Get a batch of stage bills of various denominations and placard the lobby and the outside of the theatre with them. You might also distribute some to the public if you arrange to have the name of the theatre and the picture printed on the reverse side.

Appropriate Music for Motion Pictures

After Twelve Years Experience in Aiding Picture Programs with Appropriate Melody Albert F. Brown Makes Some Suggestions for Better Musical Presentations

IF the "movie" patron of a decade ago should return to the site of the old home town picture house, he surely would exclaim, ungrammatically but truthfully: "How times has changed!"

In place of the "picture palace" that looked like a tie-up with "That Tumble-Down Shack in Athlone," he would find a structure of architectural magnificence and artistic splendor. Instead of nickelodeon, shooting gallery entertainment, he would see picture presentations of plays and poems. And the out-of-tune piano, with the not-so-good musician tearing "Hearts and Flowers" from its vitals, would be conspicuous by its absence. In its place would be an orchestra—small, symphony or grand—or an organ specially constructed for motion picture playhouse requirements.

Formerly confined to the ceremonials of churches, artistry and mechanical ingenuity have combined to elaborate the tonal qualities of the pipe organ with the orchestral and symphonic unification that lend reality to the magic changes that appropriate synchronization exacts.

Audiences are divided into two classes—the conservative and the popular. To please both is no easy task. For the former the organist must be able to select from his library music ranging from the trivial to the heavy classical. The popular element will respond with noisy appreciation to a pretty melody, spiced with a bit of syncopation.

ONE must be blessed with a keen sense of the fitness of things as well as with a sense of humor, in order to render musical interpretations correctly and with as much variety as the circumstance of the picture permits. Yet, one must use care not to be over-zealous or too dramatically correct. The type of picture, and the star must always be considered. A reliable producing company, a good director and a well-known star, when making a dramatic scene will run pretty true to form. Whatever the nature of the musical accompaniment it must be of first class material.

If the picture is a "cat-in-the-bag" affair—then be careful! The production may be poorly made and dramatically ridiculous. The music should be neutral, for active music may create a burlesque effect. The higher the type of patron, the better his judgment and the keener his sense of humor.

With the mass of literature written especially for the organist and musical director; the hundred and one "don't-do's" and "won't-do's" constantly aimed at aspiring organists, my contention is that there are a great many organists who have a dependable knowledge of how a musical program should be laid out and played.

Now I want to take up the matter from this point—the experienced organist. I refer to the lone organist, because what I have to say deals with the every-day house—the small theatre, the first-class community theatre. My intention is not to give a sketch of the details of musical synchronizations and interpretations for mo-

Lobbyology

Music May Make or Mar

MOTION picture entertainment should not consist of so many reels of film—so much celluloid footage, but rather of a carefully selected and blended combination of program units.

The musical program is half the show and must be treated with the respect which it deserves. It may be made an invaluable presentation aid, or may turn a fine feature into a pitiful burlesque.

And the responsibility is with the exhibitor. As a well-balanced program attractively presented will bring him reward, so a slap-dash combination of mediocre picture and hit-or-miss musical accompaniment will surely cause condemnation and loss of patronage.

tion pictures. My intention is to point out to Mr. Exhibitor that he, not his organist, is responsible for the musical part of his program.

I AM speaking of that type theatre where the pictures are the sole presentation and either a small orchestra or lone organist furnish the musical program. There are thousands of this type of theatre; in fact, they constitute the majority in the industry and therefore, the exhibitor who owns and operates a theatre of this type, if he will stop to analyze the situation and consistently stick to the solution, can make decided changes for the improvement of his performance.

Facts are facts, and just as every rule has its exception, so has every exception its rule. Personally, I have been actively engaged in this business for over twelve years, catering to the high-class residential community theatre.

Just as there is a basic principle that applies to the big first-class theatres, with their grand orchestras, soloists, and so forth, and their system of applying quality, sense of balancing and presentation in proper co-ordination, so has the average small exhibitor the same cycling parallel for his rut system.

Just a moment. I know that Mr. Average Exhibitor will say he always balances his program. He can show a weekly, a cartoon, a two-reel slapstick comedy and a rip-roaring seven-reel feature full of action, train wrecks and rough necks and here he will say he has a "show full of pep."

I say the average exhibitor has a rut system.

Mr. Community Exhibitor is showing a very good feature. If, by chance, his short subjects and feature contrast, he smiles and says, "Well, here's a well-balanced show."

THE show starts. First, a weekly; the music follows closely with the usual marches and incidentals. Next the cartoon. Some popular music—properly. By this time, the audience is in pretty good mood, having seen, and heard a diversified program. Mr. Big Exhibitor, at this stage of the program, gives his audience a fine soloist, possibly followed by a scenic, with beautiful orchestral effects. Thus a receptive mood is created for the big feature picture. But Mr. Small Exhibitor has a two-reel comedy to follow his cartoon and the music naturally continues to "jazz it up." And with the usual comedies there is continual sameness in the music.

Then sure enough, Mr. Exhibitor remembers that he has on schedule a serial or some "hit-or-miss" two-reeler. It is on schedule and must be paid for, therefore, must be run. So the natural thing to do, in his estimation, is to tell the operator to squeeze it in somehow before the feature, believing that it will further "pep up" the show." Besides, "the kids must see it."

ALAS, poor patrons! They must sit through another half hour of so-called "pent up" entertainment. The organist, having finished his marches for the weekly, his popular music for the cartoon, his jazz for the comedy, now starts on his second wind for the "rough stuff" in the two-reeler.

By the time the audience is led up to the feature picture, all desire for looking longer at a screen is pretty sadly destroyed and the receptive mood so carefully cultivated is devastated.

The small exhibitor must emulate his big brother and offer as entertainment a "Combination of Diversified Units." He must realize that a show is not constituted by just so many reels, but rather by diversified entertainment units. When this realization is universal then every exhibitor will aid in maintaining the high entertainment level of the first class theatres.

Tudor Castle on Broadway

Hiram Abrams Transforms Criterion Theatre to Haddon Hall For Presentation of "Dorothy Vernon"

BROADWAY-WISE crowds stopped and rubbed their eyes. Yes it was real—they weren't dreaming. There was an Elizabethan mansion on the site so long occupied by the Criterion.

What was it all about? Then the buzzing began. And now the millions from the Battery to the Bronx, from the wilds of Brooklyn to Corona, over in Queens, know that Mary Pickford is playing in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" at the Criterion.

And at ten thousand breakfast and dinner tables they talk of modern magic and of Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists. Hiram Abrams, the magnetic pole around which "stars" revolve.

"Dorothy Vernon" was to open Monday. After the Show Friday night the transformation began. The "Covered Wagon" display which for two years had been familiar to Times Square was demolished. Bit by bit the work proceeded. The scaffolding rose higher and higher. Great mullioned windows were fashioned. All Broadway watched. By show-time Monday night "Dorothy Vernon's" home for the next year or so was completed.

Fifteen men worked for four weeks to mold and cast the Haddon Hall replica. The main electric sign contains 4,000 twenty-five watt lamps and six miles of wiring. The entire theatre front is flooded with the light of twelve searchlights of 1,000 watts each. Under the marquee the walls are illuminated by 300 one hundred watt lamps.

The wig topping the statue of "our Mary" which peers from one of the windows, contains some thirty pounds of human hair. Its curls are seven feet long, and are "permanently waved."

And so it is that Hiram Abrams with a wave of his magician's wand, has brought to Broadway the picturesque Elizabethan country seat built in Derbyshire, England, in the early twelfth century, to house his dramatization of Charles Major's world-read volume "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

THIS is the way Hiram Abrams smiled when he waved the wand which caused the Criterion's transformation. And this is how the theatre looked as "The Covered Wagon" made way for United Artists' "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

Times Square Stunts

Broadway has three exploitation ideas within a distance of three blocks.

"Secrets" is playing at the Astor Theatre, and across the street several stories up is a searchlight directed straight into the lobby. The shaft of brightness is conspicuous through Broadway ether, and directs lots of attention to the production.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" is showing at the Criterion Theatre. The whole front of the house has been changed

She also distributed a Hupmobile load of donated cigarettes at the Marine Hospital—to the accompaniment of clicking cam-

The display was put in at comparatively little expense as a lobby ballyhoo for the Norma Talmadge production. Palms, a foreground of grass and an Arabian costume for the ballyhoo artist helped make it as realistic as possible. It served its purpose, for it drew the curious eyes of movie crowds and helped attract attention to the theatre.

Ice for 'Icebound'

A stunt that drew as big as the picture was put across by Manager Sasseen, Queen Theatre, Galveston, for Paramount's "Icebound."

A three hundred pound cake of ice was frozen around a metal sign carrying the title of the picture and a big red heart. The ice was put in storage nightly at the factory. Daytimes it was displayed as far front in the lobby as the sun would permit. It was on skids, and there was a drip pan underneath.

The ice cost a dollar thirty-five; the sign fifty cents; half a dollar for hauling—total two dollars and thirty-five cents. The front of the lobby was fixed up with the title in cut-out letters painted red and tipped with "ice."

Tax-Payer Tie-Up

"The Uninvited Guest" had been booked into the Lyric several weeks ahead of its actual playing date. It happened, however, that about the time the Minneapolis Journal began a campaign in the city for the reduction of the high municipal taxes and rent in order to relieve the great housing shortage. For greater effectiveness the Journal designated the staggering extra expense to the rent-payer and the tax-payer as "The problem they brought it more forcibly to the attention of the Minneapolis voters without resorting to tedious technicalities, so the editors explained. These articles appeared for many days as a leader down two columns on the front page, always headed in bold black type, "The Uninvited Guest."

The Lyric management immediately brought the booking of Metro's "The Uninvited Guest" into effect, advertising the engagement heavily in all the papers, particularly, the Journal. The attention of the entire city, naturally focused on the campaign of the Journal, was quickly taken advantage of, and the box office receipts of the Lyric for the run went up for a new record as the theatre's patronage, always heavy, more than doubled.

Now You Tell One

The tired businessman brought home tickets for the family to see "The Chechahcos."

"Dad," said the son, who was up-to-the-minute on movie matters, "You're going to see more action for $2.00 than you ever saw before in your life."

"I don't know, son," sighed Pa, wearily. "That's all I paid for my marriage license."

MAKING PICTURE PATRONS OF BOOK WORMS

Just one feature of the Cleveland Public Library tie-up with Universal's "Hunchback." Ina Brevoort Roberts has boosted library attendance and theatre receipts with "Read the Book and See the Picture" to look like a castle of the sixteenth century. Crowds of people stop to look and line up at the box-office.

Right in Times Square is a scene reminiscent of the war. "The Spirit of the U. S. A." has tied-up with the National guard, dough-boys, gun carriages, guns, and other martial paraphernalia is linked interestingly to the picture.

Putting Mabel Normand Over

Recently Mabel Normand made a personal appearance at the State Theatre, Cleveland. The town sat up and took notice. Here are some of the reasons why—in addition to the attractiveness of Miss Normand herself.

The exploiters got up early and convinced the Hupmobile agent of the publicity possibilities attendant upon supplying Mabel with a car and driver during her Cleveland sojourn.

Probably the boys borrowed the car pending the star's arrival—anyhow they dropped in the News-Leader offices long enough to prepare an advertising tie-up with local merchants.

One of the prominent ads was that announcing the arrival of the film favorite and the opening of a shoe shop. The ten citizens suggesting the best slogan for the shop were invited to take luncheon with Mabel at the Hotel Statler. Of course she was the first customer.

Not to play favorites, the publicity promoters sallied over to the Press and arranged for a children's marble shooting contest—Miss Normand was to give the kids a few lessons just to show her versatility.

Somehow or other photographs of this stunt appeared on page one of the Press. And eras and the scratch of reporters' pencils.

Miss Normand's activities were covered from the city room of the papers as well as by the regular motion picture critics. Double space. She met all the city officials, many photographic plates being used during the ceremony.

The Allen Theatre orchestra director journeyed to City Hall in order to present her with the first copy of his first Victor record. Then Mabel spoke to the city via radio, and attended a dinner given her by the City Club.

During their spare moments Exploiters Malaney and Franklyn played kelly pool, and yawned wishes that something might turn up which would really keep them busy for an afternoon.

THE Strand Theatre, Milwaukee, put over Selznick's "Daughters of Today" with an unusual campaign, which was engineered by the combined efforts of Lloyd Willis, special exploitation representative for the picture, and Stan Brown, the theatre manager.

The advertising campaign started, after publicity had hit all the papers, with circus advertisements; posters on 150 street cars; window displays; a striking front at the Strand with flapper heads double life size peeping over a titled banner; and a tie-up with an automobile company which donated a new car and from which two flappers, as "Delegates from the Fraternity of Flirting Flappers," handed out cards, invited the public to "Come on to our party at the Strand Theatre."

The whole town was talking about the picture before the opening, and the picture did, in the first two days, as much business as in the whole week previous.

A TIE-UP with the "want-ad" department of the Canton News was arranged with excellent results when Mary Pickford's "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," was shown at the Grand Opera House, Canton, O. A limited number of tickets were offered as prizes in a mis-spelled word contest. The word appeared among the "want ads." The tie-up brought excellent publicity for the picture in the news columns of the paper.

Other tie-ups arranged for "Dorothy Vernon" with the leading book-store in connection with the Grosset and Dunlap motion picture edition of Charles Major's novel; with the Central News Company at all stands selling newspapers and periodicals and with various dealers in books and stationery.

In the lobby of the Grand Opera House was a general display of 11x14 and 22x28 lobby cards, and a large frame with eighteen stills from the production. A swinging sign announcing the feature was hung under the canopy. In the lithograph campaign twelve twenty-four sheets, twenty-six sheets, 150 one sheets, and a special assortment of dates. This was backed by a liberal display advertising campaign in the newspapers.

THE Eastman Theatre, Rochester, New York, issues a program which contains much of interest in addition to the schedule of diversified entertainment offered. The theatre is the property of the University of Rochester, being a gift to that institution from George Eastman. The profits from the theatre are used for the promotion of the musical interests of the city.

At least half a page in each issue is devoted to the coming attraction. For instance, when "Beau Brummel" was due the next week, the program carried a quarter page picture of Barrymore as the handsome dandy, and filled another quarter page with a brief but fascinating story of the picture and the "Beau" himself. Thus the patrons are apprized of what is offered for the coming week, and their curiosity is whetted by the artful description of the photoplay to be shown.

THE idea of full page co-operative advertisements is gaining favor daily. Over in Sunbury, Pa., the Strand Theatre played "Scaramouche." All Manager Blanchard had to do was to let the folks know when the picture was booked—and as if by magic several page ads appeared in the "Sunbury Daily."

The layout used called for four ads to the page, lots of white space and a slug bearing the title "Scaramouche" in white against black in the center of each ad. It is interesting that, as usual with such co-operation, both the theatre and the advertising merchants reported satisfaction.

SO well did Charlie Morrison, Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., advertise "Fair Week" that the Secretary of the State Fair Association was kept busy explaining that the "Fair" was only one of Charlie's stunts.

Four days before opening all papers carried ads: "Next Week Is Fair Week." Two days before opening Morrison advertised concessions for "Fair Week" and received several replies. A carnival front was put on the theatre and the concessionaires sold hot-dogs, peanuts, popcorn, orangeade and ice cream cones at reduced prices. Balloons and other trophies were given away.

An attention compelling poster cut-out which will make them step into your lobby to see the Selznick film.

BETTY COMPSON
IN A
GRAHAM CUTTS PRODUCTION
WOMAN TO WOMAN

AT the Adams Theatre, Detroit, John Kunsky has booked "The Mysteries of Mah-Jongg" for an indefinite run. Kunsky gave the Arrow picture a big play-up and used many decidedly novel stunts arousing the interest of all those who are "running wild" over the Chinese mystery game.

Among other things Kunsky distributed a large number of heralds which looked surprisingly like the old "no tickce no washee" signs we used to get from Charlie Young. Curiosity was only partially satisfied when the reading was deciphered as the title of the picture—and fully satisfied when the folks flocked to the showhouse to view the film.

* * *

IT is a fact that any moving object attracts instant attention. A little theatre on Murray Hill, New York, makes use of this truth every week or so.

Window display cards are fastened together in threes to form triangles. Cords are attached, and a dozen or more of these three-cornered ads are suspended from the marquee.

There they flutter and sway at the whim of every vagrant breeze, and folks passing through the street cannot help looking. Glances wander from the triangles to the lobby, and their feet follow the direction of their eyes to the box-office.

* * *

SOME corking good advertising copy headed with catch lines, brought plenty of patronage to Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, for recent attractions. Credit goes to Jeffery Lazarus, publicity director of the million dollar showhouse.

Just as an example—one of many—too many to print—the Metropolitan headed one ad: "No Lightship May Leave Its Moorings Until Relieved." Then the copy explained: "This Is 'The Code of the Sea.'" An attention compelling synopsis of the action followed—and after reading the ad folks came down to see the show.

WHEN "The Love Master" played at the Syracuse Strand, Cliff Lewis and Manager Walter McDowell "went to the dogs" for their publicity. Of course you remember that the picture stars "Strongheart."

Cliff made a list of all the dog owners in the city and mailed four thousand of them cards carrying the canine actor's photo and announcing his "personal" appearance in conjunction with the picture. A personal touch was added by having the cards handwritten—not multigraphed or printed.

The papers came through in great style with feature stories and lots of photographs. One of these showed "Strongheart" at table with a waiter serving his breakfast.

* * *

MANAGER BROWNING up at the Olympia in New Haven got some good newspaper stuff over when "George Washington, Jr." played the city that Yale made famous.

It wasn't a new stunt—but it packed 'em in and that's the important part.

The newspapers carried coupons. These and the small sum of one dime—"the tenth part of a dollar," as the spieler used to shout, would admit any kid to a special Saturday morning performance. The "New Haven Union" gave the idea plenty of publicity, and sufficient interest was aroused to bring the youngsters to the box-office in droves.

The kids went home and ballyhooed the show, and the rest of the family came down in the evening. After all, the youngsters are the greatest exploiters of all.

NATIONAL Tie-Up SECTION

WITH all the charm, unfailing appropriateness and adaptability of Nature's own deep sea gems, marvelously retaining their lustre throughout the years, Regent Pearls are indeed "the Flapper's Gift."

REGENT PEARLS are especially attractive to the Flapper generation because they are so surprisingly moderate in price, some of the most favored strands costing but a few dollars—and guaranteed!

The Perfect Flapper Always Insists Upon Regent Pearls

WHAT a tie-up for the alert screen showman! What an opportunity for the local jeweler and department store! Every girl in the land has a longing in her heart for pearls. And a vast majority of those longing hearts are particularly attracted to REGENT PEARLS because they are surprisingly moderate priced.

Every Flapper, to be a "Perfect Flapper," must insist upon REGENT PEARLS because they are the only strands which are of the real debutante type within the financial reach of her "Genuine" demands. That means that a window display of REGENT PEARLS tied up with Colleen Moore's latest creation, "The Perfect Flapper," will be a direct appeal to every girl in your community. HYGIENOL Powder Puff

The Most Sensible Tie-Up With 'The Perfect Flapper'

POWDER Puffs and Rouge are assuredly the flapper's standby. A flapper is really not a flapper at all without them. In fact, study either the title or the picture proper in conjunction with Miss Colleen Moore's latest photoplay, "The Perfect Flapper," and you will be forced to admit that the most sensible window display tie-up in all the list of possibilities is certainly—

HYGIENOL POWDER PUFFS AND DORIN ROUGE

WE will be pleased to send either to you, or any druggist you name, special Hygienol Powder Puff and Dorin Rouge window display material—reading: "The Perfect Flapper" Always Uses Hygienol Powder Puffs and Dorin Rouge.

DJER KISS COMPACTS SELL 'PERFECT FLAPPER'

Free Window Displays for Showmen
Playing Colleen Moore Film

THE mention of the name of Djer-Kiss to ladies has the same effect as the mention of Gillette Safety Razors to men. Both immediately set the mind working on a subject with which it is familiar. That is because the products are constantly brought to the attention of the public through publications that are read by millions, through poster signs, booklets, circulars and myriads of other publicity matter.

However, it is with Djer-Kiss alone that we have to deal here, and when showmen playing the First National Colleen Moore attraction, "Flapper Wives" are told that the Djer-Kiss concern is ready to throw into the breach a generous portion of its advertising budget, in the shape of window displays advertising the Djer-Kiss Two-Fold Compact and the film at the one fell swoop, they may well look hard to see what all the shooting's about.

The Djer-Kiss Two-Fold Compact is a small pocket receptacle containing separate compartments for face powder, rouge and a mirror, so cunningly constructed as to combine utility with the finest kind of artistic workmanship. A display of this unique commodity is well slated to catch the feminine eye and put her in the rarest kind of buying mood. That's one strong selling point. Tied up, however, with a display on "The Perfect Flapper," you have a selling lure which not only sells Djer-Kiss Compacts, but leaves the eternal feminine unsatisfied until she has seen Colleen Moore "do her stuff" in the film at the local theatre.

Exhibitors have in this Djer-Kiss tie-up free exploitation opportunity which should not go unheeded. Other businesses have profited by availing themselves of just this sort of subtle merchandising. The Farmers and Merchants Trust Company, of Greenville, Pa., had enough confidence in the appeal of Djer-Kiss Compact to offer a compact to every new depositor starting an account with five dollars or over. The showman's part in this co-operative plan costs him not a cent. Let him start his shears working at once on the coupon in the Djer-Kiss advertisement.

SHE should worry about gaining weight, when she knows that Melto Reducing Cream will remove the excess avoirdupois without any trouble on her part. One of the stills on "The Perfect Flapper," suitable for a Melto window display.

MINERALAVA WINDOW TIE-UP ON 'PERFECT FLAPPER'

Everyone has learned the value of the merchant tie-up. The better known the product, the better the tie-up.

In this respect the showman playing First National's "The Perfect Flapper," featuring that exquisite flapper of all Flapperdom, Colleen Moore, may consider himself thrice blessed in the opportunity for free window advertising offered him. The Vivaudou Company of New York, who are the distributors of this nationally advertised product, have joined forces with the REVIEW and offer every showman playing the First National attraction free publicity and advertising the value of which over-reaches that which can be computed in sheer dollars and cents.

Mineralava, as well known in the gentleman's barber shop as it is in the lady's beauty parlor has a drawing power that is worth many dollars to the exhibitor enjoying the free exploitation it gives him on "The Perfect Flapper."

There is no question but that a Mineralava window display will have the effect of causing male and female passersby to pause and admire the eye-catching exhibits for which Mineralava displays are generally noted, and that many of these onlookers will want to see Colleen Moore "do her stuff" in "The Perfect Flapper" at the local theatre is only a reasonable conjecture. It will pay the showman to get busy at once with the coupon in the Mineralava ad.

* * *

MANY PICTURESQUE STILLS AVAILABLE TO DEALERS

There are a variety of unique stills of scenes and characters in First National's "The Perfect Flapper" which are available to merchants who are co-operating with exhibitors in the window displays on this picture. One of Colleen Moore in a well-appointed frock offers a good nucleus around which to build catch-lines on the Colleen Moore Perfect Flapper Frock Contest. Others are particularly suitable for Djer-Kiss, Mineralava, Hygienol Puffs, and Pert and Winx displays.

HYGIENOL POWDER PUFF SELLS 'PERFECT FLAPPER'

A window display that is bound to catch the feminine eye and help turn that same eye toward the box-office of the showman playing First National's "The Perfect Flapper" is that offered by the Maurice Levy Company of New York, who sell the famous Hygienol Powder Puff.

The Hygienol concern will be pleased to send to any local druggist display material reading, "The Perfect Flapper Always Uses Hygienol Powder Puffs and Dorin Rouge," a catchline which is sure to produce a favorable effect at the box-office.

Colleen Moore, who plays the principal role in this entertaining film, is a most likely subject as a basis for the tie-up, and the showman playing the film should not fail to heed the opportunity for free high power advertising and publicity this hook-up offers him. He should get in touch immediately with the drug-store owner and point out the mutual profit to be had by stepping aboard the project. The coupon in the Hygienol ad awaits his bidding. The REVIEW will do the rest.

You Attract All Eyes With a Window Display Tie-Up With WINX—

THE eyes of every girl and woman in your community—and certainly the eyes of every single flapper—will be attracted to any window display of WINX and PERT ROUGE, wherein the exploitation link idea with Colleen Moore in "The Perfect Flapper" is used. And where the eyes of the ladies are attracted, you may rest assured that you are indirectly attracting the attention of the male gender.

WINX, and PERT ROUGE—sister products for the boudoir and vanity case of our latest sister, The Flapper. But it doesn't stop there. The "Swimset" Combination vanity box, containing both products, is equally popular with women of every age.

VANITY FAIR PRODUCTS HELP SHOWMEN

Underwear and Hosiery Displays a Big Boost to Colleen Moore Film

COINCIDENT with its broad and intensive plan of dealer helps and campaign of national advertising Vanity Fair Silk Underwear and Hosiery have entered with high enthusiasm into the REVIEW's National Tie-Up project on First National's "The Perfect Flapper."

What this means to the showman playing the Colleen Moore attraction is seen when it is told that the exhibitor receives free exploitation from window displays that are bound to attract no end of attention from feminine passersby.

Vanity Fair products offer an unusually suggestive and appropriate tie-up with so kindred a subject as a flapper picture, and it is easy to estimate the effect of catchy, snappy catch-lines with the object of turning window shoppers into movie patrons.

For one thing, breathes there any daughter of Eve with soul so dead to the alluring finery of sheer silk underwear and hosiery that a display on these much sought products won't stop her dead in her tracks? The answer is obvious. Then, with stills of Colleen Moore attired in Vanity Fair fineries, nothing but a sight of the inimitable Colleen "doing her stuff" in the film will suffice the onlooker.

MINERALAVA helps make "The Perfect Flapper." This still on the Colleen Moore film makes an appropriate pictorial device for adding interest to a Mineralava window display, that will surely mean much to both merchant and showman.

'THE PERFECT FLAPPER' IS HELPLESS WITHOUT PERT

The outdoor exposures of Summer or Fall, Winter or Spring, hold no fears for the girl who uses PERT Rouge. For the delight of PERT is that IT STAYS ON, even in spite of perspiration and constant powdering. That's why the "Perfect Flapper" is actually helpless without it. Ask Them — They'll Tell You.

Pert Rouge Makes Perfect Flappers

THE most pertinent window display tie-up with "The Perfect Flapper" is beyond the question of a doubt the combination display of Pert Rouge and Winx. These two products are the "flappers' delight!"

There is no way in which you can better exploit Colleen Moore's latest and greatest picture than by appealing to all the feminine fans of your community and certainly the best way of doing that is by attracting their attention to the two most prominent whim accessories closest to their hearts.

That means Pert Rouge and Winx Eye Lash Nourishment—a window display that will actually increase your box-office receipts and increase sales for your local merchant. By signing the coupon below you get the benefit of tying up with both products.

PERT AND WINX WINDOWS AID SHOWMEN

ROUGE that gives a velvety touch and rosi-ness that lasts until it is removed with cold cream or soap and water. Rouge that is unaffected by rain, snow, wind or constant powdering. Rouge that has a light, fluffy, cream base which is constantly absorbed by the skin, thus protecting it against the formation of enlarged pores!

Wouldn't a rouge so described, send its appeal straight into the heart of the girl who would be a perfect flapper? We'll say it would, and her name is legion. Such a rouge is the nationally famous Pert Rouge, which has been conscripted as a tie-up partner in connection with window displays that give free exploitation to the exhibitors playing First National's rollicking screen play, "The Perfect Flapper."

But the Ross Company of New York who sell Pert Rouge have not stopped there. The concern also handles the equally famous Winx. Winx has endeared itself to members of the fair sex for its properties that give lustre, length, depth and enchantment to eye lashes. And, oh, how the girlies do love that!

CASH IN ON FLAPPER FROCK CONTEST

ON page 80 of this National Tie-Up Section is a description of a contest on Frances Faire Frocks to be run in connection with beautiful window displays exploiting First National's "The Perfect Flapper."

To the exhibitor with even the tiniest spark of the spirit of showmanship this contest will mean that old dame opportunity is camping on his doorstep. It offers a free exploitation that fairly sparkles and shrieks with the promise of increased profits. No showman can afford to miss this. No real showman will.

In being offered a chance to profit by the high power publicity of Pert and Winx window displays showmen have an opportunity to which they should give immediate heed. One could hardly think of a more appropriate tie-up for "The Perfect Flapper," nor one that more adequately instills a ticket-buying desire on the part of onlookers.

Confirmed and potential flappers are naturally interested in Pert Rouge and Winx eye-lash preparation, for the fact that these are of an unusually durable nature. It makes no difference what the weather conditions are or the climatic temperature, Pert and Winx preparations stay with them. Miss Flapper can even take a dip into the surf and be assured of the even tenure of her complexion when she emerges from the briny.

Showmen would do well to take advantage of this stimulating opportunity. Appropriate stills of Colleen Moore, Flappiest of the Flapper species, will do worlds in turning window shoppers into screen patrons. Need anymore be said? The coupon in the Pert ad and Winx ad will do the trick if the exhibitor signs it and sends it post haste to the REVIEW.

Every Perfect Flapper Essentially Wears Vanity Fair

A Fact Which Makes A Perfect Tie-Up With Vanity Fair Silk Underwear and Hosiery

WE believe that every showman in the film industry will quickly grasp the significance of a window display tie-up with Vanity Fair Silk Underwear and Hosiery. Especially when that tie-up is with a picture dealing with the debutante type of girlhood such as Miss Colleen Moore's newest screen effort of pep and dash, 'The Perfect Flapper.' Especially when you consider that no element of the feminine gender is more particular about her underdressing than our little sister, the modern flapper.

Like Magic

Window displays of Vanity Fair wear attract like magic. There is hardly an exception to the rule of attracting the eye of every woman who passes. And when we say Women we are only telling you the half of it. We assume you know about the other half. The Men! An actual peep for the male gender into the boudoir of milady fair. A glimpse at the silken beauty and hidden charms. An eyeful of attractive delight that grips the attention and points out specifically your play dates and whatever other announcements you may choose to use in co-operation with Vanity Fair dealers.

Up to You

It's now entirely up to you Mr. Exhibitor. As soon as you have booked 'The Perfect Flapper' let us know through the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW on the coupon printed on this page. All merchants handling Vanity Fair Silk Underwear and Hosiery will be notified of your request and the displays will be forwarded either to you or to the dealers, as you choose. We suggest that you work as closely as possible with the Vanity Fair dealers of your community, for they are just as anxious as you are to attract attention to their goods and your motion picture program.

The sheer beauty of these silky things makes good their vaunted description as possessing the "quintessence of charm."

A tastefully arranged window display of these "things she loves to wear" will attract great attention from the passerby. Men and women young and old will look at the pretty things and the pretty girls in the stills.

MELTO REDUCING CREAM AIDS SHOWMEN

Nationally Advertised Product Is Available for Tie-up

MELTO REDUCING CREAM! Remember that name. Can you picture the eye-pulling power of such a name in a merchants' store windows? Can you picture the unusual interest it holds for women of more than ordinary avoirdupois and plumpness?

These are just a few of the amazing selling points of a Melto Reducing Cream window display, which is available to any exhibitor playing the First National Colleen Moore attraction, "The Perfect Flapper." Melto Reducing Cream, nationally advertised in publications of various sorts, broadcasted in thousands of booklets and circulars, offers a promise to women who are concerned with the dimensions of their figures which is irresistible in its appeal. How many such are there is incalculable, but assuredly the number runs into many numerals.

Melto is regarded among members of the fair sex like the rain and the sunshine and the other good things of life. Its benefits are bestowed alike on the just and unjust, the deserving and undeserving. It makes rigorous diet and exercising unnecessary. It makes possible for each girl and woman, young or old, to achieve her ideal of the perfect flapper in her own figure.

This reducing cream is a light, rose-colored, rose-scented cream, with very much the appearance and consistency of a good cold cream. It is applied much the same way as cold cream and is quite as harmless. And, oh, how the women are going to march up to the window displaying Melto, and admire the picture of Colleen Moore, and want to see just how she does her stuff at the local theatre in "The Perfect Flapper."

Showmen booking the First National attraction will do well to heed the call of this tremendous opportunity for free high-power publicity. Aside from the significance of the local display, the exhibitor benefits by having his show linked up with a product that carries the prestige and prominence achieved by thousands and thousands of dollars of national advertising. The beauty of the whole stunt to the exhibitor is that it costs him not a cent to participate in the benefits. The coupon in the Melto ad does the trick for him.

LURE OF PEARLS WILL HELP SELL FILM

Nationally Advertised Regent Pearls Displays for 'Perfect Flapper'

EVERY girl in the land has a longing in her heart for pearls. And a vast majority of those hearts have been attracted to the pictures in newspapers, national publications, and booklets of the warm-toned, moderate-priced Regent Pearls.

This offers the showman playing First National's "The Perfect Flapper," featuring the exquisite flapper of all Flapperdom, Colleen Moore, a unique chance to profit by the tremendous feminine urge for the gems of romance.

There seems to be nothing so alluring to the feminine desire as pearls. Pearls have served as the basis of romance, fiction, adventures into unknown lands and uncharted seas since mankind first learned to value pearls for their beauty and indestructibility.

The house of Albert Lorsch and Company of 37-39 Maiden Lane, New York, will co-operate with exhibitors showing the Colleen Moore attraction by sending the local jeweler, novelty dealer, gift shop, or general store, a window display which shows the Regent Pearls to appealing advantage and also exploits "The Perfect Flapper" by catchlines and pictures of scenes and the principal of the screen story.

This is really an opportunity which no showman should overlook. There is no expense or trouble on the exhibitor's part. He need only clip the coupon in the Regent Pearls' ad, sign it and send it to the REVIEW. This office will do the rest for inflating his box-office receipts.

CIGAR DISPLAYS HELP SELL 'THE PERFECT FLAPPER'

It is commonly known that everywhere in this broad land the flapper basks in the warm spotlight of public interest. It is more commonly known that while the flapper flaps the men smoke—El Producto Cigars.

This is no haphazard statement. The fact that El Producto Cigars are advertised on a principle of merchandising which gives copious space to its merits in newspapers all over the country, in national publications, and through dealer helps of various sorts, infers that the grown-up male portion of our population supports the El Producto smoke in no unmistakable manner.

Therein lies the cue for the showman playing "The Perfect Flapper," the entertaining First National attraction featuring the queen of flappers—Colleen Moore. El Producto will furnish window displays free to dealers in your local community and these displays will be so constructed as to act as a tremendous exploitation device for the film.

The exhibitor playing this film should need little urging to step aboard the project and profit by the opportunity offered him. Many, many smokers, those who buy El Producto cigars as well as those who step into the tobacco shop for any purpose at all will see the window display, and if human nature counts for anything, will want to get more than an eyeful of the Queen of All Flappers "doing her stuff" at your picture house.

So play up the El Producto tie-up. It will get the men. And don't forget that every flapper has a daddy and a sweetheart too.

By tying up with the cigar stores in this fashion you will attract all the male population of your community and arouse an interest in the picture which might otherwise be overlooked. And that means increased patronage at your theatre—increased box-office receipts—more profits.

Elect Town's Perfect Flapper

Free Prizes Offered for Flapper Contest at Your Theatre

IF you could stage a box-office boomer like this for every one of the warm weather weeks, that notorious case of Theatre vs. Thermometer would be thrown out of court for lack of evidence.

Here is a big thought: If picture producers could make their line always as irresistible to the female population as fashion producers make clothes, your theatre thermometer could register zero in winter and 90 degrees Fahrenheit in summer and you would still pack them in 365 days each year. Consider this fact if you doubt it: Women wear fur skins in summer, and show their own skins in winter. Freezing cold and blasting heat mean nothing to them just so long as they are dressed modishly.

This is all by way of making clear to you why First National's picture "The Perfect Flapper" is a perfect attraction for your box-office. It tells the story of the flapper—and when one thinks of a flapper the accompanying idea is clothes—clothes—clothes. That's ninety per cent of the flapper—clothes, fashion.

So we come back to the creator of fashions—especially flapper fashions. For the very greatest of these—the producers of "Frances Faire Frocks" herewith present you with an opportunity to secure a smashing box-office boomer which is yours for the asking.

Absorb every word that follows. The idea is one that will strike straight to the heart of your town—a Perfect Flapper Contest.

The makers of "Frances Faire Frocks" are famous because they produce the very latest vogue in flapper fashions—and spend money lavishly to advertise them nationally. They are live wires. No sooner was the National Tie-Up on "The Perfect Flapper" launched, than they set their designers to work creating a series of new models known as "Colleen Moore Perfect Flapper Frocks." It's a permanent series in their extensive line—name patented and everything. That's fast work for you.

This "Frances Faire" concern belong in the show business. They know how to exploit. So EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW got busy with them, and between us we offer not only exceptionally beautiful window displays of fashion frocks, but a novel, sensational "Perfect Flapper Contest" that is guaranteed to set the whole town talking. And the whole thing costs you nothing.

Here's the plan. You tie-up on "The Perfect Flapper" with a retailer of women's ready-to-wear garments. The dealer may purchase the "Colleen Moore Perfect Flapper Frocks" in series of three, four or six different models as desired. A most elaborate line of window cards, signs and other advertising matter will be furnished. The frocks have been posed in the various characteristic positions of Colleen Moore, and will be so displayed in the tie-up.

THE "Perfect Flapper Contest" consists of three cornered co-operation between the exhibitor, the local dealer and the photographer. The dealer advertises the frocks on exhibition as "Colleen Moore Perfect Flapper Frocks!" Any girl purchasing one is eligible for the contest. The photographer will take her in a characteristic Colleen Moore pose. The one who most closely resembles the stills in the tie-up window and lobby will receive a prize of a very elaborate combination package of Vivaudou toilet requisites, also a photograph of Colleen Moore—autographed. She will be hailed as "The Perfect Flapper" of your town.

To heighten interest and keep it going, the affair has been given national scope. Every girl who is photographed in a Perfect Flapper Frock bought from your local tie-up dealer, has a chance to compete for a National Prize. This consists of a specially imported frock which will be awarded to the girl whose photo is selected by the judges as the best example of the Colleen Moore type of Perfect Flapper.

THE PERFECT FLAPPER

Here she is—Colleen herself. Making herself all beautiful so that she may maintain her reputation as "America's Perfect Flapper." It behooves her to look well to her laurels, because she is going to have a lot of competition. Just wait until the flappers in your town learn of "The Perfect Flapper" contest you are running at your theatre.

DO you see what this stunt does for your theatre? You can play it up along with the dealer as an incentive to arouse the pride of your town. There is a popular flapper in every town. All the friends and relatives of the one in your town will be eager to see her win the honor of being the National Prize Winner.

It sort of puts the town on the map in a new way. "The Town With the Perfect Flapper." Not bad publicity for you in exploiting that one. It will be in every Sunday paper in the country. Some exhibitor is going to be the lucky fellow to get nation-wide publicity for nothing. It may be you. That all depends on just yourself. If you will spend a little time and effort to locate a girl who can "double" for the Colleen Moore type, wear a "Colleen Moore Perfect Flapper Frock," and pose ala Colleen, you can be the proud showman who will present the wonderful imported frock to the winner in your theatre.

Your town's girl wins the title of "America's Perfect Flapper." Is that worth shooting for? Ask yourself three times S-L-O-W. Then work fast. The only condition is that you send all photos of contestants and $1.00 as your entrance fee. That's all. The rest is up to you, the dealer and the photographer.

This is a bare outline of the "Perfect Flapper Contest." Don't fail to clip the coupon and receive full details of this sensational stunt. Get the coupon in with plenty of time to spare. This "Frances Faire" outfit, Hugh A. Schroeder and Company, will give you a tie-up that will make your theatre the talk of the town.

It's a great idea, well planned, well executed. Its possibilities are enormous. It is entirely within the scope of probability that "The Perfect Flapper" contest may assume international scope. Exhibitors and newspapers both here and abroad will make it so. For in this day there is no more widely discussed person than the flapper. Get behind this thing with every ounce of showmanship you possess. It will bring you rich rewards.

OH, GIRLS! THERE'S A 'PERFECT FLAPPER' CONTEST AT THE CITY THEATRE!

Let's go! That's what every flapper in your town will say when you play the First National attraction featuring Colleen Moore. This still will be typical of scenes in every flapper's home, when you announce the contest for "The Perfect Flapper" at your theatre. Every single flapper in your town has enough friends to pack the house from orchestra to roof. Get all the flappers working for you through this contest and your window displays.

Tie-Ups Triumph Everywhere!

Showmen of Twenty States Tell Their Theatres Tale Through Many Windows and Call National Tie-Ups Stupendous Showmanship Success

HALF the nation is awake. The other half is rousing itself from the lethargic sleep induced by protracted use of exploitation methods that were new when navigator Noah anchored the ark on Aaararat. Each day some showmen come to life with a whoop, fling free from precedent and dash madly after the National Tie-Up band wagon which is marching majestically along with flags flying and four brass bands playing "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here."

Coast to Coast Enthusiasm

From Kentucky, the Julep State, comes a hurry-up from Broadway Amusement Enterprises; Donovan Amusement Company in conservative Massachusetts specials in for all tie-ups; requests from the Princess Theatre, in South Dakota, Loew's Bijou, in Alabama, and the Olympia in Connecticut lie side by side.

From the Strand, in Maine, to the Plaza, in California, exhibitors everywhere heartily hail the National Tie-Up idea, and join the throng who are letting tie-up windows talk for their theatres.

Loew's Ohio Theatres are right in line, as is their sister house in Georgia. The Supreme Theatre Circuit of New York, the Strand, in Wisconsin, the Capitol, in Pennsylvania—but why continue. Showmanship slang has given us a word which sums it all up. The National Tie-Up is a WOW!

The Avalanche Grows

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW is laboring mightily to make steady progress toward the absolute perfection of its stupendous showmanship idea. As an avalanche grows greater and gathers impetus in progress, so has this exhibitor service assumed gigantic proportions in a few short weeks.

First there was "Beau Brummel," Warner Brothers cameo picture. And the landslide started! Then came "Recoil," the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan drama of thrills and heart throbs. And the clamor on National Tie-Up became a roar! Followed "The Chechahcos," Associated Exhibitors' Alaskan epic. And the roar reverberated from coast to coast.

This week, First National's "The Perfect

This Week's Windows

ELEVEN national manufacturers are with you this week in a campaign to sell "The Perfect Flapper" through many windows. Their products are known wherever advertisements are read. Take full advantage of this million dollar publicity which you receive free through Exhibitors Trade Review. Clip every coupon. Send them in early and avoid the rush. Read the National Tie-Up Section word for word. If we can improve this exhibitor service tell us how. And gain national publicity through the contest outlined on page eighty.

bulous about National Tie-Ups. It is not a generalization—not a far-fetched, half-baked wheeze. EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW simply presents to showmen, as a part of its exhibitor service, million dollar exploitation—free! That's all. But that's plenty. Plenty to arouse coast to coast comment; plenty to kindle a fire of enthusiasm the flame of which casts new light on motion picture merchandising.

Spare Our Blushes

Again we must force our head to the surface of the congratulatory flood which has engulfed us and splutter a few words of thanks for the appreciative applause which has heartened our efforts.

It would be discourteous and ungrateful to ignore the demands for "Speech!" and "Author!" which emanate from exhibitors in twenty states. So—"unaccustomed as we are to public speaking."

"There isn't much to say, fellows. Deeds are more impressive than words—and we are better doers than talkers. We tried hard—we are trying hard—to give you the best we have—the best you can get—the best obtainable. We're glad you like it. We're glad you boys all got in the parade. Not in the rear ranks, either, but right up front carrying the banner. It's great! Keep it up. We will too. And between us we'll knock 'em dead. That's about all, fellows. We'll buy if you know a place. Thank you." (Prolonged applause.)

Lest You Forget

Remember that we are doing this for you. Remember that you are one of the Big Five: Exhibitor, Producer, EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, National Advertiser and Dealer. And you come first.

You have done your share nobly. Continue to do so. You have ideas, thoughts, suggestions on this plan of ours. Let us have them. Write in and tell us what you think about it all; how we can improve upon the idea; what we, or the producer, or the national manufacturer can do to make the National Tie-Up bigger, or better, or easier for you.

Exhibitors Trade Review,
45 West 45th Street,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I have been reading with much interest the story of the window tie-ups with the various national advertising concerns in conjunction with the exploitation campaign for John Barrymore in "Beau Brummel."

I have arranged a contest with the local Display Men's Association for our date on this big feature, whereby for one week prior to, and also during the engagement of this picture at the Parkway Theatre, they will co-operate with us on giving us window displays.

I am offering fifty dollars ($50.00) in prizes to the three best window displays in this feature, and have the boys all working hard gathering ideas for this event.

I am enclosing you the coupons, and would thank you very much for securing advertising matter from these firms, also any co-operation I may receive from them in this regard.

Madison is the capital of the state of Wisconsin, and the principal stores front around the State Capitol, all of which helps materially. Thanking you for your assistance in putting this picture over to a deserved success, I am,

Sincerely,

(Signed) WALTER D. NEALAND,
General Manager.

And next week Selznick's sensational expose "Missing Daughters"—a picture with a great moral message for the fathers, mothers, brothers and daughters of America. A picture—plus. The Record

That is what has been accomplished for exhibitors by EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW during the brief existence of this plan to publicize picture "Through Many Windows." There is no bunk—no slush—no "banana oil" about it. The record stands—and we stand on the record. A record of accomplishment of which we are pardonably proud. Showmen Urged to Take Advantage of Free Window Publicity

A GAIN the REVIEW calls attention to the superlative free exploitation offered to showmen booking Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's "Recoil," in connection with the window displays of nationally advertised products, displays that help turn thousands of window shoppers into movie patrons. Here they are—listed for the showman's inspection and convenience, leaving him nothing but the trivial detail of clipping the coupon, signing it and sending it to the REVIEW.

What a sparkling array of prestige and good-will builders: Onyx Hosiery, known the country over through intensive advertising in national magazines, in trolley car poster advertising and through a myriad of dealer helps.

Inecto Hair Tint. The most recent vogue in the glorification of woman's crowning glory. Made in every shade so that every woman in your town may have the tint of hair she most admires. Not only the girls who buy, but the girls who see Inecto displays, will want to see Betty Blythe in "Recoil."

Deltah Pearls. What romance, what adventures, are involved in the thought of pearls. The gems of the South Seas have always excited the imagination of human beings. And as for the ladies, well now, could you want a better reason for holding out a cordial welcome to a Deltah Pearl window display?

Another fine drawing card as regards the pulling power of window displays is that sponsored by Chinwah. Chinwah stands for perfumes, powders and cosmetics that have a host of friends. Many of these friends can be your friends when you play "Recoil."

Boncilla Beautifier. As well known in Milady's beauty parlor as in the gentlemen's barber shop. A display that hits both sexes between the eyes at one blow.

Venida Hair Nets. These have a national significance for prestige and selling power that needs little emphasis to impress that point here. Get in on a Venida Window display. It is yours for the mere asking. Then a Nemo Corset tie-up. Can you possibly conceive of a corset display that would make the ladies stop, look and look again! Well hardly, and when that display is sponsored by Nemo, so much more for your profit if you figure in it.

SPARKLING ARRAY OF TIE-UPS FOR 'CHECHAHCOS'

Showmen booking the Associated Exhibitors' wonder picture of Alaska, "Chechahcos," are reminded that a host of sparkling national window display tie-ups are available to give their show free advertising and publicity.

Borden's Condensed Milk, known the world over and the standby of present humanity as well as those hardy pioneers who braved the dangers of ice floes and zero weather, offers excellent co-operation. Zepherized Knit Underwear, Sterno Canned Heat and Thermo Sport Coats offer various appropriate and sales-stimulating displays that should not be overlooked. La Palina Cigars throws into the breach the prestige of its immense national advertising. Last but not least, the Auto Vacuum Ice Cream Freezer display is something no showman should miss. The coupon, if filled out and sent in, will do the trick of earning free displays.

Beats Alaska For Keeping You Cool

THE story of the Klondike—in the land of the Yukon—as told in "Chechahcos," so strongly suggests the idea of keeping cool that it is extremely doubtful if, anywhere in the world, there could be a better exploitation tie-up for you than that you can get from the Auto Vacuum Freezer Company through their

All you have to do is mark the spot in the above coupon and the big co-operative merchandising ball will start rolling. You will then reap the benefit of all the national advertising on the greatest ice cream freezer in the world.

Seven National Advertisers to Back Showmen with Window Displays

SHOWMEN playing the Warner Brothers' screen classic, "Beau Brummel" are reminded that the sparkling array of national window displays tie-ups as effected by EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, are theirs for the asking, without any trouble or expense.

One look at the list of nationally advertised products should convince even the most skeptical what profits there are in store for those who take the initiative in falling in line. For example, in the Glove Industries, seventy-five per cent of the industry selling gloves is a partner to the wide campaign advertising the Warner feature.

The lure of neckwear is eloquently established in the fact that more people buy ties through being attracted to them by appealing window displays than really need them. A human re-action by which the exhibitor naturally profits, when in the same window with a Fashionknit tie, his film is exploited.

"Beau Brummel" attained supreme heights of popularity by reason of the manner in which he wore his clothes. Many years of trade prestige and national advertising stand behind Personality Clothes, a concern whose window displays will feature your program in your community if you will but say the word. Sta-Shape Hats is a trade name that is really a household term in homes where the men don't go actually bareheaded. Cash in on the fact that the people stopping off to admire the Berg product will see an announcement of the presentation of "Beau

Sampson's Dress Jewelry, in a neat artistic display, will help mightily to turn window shoppers into movie patrons. All yours for the asking. Mineralava Clay, as well known in the lady's beauty parlor as it is in the gent's barber shop will add impetus to the interest in "Beau Brummel."

Vivaudou Products, known the country over through advertising in national magazines, window placards, and sign posters, is another great bet for you, in giving you the value of its immense good-will, human interest and selling appeal.

A variety of stills showing scenes from "Beau Brummel" will figure in the different displays. These are of a nature that will so vividly arouse the cupidity of the on-looker that nothing but a showing of the film will satisfy him.

THE MODERN THEATRE

STAGE VIEW OF BROOKLYN MARK STRAND THEATRE

Earle Theatre a Model of Artistic Beauty

Stanley Company's Philadelphia House the Last Word in Structural Symmetry and Utility

THE EARLE THEATRE, one of America's highest developed enterprises in the world, which was opened to the public on Monday evening, March 24, is equipped with everything that human ingenuity could devise for the comfort of patrons. It is one of the handsomest structures in its interior of any building devoted to amusements, and this does not except the famous theatres of the Old World and of the United States.

The Earle maintains a scale of popular prices. After Monday the regular daily schedule of performance will be observed. Performances are continuous from 11 a. m. until 11 p. m.

Visitors to the Earle Theatre enter from Market Street through a wide vestibule finished in Italian marble surmounted by mirrors. The box-office is in black and gold of marble and bronze. Then comes the inner vestibule and then the lobby in which a magnificent crystal and gold chandelier is observed. Some idea of the splendor of this fixture may be obtained when it is stated that it alone cost $10,000.

The lobby proper is a feast for the eyes. It is finished for ten feet up with white Italian marble and surmounting this are mural paintings in panels. Two wide stairways, also of Italian marble, brese violet, lead to the balcony, where there is a marble balustrade overlooking the well into the lobby. The other decorative scheme of this part of the building is green, old gold and old rose, and these colors prevail in every other part of the house.

From the lobby one enters the broad promenade and on the Eleventh street side are two handsome stairways, also in Italian marble, brese violet. It may be said here that this "brese violet" is a marble found only in a certain quarry in Italy. It is extremely rare and every section of the many used in finishing The Earle was imported. It was because of this marble's rarity, preventing shipments regularly, that The Earle's opening was delayed. But lovers of the beautiful will not cavil at the delay when they see this charming, delicate violet, a shade that runs in peculiar veins through each block of marble. With the black marble base of Botticelino marble, the effect will be found inspiring. Nothing like it can be found in this city or in the United States, and outside of Italy there are no amusement edifices that contain so much of this coloring in marble as is to be found at The Earle.

There are two wide stairways leading from the promenade to the promenade under the balcony. These are also of the brese violet kind. There are filtration and drinking fountains of this material, with spigots of gold. The effect of this and the general color scheme of green, old gold and old rose carried out here is truly inspiring.

LEADING to the balcony and gallery, in the rear, are two vomitories and central stairway, also of Italian marble, brese violet. The panels of the vomitories are of especially woven tapestry. These and all other tapestries in the house are the work of Philadelphia mills. The first three rows of balcony seats constitute loges and the chairs are of the latest and most comfortable design, with finely upholstered leather backs and seats. These as well as all other chairs in the theatre are unique in that they are 21 inches wide instead of 18 or 19 inches as for the average theatre seat.

Back of the balcony is the gallery. All seats in the house, including the main floor, are in six tiers, with five aisles. On the side walls of the balcony there are five panels covered with tapestry, making 10 in all, and the tapestry for these cost $1200 each. Back of the gallery are the projection, rewinding and generating rooms. In the projection room, which is

'SONG OF LOVE' PROLOGUE

A clever prologue was arranged by the management of the Rex Theatre, Eugene, Oregon, for First National's "Song of Love." The desert atmosphere was arranged by the use of a drop with a desert scene. A soloist sang several songs with a desert theme. The audience evinced high enthusiasm.

HERE, THERE AND EVERYWHERE, ABOUT THEATRES--NEW AND OLD

A FINE new theatre is now under construction at the corner of West Broad Street and Oakley Avenue in the beautiful west end section of Columbus. The new theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,000, all on one floor. It is to be modern in every respect. The interior of the theatre and the lobby will be artificially decorated; it will be one of the most attractive suburban theatres in central Ohio.

This theatre will be owned by William N. Petrakis, Anthony J. Nelson and managed by Theodore J. Pekras, who is also managing the popular down town theatre—The Dreamland.

The first real outdoor theatre in Kansas City is being constructed by the Barstow school, an institution for girls. At the rear of the school's gymnasium a stage of an amphitheatre will be of stone, 20x30 feet. Stone benches, accommodating 350, will be constructed.

* * *

William F. Code, of the Paramount Theatre, Suburban, Seattle, will be prepared by April 27th, to throw open the new addition to his house which will increase his seating capacity to 650. Extensive lobby alterations, a new marquee, etc., are all a part of the building program that has been going on.

* * *

Sidney, Inc., is soon to have a new motion picture theatre at an early date. It will be modern in every respect.

* * *

The new Star Theatre at Price, Utah, was recently opened to good business.

* * *

Wesley Trout, Enid, Okla., recently installed a Powers 6A machine at Patrick's Theatre, Crescent, Okla., and other equipment to make this theatre well equipped in every respect. Mr. Patrick reports that business is very pleasing.

* * *

Construction work has begun on a new $15,000 picture theatre at Port Neches, Texas.

* * *

C. F. Boyotto has opened his picture theatre at Brownwood, Texas, to a very good business. New equipment has been installed.

The Joyland Theatre, Booneville, Ark., was recently opened by Jeff Davis.

* * *

The new $40,000 Liberty Theatre at North Bend, Ore., is very rapidly nearing completion.

* * *

The Palace Theatre at Chippewa, Wis., after being remodelled, reopened to a very good business with pictures.

* * *

A new motion picture theatre will soon be erected at Warren, Ark. The plans are now being drawn by architect L. Halley. It will be well equipped with the very finest in theatre equipment and modern throughout.

* * *

Work has recently been started on remodeling and enlarging the Ideal Theatre at Auburn, Neb. A new stage will be installed.

* * *

G. T. Littlepage is conducting a picture show at Nash, Okla.

* * *

Improvements to cost about $50,000 will be made in the Grand Opera House at Galveston, Texas, in near future. Improvements in addition to a $15,000 pipe organ, will include a new operating booth, screen, stage settings, new decorations, draperies, carpets, furnishings, lightings and seating capacity of about 1,500.

* * *

S. H. Greenhill has purchased the half interest of his brother, J. R. Greenhill, in the Majestic Theatre at Cainesville, Texas, and will manage the house.

* * *

Improvements in the way of painting, decorating, redraping and carpeting, and the installation of new log seats, costing $1,000, have just been completed on the Portola Theatre, West Seattle. William Hartford is the new house manager.

* * *

Fo-to-sho at Ballineer, Texas, is enlarging its seating capacity to 1000 and is equipped with new machines. The balcony is being enlarged and the lobby made more attractive.

16x30 feet, there are three machines, costing $10,000 each, and, in addition, two spotlights.

On the balcony floor will be found the women's room, furnished in French style—Flor de Peche. Here is every modern equipment that makes for comfort and convenience. There is also an elaborately equipped "First Aid Room," where a nurse is in charge and a nursery room with a matron to look after children is a feature. The men's room is finished in old English walnut. Roomy rest chairs, lounges and other comforts make patrons feel at home. From the balcony one obtains a good view of the immense dome with its beautiful crystal chandelier replete with myriads of glittering glass.

One cannot help but be impressed by the beauty of the auditorium. On the walls are panels of tapestry with many handsome mirrors in old gold frames. The lower portion of the side walls and the arch and standing columns are of brese violet with Belgian blue base. Filter and cooler tanks on this floor are of brese violet. Looking up toward the balcony in the lobby and from the promenade one will see artistic mural paintings. From the floor to the top of the proscenium there are four large marble columns and eight pilasters supporting the arch and the sounding boards of the organ—a Kimball instrument, costing $50,000, and one of the largest organs in the city.

There are four boxes and six proscenium boxes on each side of the stage. Four boxes are on each side on the balcony floor. These are reached by passing down the side aisles of the main floor and up a handsome marble stairway by the boxes or by going up to the balcony and then through the dormitories. These boxes are finished in Italian marble, with panels and rich draperies. All furnishings in the theatre were made by Gimbel Brothers.

The main floor will seat 1800 in chairs which are the latest models for theatrical use. Each seat on this floor and in the balcony and gallery commands an unobstructed view of the stage.

From the auditorium attention will be attracted to the stage. The curtain is of pure asbestos several times the usual thickness and braced to resist any possible fire draft. The curtain is so carefully balanced that it may be lowered quickly in an emergency by the touch of a finger. Back stage there is a system of counterweights, eliminating the use of fly galleries. This scheme is brand new and one that is meeting with approval, although few theatres have adopted it thus far. As a precaution, however, the Earle stage is also equipped with fly galleries.

Flanking the stage are dressing rooms, property rooms and baths, and all these contain the most modern improvements for the comfort of players and so facilitate the handling of properties. The baths are the last word in theatrical convenience. Toward Market street on the left-hand side of the stage is the immense switchboard, the latest Westinghouse "improved." This is unusually elaborate, as is all the mechanical equipment of the house. It is controlled by remote switches which permit of an indefinite number of light cues and changes. Throughout the house there have been arrangements made for the utmost variety in lighting, and various colors and effects are attainable. Every light in the theatre is controlled at this switchboard.

Projection Hints

—By WESLEY TROUT—

DURING some of my recent tours or various picture theatres in cities and small towns I found that the projectionist has been very careless in the matter of properly adjusting the take-up tension. Another thing, in some of the projection rooms I found machines that had very bad "undercut" intermittent and take-up sprockets. If you let your intermittent sprocket become badly undercut this will cause you to tear out sprocket holes and hook and tear the film up so that the next projectionist will have some time in ever pulling it through the machine.

Keep new sprockets on your machines at all times. You can secure a better picture and help save more prints. A too tight take-up will cause you to tear out sprocket holes and also lose the lower loop. Just have enough tension to rewind the reel when it is full, any more than this is very bad. Look at your take-up now and see that it is not too tight, if it is why get busy and adjust it to the proper tension.

* * *

Projection lenses and condensers should be cleaned every day. By keeping your projection lens clean you will secure a much sharper picture and much clearer. By keeping the condensers cleaned and bright you will secure much more light on the screen and the picture will show up much better. Use a soft, clean rag in cleaning your lenses.

The projection lens should be taken apart—that means completely apart—once a month. Clean both sides of the lens and the lens and the outside. Be very careful that you do not let your hand or fingers touch the lens after you have cleaned it, if you do happen to do this you will have to clean it all over again.

A finger mark on a lens will not give you a sharp focus. Reject any lens or condenser that shows the least bit of a tinge of color. A good condenser will show up white when you look through it edgewise. Don't use a condenser with a thick edge.

The gears on a projection machine

should be washed off about once a month. If you happen to have a machine of the uninclosed type, it will gather dirt and oil much faster than the enclosed type. The most practical way I have found to wash machine gears is to have a small, shallow dish or a pan constructed which will fit around the side of the mechanism base, under the gears. With the pan in place, while you run the machine very slowly, flood the gears with kerosene or gasoline from an ordinary squirt can. It, of course, is possible to remove the mechanism from the stand and immerse the whole thing in kerosene, giving the crank several turns while the mechanism is immersed. This will very thoroughly cleanse both the gears, bearings and the frame. If you do this you want to be sure ad stop up the intermittent oil hole so that no kerosene will run into the movement.

A light oil, such as used for oiling the projector bearings, is not suitable for gear lubrication. Automobile cylinder oil, bicycle chain grease, automobile cup grease is very much better to use when you want to lubricate the gears of your machine. I know of some projectionists who have beeswax for lubricating the gears, and I have really found this to be very good myself.

Remember that the oil well of your projector should at least be emptied at the end of one hundred and fifty hours' run.

PROCESS FOR STRENGTHENING AND SAVING FILM

A new method for strengthening film has just reached the market. It consists of a double band of very strong, thin thread which is woven into both edges of the film.

It is specially suited for advertising machines which require a continuous strip of film, which is run for long periods of time. The chief problem of such machines has been to obtain film stock which is strong enough to stand the wear and tear. The thread strengthening process seems to supply this need.

The process can also be used to save old film which would ordinarily be junked.
